ADMINISTRATION SUIT, pending in competent Court—Sale of property forming part of estate, if may be ordered without that Court's leave, upon permission by another Court—Rule of practice.] The Judicial Committee declined to interfere with the rule of practice of the Chief Court of Burma which recognised the power of another Court to grant permission for the sale of property belonging to an estate in respect of which a suit for administration was pending in the Chief Court, though they found it difficult to understand that the legislature could have intended that when a suit for administration of an estate is before a Court competent to entertain it and to order that accounts should be taken in the suit, any other Court should have power to grant permission for the sale of property forming part of the estate. ADOPTION BY HINDU WIDOW—Authority to adopt given by husband, when minor, in a Will—Will registered after executant's death but not by widow, if valid for conferring authority to adopt—Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), ss. 2, 3—Succession Act (X of 1865), definition of "Will" in—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 17, 23, 40, 41.] An owner of property aged 19 years, who was under guardianship and therefore a minor within the definition of sec. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), executed a Will which purported to be a disposition of his property and also conferred a power of adoption on his widow. The Will was after the death of the executant of the document registered not by the widow, the donor of the authority, but by the legatee: Held—That the document did not operate to any effect as a Will, as a disposition of the property or for any other purpose, e.g., as a power to adopt embodied in a Will. Jagannatha Bhoema Deo v. Kunja Behari Deo, L. R. 48 I. A. 483; s. c. 26 C. W. N. 374 (1921), referred to. That though inoperative as a Will, the document might nevertheless constitute a valid authority to adopt, requiring to be registered, under sec. 40 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), by the donor or after his death by the donee of the power, in the manner provided by sec. 41. That in this case the donee of the power having failed to present it for registration within the time allowed by sec. 23, the document was inoperative as an authority to adopt and adoption made by the ALLUVION AND DILUVION—Reg. XI of 1825, s. 2—Customary boundary between estates proved to be channel of river—Shifting of course of river through overflow into it of another river—Custom, if applies in such a case—Hearsay evidence, when admissible to prove custom.] After the existence of a custom for some years has been proved by direct evidence, it can only, as a rule, be shown to be immemorial by hearsay evidence and it is for this reason that such evidence is allowable as an exception to the general rule. Where it was proved that by custom the channel of the intervening river was to be the constant boundary of two estates, whatever changes might take place in the course of the river by encroachment on one side and accretion on the other: Held—That the fact that the shifting of the course of the river was due to the overflow of another river into it did not make any difference in the applicability of the custom. AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS—Discretionary power of trial Court—Circumstances justifying interference by the High Court in revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115, scope of.] The question of amendment of pleadings is a question of discretion with the trial Court and unless the High Court is satisfied that the discretion was exercised on entirely wrong lines or in fact that the trial Court refused a jurisdiction vested in it, it would not be justified in interfering under sec. 115, C. P. C. The extension of jurisdiction under sec. 115 for the correction of errors of law and not merely errors of procedure is not justified and the section should be confined and strictly confined to cases in which there has been material irregularity so far as jurisdiction is concerned and either a failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court or a wrong exercise of such jurisdiction. APPEAL—concl.

Respondent pending appeal—Dismissal of application for setting aside abatement—Effect of abatement of appeal as against one Plaintiff-Respondent, if renders whole appeal incompetent—Application in such circumstances for adding legal representative of deceased Respondent as party, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 22, r. 4, cl. (3), Or. 41, rr. 4, 20 and 33—Or. 41, r. 20, scope of, if overrides provisions of Or. 22—Addition of party—Court's inherent power.] The Plaintiffs jointly sued for recovery of possession of certain lands on declaration of title thereto and obtained a decree for joint possession. The Defendant appealed to the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents died. The Appellant applied after the period of limitation to have the abatement of the appeal as against that Respondent set aside and for substitution of his legal representative. A Rule was issued but it was discharged. Thereupon the Appellant filed an application to have the legal representative of the deceased Respondent added as a party. At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of the appeal: Held—That the appeal was incompetent and could not proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents. Kali Dayal Bhattacharja v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi, 24 C. W. N. 41; s. c. 30 (C. L. J. 217 (1919)), followed. Dharanjit Narain Singh v. Chandreswar Prosad Narain Singh, 11 C. W. N. 504 (1907), referred to. *Chandertangh v. That the provisions of Or. 41, rr. 4, 20 and 33 of the Civil Procedure Code were not applicable, and the Appellant's application to add the legal representative of the deceased Respondent as a party was incompetent. Or. 41, r. 4 is limited to the case of Appellants and does not entitle a person against whom the decree is passed to have it varied in the absence of a person in whose favour it was made. Or. 41, r. 20 is not intended to override the provisions of Or. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code. Pulin Behari Roy v. Mahendra Chandra Ghosal, 34 C. L. J. 405 (1921), referred to. The right obtained by a Respondent when the appeal abates is a valuable right and should not be lightly treated. Held, further—That whatever view might be taken with regard to the inherent power of the Court as contained in Or. 41 of the Civil Procedure Code or outside the Code, the present case was not one in which such power should be exercised. *MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI v. BENGAL CESS ACT (IX of 1880, B. C.), s. 95—Return of cess filed by co-sharer landlord, if admissible in favour of another co-sharer—Bengal Cess Manual, Rule 57.] The effect of sec. 95 of the Cess Act is to prohibit the admissibility of road-cess returns when tendered in favour of the person filing it. Provided this prohibition is not offended against, such a return may be adduced in evidence, if otherwise it is admissible under the Indian Evidence Act, e.g., by or against a third party who was no party to the preparation of the return. Promode Chandra v. Binayak Das, 27 C. W. N. 543 (1922), explained. R. 57 in the Bengal Cess Manual (per Cuning, J.) has not the force of law, and if made under sec. 183 of the Cess Act is ultra vires, and (per Page, J.) cannot be looked at for the purpose of construing sec. 95 of the Act. *SHEIKH INTAZ v. Sec. 102, 103—Re-valuation of holdings without a fresh determination of percentage rate. If ultra vires—Sec. 113—Privy and water tax, assessment of owner for occupier and vice versa—Remedy—Civil action, if maintainable where remedy given by Act not availed of.] Sec. 102 of the Bengal Municipal Act provides that once a percentage on the valuation of holdings at which the rate shall be levied has been fixed it shall remain in force until rescinded or until the Commissioners at a meeting determine some other percentage at which the rate will be levied from the next year. Reading the Act as a whole, it is not required that whenever a fresh valuation is made the Commissioners must hold a meeting to fix the percentage. It is open to them by not holding any meeting to levy at the old rate of percentage on the new valuation. Though it may be business-like, after a valuation has been made, to consider how much money is required and therefore what the percentage rate should be, the omission to do so does not render the preparation of the valuation and rating list null and void. Per Cuming, J.—Where the Municipality erroneously assesses the owner with the water and privy tax where they ought to assess the occupier and vice versa, the aggrieved person has his remedy by application to the Commissioners under sec. 113 of the Act, and he is not entitled to invoke the assistance of the Civil Courts until he has exhausted his remedies which the Act provides. BHUBAN MOHAN BASAK v. BENGAL TENANCY ACT (VII of 1885), ss. 3, cl. (9), 178, sub-sec. (3), cl. (d)—Undivided share in parcel of land, if "holding"—Abandonment—Kabuliyat by tenant in possession of undivided share of lands of a holding—Stipulation in such kabuliyat restraining alienation and reserving right of re-entry by landlord in case of breach of covenant, if contravenes provisions of sec. 178, B. T. Act—Breach of covenant—Landlord's right to re-enter.] B and G jointly held a non-transferable occupancy holding in equal shares and afterwards there was an amicable partition between them. G's share was inherited by N who executed a kabuliyat in favour of the landlord by which the rent was increased for excess area and it was stipulated that N would not be competent to transfer the leasehold lands in any way and in case of transfer the landlord would be entitled to take khas possession of the same. It appeared that undivided portions of lands of the holding were included within this kabuliyat. After N's death the Defendants came into possession of these lands by purchase from P who was the daughter's son of G. Plaintiff thereupon sued the Defendants for khas possession: Held—That N's tenancy did not constitute a holding as defined by the Bengal Tenancy Act, inasmuch as undivided portions of the holding were included within that leasehold, and the sale of that tenancy being of a part of the holding the landlord was not entitled to recover possession on the ground of abandonment of the holding. Held—That though N's tenancy did not constitute a holding still the landlord was entitled to khas possession of the said leasehold lands on the ground of transfer of the same in breach of the covenant contained in N'sBENGAL TENANCY ACT—contd.

kabuliyat which did not contravene the provisions of sec. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and which was valid under that Act. Plaintiff's claim for khas possession was allowed. BAHADUR AHMED MOULAVI v. HEMANTA KUMAR ROY ... 613

50, sub-sec. (2), presumption under—Nature of proof required to be entitled to presumption—Rent receipts for each of the twenty years, if must be produced—Finding arrived at without considering other evidence relating to the wanting years, if can be set aside in second appeal—High Court, if competent to deal upon admitted facts and decide case in second appeal.] For the purpose of the presumption arising under sec. 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in order to prove that a tenant has been holding at a uniform rate of rent for twenty years it is not necessary that he should prove payment of rent for all those years and produce dakhilas for every one of those twenty years. Uniform payment for the wanting years may be proved otherwise, by other proof and from surrounding circumstances. Where the Special Judge arrived at a finding against the tenant merely relying on the dakhilas produced and not considering the oral evidence adduced: Held—That the finding having been arrived at on a misunderstanding of the principle laid down in judicial decisions was liable to be set aside and it was open to the High Court to deal with the case upon the admitted facts and to hold that in view of the circumstances proved in the case the tenants were entitled to the presumption contained in sec. 50, sub-sec. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. GULAM HUSAIN PRADHANIA v. K. S. BONNERJEE ... 520

s. 50 (2), presumption under, if can be rebutted by confirmatory kabuliyats containing agreement to pay rent at an enhanced rate at a future time.] An agreement to pay rent at an enhanced rate at some future time does not constitute a change in the rate of rent under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such an agreement by itself does not rebut the presumption under cl. (2) of the section. The Court refused to grant relief on the basis of the agreement in a suit for enhancement instituted under sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the ground of rise in the prices of staple food crops. JITENDRA NATH ROY v. ..., ss. 102, 103B, 105, 147B—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 35—Whether entry in record-of-rights, presumptive evidence, only in suit between landlord and tenant as such or in all suits.] Sec. 147B of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not in any way limit the operation of sec. 103B of that Act, under which the presumption of correctness of an entry in a finally published record-of-rights arises generally and not merely in suits between landlords and tenants. The record-of-rights being a public record prepared by public officers, appointed under the statutory authority of the Local Government is admissible under sec. 35 of the Evidence Act, and the record being an official act done within the jurisdiction of the public officer, it has a presumptive value of its correctness. *Raj Bahadur Dey v. ..., s. 105—Settlement of fair and equitable rent—Operation of sec. 105, B. T. Act, as to the maintainability of a suit under sec. 105—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court, when to be challenged.] The Defendants-Appellants who were the landlords applied under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for settlement of fair and equitable rent of certain holdings including one held by the Plaintiffs-Respondents which were recorded in the record-of-rights as appertaining to their estate. The issue was raised before the Revenue Officer whether the suits were barred by sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, and was decided in favour of the Appellants, it being held that it was not proved that the Appellants were landlords jointly with others. Some of the Defendants in those suits appealed against the decision of the Revenue Officer and were successful on the ground that the Appellants were landlords jointly with others, but the Plaintiffs-Respondents did not file any appeal. The Plaintiffs-Respondents subsequently brought a suit for declaration that the decree of the Revenue Officer was without jurisdiction and null and void: Held—That the Revenue Officer had jurisdiction to decide whether or not the Appellants when they made the application to him under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, were joint landlords and his decision on this point not having been questioned by the Plaintiffs-Respondents by appeal was final and binding on them. That the decision of a Court in favour of a jurisdictional fact and therefore of its own jurisdiction cannot be impeached collaterally and is conclusive of jurisdiction except against a direct attack. CHAUDHURY UPENDRANANDAN DAS MHA-PATRA v. decided under sec. 105—Settlement record that land rent-paying.—Application by landlord under sec. 105 for settlement of fair and equitable rent decreed ex parte—Suit by tenant for declaration that land lakhuraj—Maintainability of suit—Decree, if can declare decision of Revenue Court not binding.] In the course of settlement proceedings certain holdings were recorded as rent-paying and liable to assessment of rent. Thereafter the landlord applied under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, to have fair and equitable rent settled in respect of these holdings. These proceedings were decided ex parte against the tenants. The landlord then sued the tenants for rent whereupon the latter sued for a declaration that they were lakhirajdars in respect of the lands in suit, that the lands did not appertain to the jama as alleged by the landlord and that the decision of the revenue officer was not binding on them; Held—That the suit was not barred by sec. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act. To attract the operation of sec. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, it is essential to establish that the civil suit had for its object a matter which had already formed the subject of an application under sec. 105. The matter of the Plaintiffs' suit which was for a declaration that the entry in the record-of-rights describing their holding as liable to assessment of rent was wrong was not before the revenue officer or the subject of any application made before him when he decided the case under sec. 105. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hossain, I. L. R. 44 Cal. 783; s. c. 21 C. W. N. 1004 (1916). The decision of the Full Bench* in Purna Chandra Chatterjee v. Narendro Nath Chowdhuri, 29 C. W. N. 755 (F. B.) (1926), is not intended to give such a wide meaning to the words of sec. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, as to lay down that any matter which though not directly the subject-matter of an application before the revenue officer under sec. 105 was indirectly or impliedly involved in the determination of that application should be taken as a matter which was the subject of the application made before the revenue officer. But the Plaintiffs were not entitled to a declaration that the order passed under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, by the revenue officer was not binding upon the Plaintiffs as that was a matter which was the subject of the application before the revenue officer. *PRIYAMRADA DEBI v. the provisions of sec. 147A, Bengal Tenancy Act, cannot in a subsequent suit for rent between the parties be treated as without jurisdiction and a nullity on the ground that the procedure laid down in that section as to the recording of reasons by the Court for being satisfied that the terms of the compromise were such that if embodied in a contract they could be enforced under the Act and that the enhancement was fair and equitable and in accordance with the rule laid down in the Act for the guidance of Courts in increasing rents was not complied with. Such a decree may be assailed in proper proceedings as erroneous but cannot be said to have been passed without jurisdiction and is valid and binding and the landlords are entitled to a decree for rent at the rate settled by the former decree. *Sarjugsharan v. s. 148A—Suit for rent by co-sharer landlord—Purchaser of portion of holding who was recognised by other co-sharers, not made Defendant—Decree against recorded tenants of holding, if rent or money decree.] Where subsequently to the recognition by the 14 as co-sharer landlords of a purchase of a moiety of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the remaining 2 as landlords instituted a suit for rent under sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, making parties Defendants to the suit the original owners of the holding and the 14 as co-sharer landlords but not the purchaser: Held—That the decree obtained in the suit was a rent decree, and the entire holding passed to the purchaser at the sale in execution of the decree and not merely the right, title and interest of the tenant Defendants. To obtain a rent decree the Plaintiff landlord is not required to bring on the record a purchaser of an interest in the holding whom he has not recognised as a tenant. *BAMAPADA SARKAR v. SM. s. 153—Amount of rent annually payable—Decree passed upon finding that the landlord has no co-sharer, if amounts to a decree as to the share of rent payable by the tenant.] The trial Court awarded a decree to the Appellant for the full amount of rent claimed, finding that he had no co-sharer. The first Appellate Court dismissed the Respondents' appeal on the ground that sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was a bar to its maintainability. A single Judge of the High Court on second appeal set aside the decree of the first Appellate Court holding that the appeal to it was competent, because the decree of the trial Court decided a question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant: Held, on appeal under the Letters Patent—That the primary

Court having found that the landlord Appellant had no co-sharer, it had no occasion to decide and in fact it did not decide the question as to the share—the amount of the rent which he was entitled to. ... s. 153—Suit for rent dismissed for misjoinder of parties and absence of separate collection—Appeal, if lies—Second appeal, if lies to High Court when appeal entertained by lower Court was incompetent.; The Plaintiff's suit for his share of rent amounting to less than Rs. 100 was dismissed on the ground of misjoinder of parties and also that there was no separate collection. In appeal this decision was reversed and there was a second appeal to the High Court: Held—That none of the grounds on which the decision of the Court of first instance was arrived at came within the exception to the rule that in a suit for rent below a certain value no appeal lies and an appeal against that decision was incompetent. It is settled law that if the Court of Appeal below entertains an appeal which it has no jurisdiction to do, an appeal will lie from the decrees of that Court. WAJUDDI PRAMANIK v. MD. ... ss. 160, 161—Permanent tenure, nature of tenant's interest—Tenant's duty to protect himself from illegal encroachment—Trespasser acquiring title to lands of tenancy by adverse possession against tenant—Tenant, if may claim abatement of rent against landlord—Stipulation by tenant not to claim abatement of rent, if binds purchaser at rent sale—Failure of landlord to give tenant possession of all land leased, when ground for suspension of rent—Tenancy at lump rental and at a rate per bigha, difference between. The tenant under a permanent and transferable lease held at a fixed rent virtually becomes the proprietor of the surface of the lands subject only to the payment of the stipulated rent, and the lessor and the succeeding landlords have no interest in the lands except in so far as they form a security for the payment of rent. The purchaser of the tenure at a rent sale acquires title to the lands on the terms of the original lease unaffected by any incumbrances created by previous tenants, not being a protected interest within secs. 160, 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The duty of a tenant under such a perpetual tenure is to protect himself against illegal encroachment by others on the lands of which he has exclusive possession. If he fails to do so, he cannot prejudice the landlord's claim for rent. Womesh Chunder Goopie v. Raj Narain Roy, 10 W. R. 15 (1868), referred to. Where a purchaser of such a tenure at a rent sale suffered a person who at the date of the purchase was in adverse possession of some lands of the tenure to remain in such possession for the statutory period: Held—That the purchaser could not claim an abatement of rent against the landlord in respect of the land the possession whereof he lost by his own neglect. The doctrine of suspension of payment of rent, where the tenant has not been put in possession of part of the subject leased, has been applied where the rent was a lump rent for the whole land leased treated as an indivisible subject. It has no application to a case where the stipulated rent is so much per acre or bigha. The Judicial Committee accepted the soundness of the long and consistent body of judicial decisions referred to in the judgment under appeal [Uday Kumar v. Katyani, I. L. R. 49 Cal. 948 (1922)], denying the validity of the argument that a trespasser, being liable to ejectment by the lessor, acquires title by limitation against the lessor as well as the tenant and that when this happens the tenant is entitled to an abatement of rent. Quare—Whether a compromise by a former landlord and the tenant under which the latter stipulated not to apply for abatement on any ground whatever in respect of the area then found on measurement to be in their occupation would necessarily bind a

Where the parties, nevertheless, considered themselves as engaged persons and behaved as such, and after the termination of the divorce proceedings when the woman became a free woman, the man bought her a ring and actually arranged the date on which they were to be married: Held—That the Courts in India properly inferred that there was in law a new promise to marry.

BRITISH PROTECTORATE, definition of—Sovereignty thereof and limitations thereon—Protected State (Swaziland) in South Africa—Semi-sovereignty—Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict., ch. 37), secs. 1, 3 and 11—Acquisition of rights and territory by Crown thereunder—Order in Council and powers thereunder—Acquisition of land by Crown and extinction of native subjects' rights in South African Protected State by such Order—Act of State.] In the general case of a British Protectorate, although the protected country is not a British dominion, its foreign relations are under the exclusive control of the Crown, so that its Government cannot hold direct communication with any other foreign power, nor a foreign power with its Government. Sir Henry Jenkin's definition in "British Rule and Jurisdiction Beyond the Seas" at p. 165 referred to. A Protected State is only a semi-sovereign State. In South Africa the extension of British jurisdiction by Order in Council has at times been carried very far. Such extension may be referred to an exercise of power by an act of State, unchallengeable in any British Court, or it may be attributed to statutory powers given by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act of 1890. The Foreign Jurisdiction Act appears to make the jurisdiction, acquired by the Crown in a protected country, indistinguishable in legal effect from what might be acquired by conquest. The case of the Appellant was that certain lands formed part of an area subject to a concession granted by the former King of the Swazis in 1889 to two Europeans, conferring exclusive right of grazing and agricultural and planting rights over the unoccupied land within the concession for 50 years but it provided that the grantees were in no way to interfere with the rights of the Swazi-King's subjects. The subjects of the Appellant and their predecessors had been for a long time in occupation of portions of the land included within the concession and the first Respondent, who was the manager of a Corporation to whom the grantees had transferred the area including the land in dispute, trespassed on the existing rights of native occupiers and caused them to be ejected from the land they occupied. Swaziland was formerly a protected dependency administered by the South African Republic and was treated as an independent Native State both by the South African Republic and by the British Government. The Convention of 1894 between Great Britain and the South African Republic recognised the latter's right of protection, legislation, jurisdiction and administration over Swaziland and the inhabitants thereof but it guaranteed the grazing and agricultural rights of the natives of Swaziland with a proviso that no law thereafter made was to be in conflict with the rights so guaranteed by the Convention. In 1903 by conquest South African Republic became British territory and Swaziland a British Protectorate. Thereupon the British Crown ordered that the Governor administering Transvaal might exercise all powers and jurisdiction of the Crown and do all things that were lawful. The powers of the Governor were subsequently transferred to the High Commissioner of South Africa. Under an Order in Council of 2nd November 1907, portions of certain lands in Swaziland, the subject of concessions by the paramount Chiefs aforesaid, were set apart and demarcated by the High Commissioner for the exclusive occupation of natives and the remaining portions for being leased to Europeans claiming under such concessions. Under a Proclamation of the High Commissioner of the 16th March 1917 certain area including the land in the Concession of 1899 was proclaimed as Crown land and under a Crown grant of the same date, the High Commissioner granted to the second Respondents (the Corporation) a part of the land now in dispute, as compensation for lands which the Respondents had relinquished in his favour. The Appellant contended that the Crown has no power over Swaziland except those which it had under the Convention aforesaid and those it acquired by the conquest of South Africa. Held—That the limitation in the Convention of 1894 on interference with the rights and laws and customs of natives cannot legally interfere with the subsequent exercise of the sovereign powers of the Crown or invalidate subsequent Orders in Council. The Order in Council of 1907, after providing for power to set apart certain lands, enabled the High Commissioner to acquire the remaining land and to deal with it. The power of the Crown to enable him to do so was exercised either under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act or as an act of State which cannot be questioned in a Court of law. The Crown could not, excepting by statute, deprive itself of freedom to make Orders in Council, even when these are inconsistent with previous order. SORRUZA II v. MILLER ... 961

CALCUTTA RENT ACT (III, B. C. of 1923), s. 2 (c)—“Premises,” if includes fans, lights, &c.—Intention of parties and nature of agreement are the determining factors—Sec. 15—Standardization of rent.] It depends on the intention of the parties and on the nature of the agreement to be gathered from the same whether such things as fans and lights are intended to go with and to form part of the premises or building demised. Held in the circumstances of the case—That the fans and lights which were attached to the part of the building demised and which were intended to be used with it must be taken according to the intention of the parties, to be part of the demised building for the purposes of the Rent Act and that it was open to the Rent Controller to fix a standard rent which comprised these. *D. by landlord to be taken into consideration—Landlord, if includes lessee from landlord in proceedings between lessee and sub-lessee.] The fact that a building consists of several blocks does not take it out of the definition of premises in sec. 2 (c). Under sec. 15 the standard rent is to be fixed on the application by the landlord or the tenant and under proviso (ii) of cl. (c) the Controller shall not increase the rent by more than ten per cent. per annum on the amount expended on the improvement or structural alteration of the premises as provided in sec. 5. This implies that the expenditure to be taken into account must be made by the landlord who applies for standardisation of rent or against whom an application for standardisation has been made. Thus in proceedings for standardisation of the rent of premises which have been sublet at the instance of the sub-lessee the improvement made by the superior landlord cannot be taken into consideration. S. G. P. SINGH v. PROBODH KUMAR DAS ... 308

3. 2, cl. (f), sub-sec. (5), and sec. 15—Standard rent, what is—Tenant, when entitled to the benefit of the Act—Fair and reasonable compensation for use and occupation, basis of.] The standard rent as defined by sec. 2, cl. (f), sub-cl. (1) of the Calcutta Rent Act should be taken to be the rent at which the premises were let out on the 1st of November 1918 with the addition of ten per cent. as provided in the section, in the absence of any application by the landlord to fix it at a higher rent under sec. 15. This is fixed by statute and does not depend upon any action taken before the Rent Controller. Jetha Bhulchand v. Grace, 28 C. W. N. 678 (1922), referred to. A tenant claiming the benefit of sec. 11 of the Act is entitled to it only if he has complied with the two following conditions of sub-sec. (5), viz., firstly, if he has paid all arrears of rent that might be due at the time of the passing of the Act and, secondly, he must pay the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, within the time fixed by the contract, if any, or within the 15th day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable. He does not get three months to pay the rents of the first three months after the commencement of the Act, the second condition applying to them. When the position of a tenant has been reduced to that of a trespasser, he is no longer entitled to the benefit conferred by the Act. W. & T. AVERY, LD. v. KESORAM PODDER ... 152

was the beneficiary, on 30th November 1919, demise the premises to the Defendant for a period of four years to expire on 30th September 1923. The lease contained a covenant—"not to assign, sublet or part with possession of the said premises, or any part thereof without the previous consent in writing of the lessor." The Defendant sublet the upper flat of the premises to a tenant in April 1921 who continued to be in occupation till April 1923. Before the expiry of this lease the Plaintiff gave notice to the Defendant to quit and vacate the premises as the same was required for the use and occupation of the beneficiary and brought this suit for a decree for possession and for mesne profits at Rs. 650 per month till the recovery of possession. The Defendant denied that the premises were required for the use and occupation of the beneficiary and claimed benefit of the Calcutta Rent Act. Buckland, J., found that the Plaintiff did not bona fide require the premises for use and occupation as alleged but allowed the Plaintiff to amend the pleadings in order to raise the issue whether the Defendant could claim the benefit of the Rent Act in view of the said breach of covenant regarding subletting. On the amended pleadings it was found by Ghose, J., on evidence, that the Plaintiff accepted rent with knowledge of the breach in August and September 1923, so that there being waiver of forfeiture the suit was dismissed. Held—That subletting the premises without written consent was a technical breach of covenant but there was complete waiver of the breach by subsequent receipt of rent after the landlord had that knowledge. In those circumstances it could not be said that the tenant failed to perform the conditions of the tenancy. Per Rankin, J.—By the last words of proviso to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the Court could in a proper case take into account breaches of the conditions of the tenancy committed during the course of the original tenancy in granting a decree in ejectment at the termination of the lease. But sub-sec. (1) of sec. 11 does not mean that because a perfectly harmless technical breach was committed in 1921, the Court cannot give the tenant in 1924 the benefit of the Calcutta Rent Act. CALCUTTA RENT ACT—contd.

The position of the applicant on 1st December 1923 was that of a mere trespasser. The fact that the decree in ejectment was passed after the order of the Controller did not make any difference as the decree did not terminate the tenancy but on the other hand decided that the landlord was justified in terminating the tenancy on 15th August 1923. The fact that the order of the Rent Controller did not admit of revision by the President of the Tribunal did not preclude interference with the order in revision by the High Court. SATYA NERANJUN SHAW v. KARNANI INDUSTRIAL BANK 236

s. 18—Point not taken before Controller, if can be tried by the President of the Tribunal—Revision, meaning of—Sec. 24, scope and effect of—Section, if authorises President to start a new case irrespective of what took place before Controller.] When before the Rent Controller no question was raised as to whether the rent was unduly low or not on the 1st November 1918, the President of the Tribunal has no jurisdiction under sec. 18 or sec. 24 of the Rent Act to express his opinion on the point, in the absence of anything to show that the Rent Controller was invited to express his opinion upon that point. It is a wrong application of the word "revision" to say that although the decision of the Rent Controller was not sought for on a particular point it was open to any of the parties by an application for revision to the President of the Tribunal to start a new point altogether and to have his decision. The proper reading of sec. 24 of the Act is that the President of the Tribunal is to follow the procedure laid down in revising a decision of the Controller and not that he can treat the application for revision as a suit irrespective of what was done before the Rent Controller. The section apparently lays down that where there is a decision of the Controller on a particular question, the President in revising that decision may take further evidence and come to his own conclusion having the decision of the Controller before him. , s. 11—Res judicata, as amongst co-Defendants, conditions necessary therefor.—Construction of deed by Court, if necessarily res judicata as between co-Defendants.] Per Mukerji, J.—In order that a decision of a conflict between co-Defendants should operate as res judicata, it is enough that its adjudication was necessary to determine the claim put forward by the Plaintiff whether in the Plaintiff's favour or against him. When a Plaintiff asked for the construction of a deed in order to determine whether the Plaintiff or her heirs had any right to a certain property thereunder, and certain Defendants filed a joint written statement denying her title, and the Court in determining the issue held that the property in question had by the deed been absolutely given to one of the latter: Held, per Curiam.—That the decision was not res judicata as between the co-Defendants. Per Mukerji, J.—The decision was not res judicata as between the co-Defendants in the absence of anything to show that a conflict was raised as between them and such a conflict could not be presumed by reference to the doctrine of constructive res judicata contained in Expl. IV to sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the absence of a conflict as between the co-Defendants, the other Defendants could not appeal against the adverse finding when no relief was given to Plaintiff. decree--Execution--Objection by judgment-debtor's son that property belonged to his mother and not father, and want of legal necessity--Objection regarding substitution of heirs out of time in the suit, if tenable in such application--Limitation for an application under Or. 21, r. 90 if can be saved by purporting to make it under s. 47--Non-service of notice of execution on minor's guardian, if vitiates the execution sale.] An application purporting to be under sec. 47 and Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. Code, was made for setting aside a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The objections that were put forward to bring the application under sec. 47 were that the properties were not liable for the decree inasmuch as they belonged to the mother of the applicant and the decree had been passed not for the debts of the mother but for those of her husband and that the latter had no legal necessity to mortgage the properties, and consequently the properties of the applicant were not liable for the mortgage: Held--That these objections which had been raised and overruled in the suit could hardly be considered as falling under sec. 47, C. P. C. Where an application really came under Or. 21, r. 90, the mere fact that in the application sec. 47 was mentioned would not enable the applicant to save limitation if the application was not filed within 30 days of the sale. Where it was contended in an application under sec. 47 and Or. 21, r. 90 that a final mortgage decree was bad, inasmuch as the judgment-debtor's heirs were not brought on the record within the time allowed by law: Held--That this was not an objection which could be taken either on an application under sec. 47 or in an application under Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. Code. The executing Court was not competent to go behind the decree and enquire into any question challenging the validity of the decree itself. Where no guardian ad litem for a minor judgment-debtor was appointed in the execution proceedings and notice of execution in connection with the issuing of sale proclamation was served upon the minor judgment-debtor: Held—That this only amounted to an irregularity, and this irregularity could not be taken to have vitiated the sale, for non-representation of an infant by a guardian in execution proceedings is not itself a sufficient ground for avoiding an execution sale. *Malkarjan v. In a suit by the latter against the former to set aside the decree on the grounds, first, that the decree had been obtained by fraud, and secondly, that it was beyond the Court's jurisdiction in that it gave the Plaintiffs in that suit more land than he had claimed, the trial Court held that no fraud had been made out and that there was no substance in the other objection. On appeal, the Appellate Court without displacing the finding of the trial Court on the question of fraud remanded the suit for trial on the merits, being of opinion that the decree made in the previous suit was in excess of the Court's jurisdiction, having included land outside the subject-matter of the claim: Held, on further appeal to the High Court—That an appeal lay to the High Court as the order though irregular was in form and substance one made under Or. 41, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code. *Basumati Debi v. That having regard to sec. 163 of the Contract Act the newly allotted shares were "issues" of the pledged shares and recoverable as such. SETH MOTILAL HIRABHAI v. BAI MANI ... 8

The appeal was dismissed. After several applications for execution, the decree-holder made the present application for execution more than 12 years after the date of the decree of the trial Court but within 12 years from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court: Held—That in this case the decree of the trial Court did not merge in the decree of the Appellate Court, as the particular Defendant was not a party to the appeal and as such no order would have been made as against him by the Appellate Court by its decree. Therefore under the provisions of sec. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, the application for execution, made more than 12 years after the decree of the trial Court, was barred as against the said Defendant. *Lake Nath Singh v. P. C., it was not necessary for the representative of the deceased decree-holder nor was it competent for him to apply for substitution in the execution proceedings. It was open to him to apply immediately for carrying on the proceedings in execution of the decree or to apply for fresh execution under Or. 21, r. 16 of the Code. Failing such an application and in the absence of anyone between whom and the surviving decree-holder a rateable distribution could be ordered, the Court acted correctly in allowing the latter who had bid at the execution sale to set off his decretal money against the purchase money, and a suit by the legal representative of the deceased decree-holder under sec. 73 (2) of the Code for a share of the assets was not maintainable, nor was he entitled to any such relief on equitable principles. ... s. 115—Interlocutory order, if may be revised—Irremediable injury—Order and adequate remedy existing.] Per Cuming, J.—The High Court has no power under sec. 155 of the Civil Procedure Code to interfere in revision with an interlocutory order. Per Page, J.—It is well-settled, at any rate in this Court, that the High Court has jurisdiction under the section to revise interlocutory orders passed by Subordinate Courts from which no appeal lies to the High Court. The powers of revision with which the High Court is entrusted should not be restricted. But it is only when irremediable injury would be done and a miscarriage of justice would inevitably issue if the Court held its hand, that the Court ought to intervene in current litigation and disturb the normal progress of a case by revising an interlocutory order passed by a Subordinate Court: Per Cuming, J.—This Court does not interfere as a general rule in revision where the aggrieved party has another and adequate remedy. SALAM CHAND KANNYRAM v. was refused by the trial Court on the ground that Or. 9, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply. On an application to the High Court for revision: Held—That the procedure in Or. 9, r. 4, which applies to suits, did not become applicable to proceedings under Or. 21, r. 90 by force of sec. 141 of the Code. That, in any case, there was nothing to prevent the Petitioner from making, subject to the law of limitation, a fresh application under Or. 21, r. 90, and there being this alternative remedy, the High Court ought not to interfere in revision. Per Cuming, J.—The error of the trial Court, if any, was an error of law and not one calling for revision under sec. 115 of the Code. Per Page, J.—An order dismissing an application to set aside a sale merely on default of appearance of the parties is not appealable under Or. 43, r. 1 (j) of the Code unless that order also confirms the sale within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 92 of the Code. —Suit or application in execution—Or. 34, r. 14, scope of, much more limited than of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).] In a suit brought by M against G, G was allowed an adjournment of trial of the suit, on his creating a charge to secure M's claim in favour of the Registrar, on certain immoveable properties, in which G's wife, the Appellant, had certain interests. In the trial a consent decree was passed on certain terms and the Defendant undertook through his Counsel to obtain consent of the Appellant to the terms. The terms, inter alia, were that the decretal amount would be paid in certain instalments, and the security would continue until fresh security was furnished instead, and on failure to pay three consecutive instalments, the whole of the decretal amount would be payable. "Decree-holders in such case may execute the decree irrespective of their rights against the security and may execute against the security." The Appellant by a letter agreed to the terms of the consent decree. Default was made and the decree-holders applied for execution, inter alia, by sale of the properties secured to the Registrar: Held—On the facts of the case, that G as also the Appellant agreed to the terms of the consent decree and as such the security might be realised by means of execution and no separate suit to enforce the charge was necessary. Held further—That sec. 145 of the Civil Procedure Code did not (the surety not having made herself personally liable) apply to the matter. See Mahalakshen Bai v. Badan Singh, I. L. Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad, I. L. R. 39 All. 325 (1916), but where the security is given to the Court itself, a fresh suit is not necessary, irrespective of sec. 145. In view of the fact that sec. 47, C. P. C., makes it difficult as regards a judgment-debtor to insist upon or permit a separate suit for the enforcement of the security, it seems that it is open to a person giving security to waive the necessity for a suit subject at least to the remarks made by Lord Davey in the case of *Khiraj Mal v. That the contract must be stamped not only as a petition but also with a further stamp appropriate to a contract of guarantee as provided by the Stamp Act and under sec. 35 of the Stamp Act the instrument in question ought not to have been received in evidence or acted upon unless it was duly stamped; but it, having been admitted in evidence, fell within the ambit of sec. 36 and could not be called in question. *JOYMAN BEWA v. Generally if a process-server goes to a place on a day and hour when he may expect to find the Defendant there and does all that is required under the section, if he cannot find the Defendant (and could not find him whatever further steps he took by reason of his absence), then it is not necessary for him to repeat his attempts to make personal service. BALDEODAS LOHEA v. The word “certify,” as used in cl. 1 of r. 2, Or. 21, is synonymous with the word “inform” as used in cl. 2 of that rule. It is not therefore incumbent upon the decree-holder to certify payment by making an application and as he is not required to make an application the residuary article of the Limitation Act (181) does not apply. In order to certify payment it is enough that the decree-holder mentions the fact of such payment in the application for execution of the decree in respect of the balance. The observations in Baley Mahomed Shahy v. Aljanmal, 35 C. L. J. 71 (1921), are obiter dicta. The principle of the law of limitation as laid down in Art. 75 of the Limitation Act has been applied to the case of instalment decrees and it is well-settled that waiver being allowed under cl. 7 of Art. 182, Limitation Act, time runs from the date of the actual default. In an instalment decree in which it is provided that in default of one instalment the whole decretal amount would be recoverable, the right which accrues to the decree-holder from time to time from non-payment of any instalment may be waived by receipt of default instalments which the judgment-debtor neglected to pay in time JALIM CHAND PATWARI v. The names of the parties required by Or. 21, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is for purposes of identification only. Upon an application for execution by one of several decree-holders under Or. 21, r. 15, it is for the Court to pass proper orders to protect the interests of the other decree-holders. contemplated by r. 103 is a suit by a person who is kept out of possession of the property purchased in execution of the decree and claiming possession under his auction-purchase. It does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person apart from his character as auction-purchaser may have against the Defendant. If a suit is not brought under r. 103 within the statutory period the right to bring a suit to establish the claim of the Plaintiff as auction-purchaser for possession of the property is lost. Or. 41, r. 14 read with Or. 5, r. 12 does not mean that the service must be on the minor himself and not on the guardian ad litem. CONTRACT—Sterling drafts on London, contract to buy from Bank—Custom of the Exchange Banks in Calcutta—Option to grant an extension after due date on a penalty or to declare the contract cancelled—Suit for difference in exchange—Contract, if validly cancelled according to such custom—Cancellation, when effective—Mistake—Surrounding circumstances.] The Plaintiff firm contracted to buy on demand sterling drafts on London from the Defendant Bank for £5,000, £2,500 to be delivered in July 1920 and the balance £2,500 in August 1920. The Plaintiff firm failed to pay and take delivery on due date. According to the custom of the Exchange Banks in Calcutta the Defendant Bank had the option either of granting extension after due date on payment of a penalty or to declare the contract cancelled. The Plaintiff applied for extension of the due date of delivery under the said contract which was not granted and the Defendant Bank exercised the alternative option and declared the July portion of the contract cancelled on 7th September 1920. The August portion of the said contract was likewise cancelled on 30th November 1920 but made operative from 30th November with a view to give the Plaintiff firm the benefit of the rate of exchange. The Defendant Bank by letter, dated 30th November 1920, gave notice to the Plaintiff firm of the cancellation of the August portion but by inadvertence in the said letter referred to the July portion as having been also cancelled on the said date, although the said portion was in fact cancelled as aforesaid on 7th September 1920. The Plaintiff firm accepted cancellation of both portions of the said contract as on 30th November 1920 in terms of the said letter and claimed Rs. 7,124 in respect of the entire contract on the basis of the note of exchange prevalent on 30th November. The Defendant Bank pleaded custom as to their right of cancellation at any time after the due date and contended that in exercise of the said right the July and August portions were cancelled on 7th September and 30th November respectively and that the July portion was not cancelled on 30th November and the reference to the same in the letter of that date was a mistake and did not alter the fact of cancellation of the said portion as on 7th September 1920: Held—That the Defendant Bank had proved the existence of the custom and practice of the Exchange Banks in Calcutta, namely, that the Bank had an option to grant to the buyers of sterling drafts an extension of time after due date on a penalty or to declare the contract cancelled. That the Defendant Bank had acted in accordance with the said custom and that in exercise of the option given to them by such custom cancelled the July and August portions of the contract on 7th September and 30th November respectively. That the reference to the July portion in the letter of 30th November was a slip or mistake on the part of the writer and that great hardship amounting to injustice would be inflicted on the Defendant Bank by holding them strictly to their letter of 30th November and that the surrounding circumstances were all in favour of the Defendant Bank. Webster v. enforcement of, by third party—Contract between durputnidar and seputnidar that the latter will pay durputni rent to putnidar out of seputni rent payable to durputnidar, if may be enforced by putnidar—Equitable rule, applicability of, where third person is cestui que trust.] As a general rule a contract cannot be enforced except by a party to the contract. That rule, however, is subject to this exception: If the contract, although in form it is with A, is intended to secure a benefit to B so that B is entitled to say he has a beneficial right as cestui que trust under that contract, then B is entitled to enforce the contract in a Court of equity. A mere contract between two parties that one of them shall pay a certain sum to a third person not a party to the contract will not make that person a cestui que trust. Where there was a contract between a durputnidar and a seputnidar that the latter would pay the durputni rent to the putnidar out of the seputni rent payable to the durputnidar and the seputnidar paid the durputni rent to the putnidar for a number of years: Held, in a suit by the putnidar against the seputnidar for the durputni rent, that the instrument creating the seputni was not executed for the benefit of the Plaintiff in any sense and so far as the Plaintiff was concerned the only effect of the instrument was that the seputnidar agreed with the durputnidar to pay a portion of the rent due under the seputni to the Plaintiff as a nominee of the durputnidar, and as such of managing agency to Limited Company for a fixed period—Difference between partners of firm of managing agents resulting in deadlock in business—Circumstances justifying dismissal of managing agent before termination of stipulated period—Insubordination and misconduct of managing agent, what constitutes.] The Defendant Company, a limited concern, entered into an agreement with a firm of which the Plaintiff and the second Defendant were the partners whereby the said firm were appointed managing agents for a fixed period of years. Under the agreement, subject to the supervision and control of the directors the managing agents were to manage, conduct and carry on the business of the Company both at the head office and at all branches and agencies and were to have and possess all powers, authorities and discretions necessary for or incidental to the purpose. Before the termination of the period of contract difference arose between the Plaintiff and the second Defendant and the latter cancelled the power-of-attorney which he had given to the Plaintiff whereby the Plaintiff was conducting the affairs of the Company and those of the firm of managing agents and served him with a notice of dissolution of partnership and the Plaintiff in his turn cancelled the power-of-attorney in favour of the second Defendant, removed certain books and documents from the office which, in consequence of the situation created, was closed. The directors thereupon passed a resolution whereby the second Defendant was appointed the managing agent of the Company. The Plaintiff sued to recover damages for the alleged breach of the agreement whereby the managing agency was created alleging that the second Defendant had acted in concert and collusion with the directors. The Defendant Company amongst other alleged specific charges of mismanagement and insubordination on the part of the Plaintiff. Held—That the Plaintiff failed to prove the second Defendant's collusion with the directors and the Company also failed to prove misconduct and insubordination on the part of the Plaintiff; but having regard to the state of affairs which had arisen it was necessary to appoint somebody as managing agent and the Defendant Company were justified in putting an end to the managing agency agreement and the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages from the Company. Breach—Time, if of essence of contract—Party entitled to rescind after expiry of time but continuing to treat contract as subsisting, if commits a breach by treating contract later on as rescinded on ground of the other party's default.] Shortly after the war broke out, the Defendant Company agreed to supply to the Plaintiff 50 railway wagons for an agreed price, the terms of payment being that the Plaintiff should pay a third of the price on the order being given, another third when the underframes of the wagons should be wheeled and the balance on delivery. The Plaintiff did not pay the second instalment when, the underframes having been wheeled, the Defendant Company asked for its payment; nevertheless the Defendant Company delivered 8 wagons and these were received by the Plaintiff. The Defendant Company thereafter asked for but failed to obtain from the Plaintiff the second instalment of the contract price and the price of the 8 wagons delivered, and then refused to perform the rest of the contract unless the balance of the contract price was first paid to them. Thereafter the Plaintiff sent to the Defendant Company a cheque to cover the second instalment and asked for the delivery of the remaining 42 wagons, the third instalment of payment to be made upon such delivery. Held—That in the circumstances of the case, the intention of the parties when the contract was made was that time should be of the essence of the contract, as to the time when the three instalments of the contract price were to be paid; and therefore when the second instalment was not paid by the Plaintiff, the Defendant Company might rescind the contract; but by delivering 8 of the wagons after the default they treated the contract as subsisting. The Defendant Company could not insist on the payment on delivery of the price of the 8 wagons only, and they committed a breach of the contract in refusing to deliver the remaining wagons without payment of the balance of the contract price. *BURN & CO., LD. v. CONTRACT ACT (IX of 1872), ss. 68, 70—Contribution, suit for—Duty to contribute, arising from equity, apart from statute—"Interested," meaning of, in sec. 68—"Benefited," meaning of, in sec. 70—

Court's duty to decide all matters finally in suit for contribution—Purchaser of a share of a tenure, if "bound" to contribute towards arrears of rent accrued due before purchase—A co-sharer, if one "interested" in paying up the whole rent—Rent, a first charge—Liability, if must be personal—Liability for rent as between mortgagor and mortgagee.] The Plaintiff and the Defendants except Defendant No. 12 were the owners of a permanent tenure. Defendant No. 12 purchased the shares of Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 and was also the mortgagee of the share of Defendant No. 1. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlords the property was put up to sale and was purchased by Defendant No. 12. The Plaintiff thereupon deposited the decretal money together with the usual compensation and had the sale set aside. The Plaintiff brought a suit claiming contribution from the several Defendants in proportion to their respective shares and contended that the Defendant No. 12 was liable to contribute to the extent of the shares in which he was interested, viz., the shares of Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 acquired by purchase and the share of Defendant No. 1 of which he was the mortgagee. Held—That the liability to contribution is not entirely contained in secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act although generally speaking a large number of cases do come within the purview of these two sections. The Court as a Court of justice, equity and good conscience may, in certain circumstances, although such circumstances do not bring the case strictly within the purview of these two sections, allow contribution if the claim appears to be either just or equitable. That both secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act were applicable to the facts of the present case so far as regards the shares which were purchased by Defendant No. 12. That the Plaintiff was interested in the payment of the money within the meaning of sec. 69 although he was also liable to pay a portion of the money. That the Defendant No. 12 was bound to pay the money although he was not a party to the decree for rent and the period for which the rent was claimed was previous to his purchase, inasmuch as that rent was charged on the property purchased by him, and the section does not require the liability to be a personal liability. That the argument that the Defendant No. 12 was not benefited because in the result he lost the benefit of his purchase of the entire property and was left only with the share which he held before was fallacious. The character in which the Plaintiff sued the Defendants and the character in which the Defendant No. 12 was charged with the liability was the character of co-sharers as between themselves and as the property was saved by the deposit the Defendant No. 12 was benefited to the extent of his share. In a suit for contribution the respective liabilities of the parties should be ascertained and determined once for all and nothing should be left undetermined which may lead to further litigation for the ascertainment of such liability between two or more of the parties to the suit. The Court below therefore erred in making Defendants Nos. 1 and 12 jointly liable in respect of the share mortgaged by the former to the latter. The liability for the rent of this share being primarily Defendant No. 1's the decree in regard to this share should be against Defendant No. 1 alone. REGISTERED JESSORE LOAN CO v. ss. 83, 95, 121—Shares, transfer of, by delivery of certificates and blank transfers signed by registered holder, if effective—Choses in action—Goods—Sale of unascertained goods, when complete—Right to rescind sale, when arises—Vendor, when has lien in shares—Bombay Stock Exchange Rule No. C, true meaning and effect of.] The Plaintiff, a certified share-broker, sold on the Bombay Stock Exchange to D. 1 a certain number of shares of a Company, and in order to make delivery acquired the requisite number of shares in the market from various brokers taking from the latter blank transfers, signed by the registered holders along with the corresponding certificates. The certificates and blank transfers were handed to D. 1, who purported to pay by a cheque which, however, was dishonoured. The blank transfers and certificates were then handed over in succession to two other persons, D. 2, D. 3, on certain propositions as to raising money. In a suit by Plaintiff against D. 1, D. 2 and D. 3 for return of the certificates and blank transfers or otherwise for damages: Held—That though full property in shares in a Company is only in the registered holder, the title to get on the register consists in the possession of certificates together with transfers signed by the registered holder and these constitute choses in action, which, by the terms of the Contract Act, are goods. These goods which were not ascertained at the date of the contract became ascertained when the certificates and blank transfers were handed over to D. 1 and were accepted by him and thereupon, under sec. 83 of the Contract Act, the sale became complete and the property passed. Thenceforward Plaintiff could only sue D. 1 on the cheque or for the price of the shares unpaid in respect of the cheque which was dishonoured. Having parted with possession, Plaintiff had under sec. 95 of the Act no lien in the goods and could not sue the subsequent transferees for delivery of the shares. Rule C of the Bombay Stock Exchange cannot be read into the contract of sale as an express stipulation to rescind within the meaning of sec. 121 of the Act. DAMAGES--consid.

W. N. 537 (1907), referred to. In a suit brought maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, the Defendant obtained a temporary injunction which resulted in damages to the Plaintiff's trade. Held--That the proceedings having formed part of a suit which itself was affected by malice in its entirety, the Defendant was answerable for such damages, apart from the questions whether a cause of action existed independently for these proceedings. A suit lies for damages caused by wrongful interference with the property rights of the Plaintiff resulting from a proceeding in Court brought maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause. Mohini Mohan v. No inference that such a suit does not lie can be reasonably drawn from the provisions of sec. 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, nor is the existence of Art. 42 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act in itself an argument that a suit is maintainable for damages for an injury caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained for a Limitation Act cannot create a cause of action, if it does not already exist independently. The suit in so far as it related to detention of the goods by the Collector was governed by Art. 36 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 48, since the detention was not by the Defendant but by the Collector who could not be looked upon as the Defendant's agent. In so far as the cause of action might be slander of title or slander of goods, Art. 36 applied and not Art. 25. ALBERT BONNAN v. IMPERIAL TOBACCO CO. ... 465

Held, upon the evidence—That the trusts of the Fire Temple at Rangoon were intended for the professing members of the Parsi community, i.e., racial Parsis or people deemed after a long lapse of ages to be racial Parsis, professing the Zoroastrian religion. As regards the racial claim, maternity is of no importance; and a person whose mother was a Parsi, though actually and validly converted and initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, was not entitled, as of right, to use the Temple or to attend or to participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein. Such a person entering into the Temple may be excluded or excluded from the Temple as a trespasser by the persons in possession, viz., the trustees of the Temple. But a beneficiary or two or three or more of them cannot sue such a person as a trespasser or claim an injunction to restrain the entry by such a person into the Temple on the mere ground that such entry wounds their religious feelings and desecrates the Temple. The beneficiaries as such may not be allowed to recover damages for or restrain such entry as trespasses unless, at least, they establish that the intrusion of such a person is so repugnant to their habits of mind that the entrance of such a person must entail their own departure, so that it is as it were trespass to the person. *Anandray Bhikaji Phadke v. Cases of application by trustees of the funds of a public or charitable trust for persons not objects of the trust stand on a different footing from cases where the benefits of a trust created only for rendering some convenience or service are extended by the trustees to persons other than the lawful recipients thereof. In the former class of cases the act of the trustees will be a malversation, for only those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require and if there be a surplus it must be left to the Courts to make a cy-pres application of it; in the latter, the trustees are not bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share in the benefits or to treat them as trespassers. *Rex v. certified copy of his deposition was put in by the Plaintiff at the time of the argument and admitted in evidence. On behalf of the Plaintiff a kohala purporting to have been executed by the Plaintiff's vendor in Defendant's favour in respect of the property in suit valued at Rs. 99 but which was not completed and registered was also put in evidence; Held—That notwithstanding that the value of the property which the document purported to convey was less than Rs. 100, a sale of the property if it was made by a document could only be made by a registered instrument under sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, but having regard to sec. 91 of the Evidence Act, it might be used as evidence of the nature and terms of the transaction which fell through to corroborate the Plaintiff's story that the Defendant negotiated for the purchase of the property from the vendor of the Plaintiff who had title to the property. That a certified copy of the deposition of a witness would not come in by itself; in any case it would be necessary to adduce evidence proving the identity of the person who gave the deposition. Evidence is admissible under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act only when the requirements of that section are fulfilled. The mere fact that a witness did not appear as a witness when cited on behalf of the Plaintiff or that he appeared as a witness on behalf of the Defendant on one occasion but was not examined, it being found that he was not kept out of the way by the Defendant, would not be a ground for admitting the deposition under sec. 33 of the Act. The conditions laid down in sec. 33 being absent and the second proviso to that section to the effect that the adverse party in the first proceeding should have had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the witness not having been satisfied the deposition could not go in under the section. The admission made by U in the proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., when examined as a witness therein is evidence against him as a piece of admission but as to the admissibility of the admission against the co-Defendant the words of sec. 18 of the Evidence Act were perfectly clear and inasmuch as U made the statement when he had parted with his interest in favour of his co-Defendant in the present suit, the admission made by him could not be treated as evidence of admission as against the co-Defendant. 		FRAUDULENT ex parte decree, suit for setting aside, if lies, when summonses had been served and Defendant was aware of the suit—Falsity of claim and adducing of false evidence, if constitute sufficient fraud for vacating the previous decree.] B. obtained an ex parte decree against P. and others and on compromise against some others. Summonses had been duly served and as a matter of fact P. had watched the progress of the suit on behalf of some of the Defendants. P. subsequently brought a suit to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground that it was obtained by suppression of processes, and by adducing false evidence in support of a false claim. The lower Courts found that there was no suppression of processes and that P. was fully aware of the progress of the suit, but that B.'s suit was wholly false and that the decree was obtained by the production of false evidence and by the practice of fraud on the Court and therefore set aside the previous decree. Held—That the balance of authority is that it is not open to a party to raise pleas of this nature, and no suit lies to vacate a previous decree if the suit had been decreed on contest or if the suit had been decreed ex parte and it was established that summonses had been served on the Defendants. Nalini Kanta Mukherji v. - HINDU LAW—Gift by Hindu widow followed by surrender to next reversioner—Latter, if may recover before widow's death—Valid surrender, what is—Difference of opinion in Division Bench hearing appeal from mofussil Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 98, or Letters Patent, 1885, cl. 36, if applicable.] A Hindu widow purported to make a gift of a portion of her husband's immovable properties to one T. Later on she executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of the next reversioner B, but it appeared that she did this in consideration of a sum of money paid in cash and an annuity to be paid to her during her life. In a suit by B to recover from T the properties gifted to him: Held (by Chatterjea, C. J., Rankin and Chakravarti, JJ).—That the fact that some maintenance has been agreed to be paid by the reversioner to the widow does not affect a surrender, but whether there was a surrender or relinquishment such as would accelerate the succession of the reversioner or whether the transaction was a transfer for valuable consideration depended on the facts of each case and in this case the circumstances showed that the transaction was a transfer for valuable consideration. That the Plaintiff's suit must therefore fail and the question whether upon a valid relinquishment by a Hindu widow the reversioner becomes entitled to recover from a previous alienee without legal necessity, immediately or upon the death of the widow, did not arise. Per Walmsley, J.—In the event of a valid surrender by the widow, the right of the reversioner to recover from the previous alienee is postponed to the widow's death. - Dedication of property to family idol—Appointment of members of family as shebait and allowing shebait to appropriate a small portion of the income as remuneration and to reside in the thakurbari with family, if affects absolute debutter character of the property—Consensus of family, if can convert debutter property into secular—Consensus, if to be that of all persons interested in the sheba or of shebait only. The question whether an absolute debutter is created or there is merely a charge in favour of the deity sheba depends upon the terms of the deed and the circumstances of each case. Where the language of a deed of endowment prima facie showed that there was absolute dedication to a family idol, the mere fact that the donor by the deed appointed himself and other members of the family shebait in succession and provided that the shebait for the time being would at the end of every three years receive as remuneration a half of the surplus income of the endowed properties (which taking the income as at the date of the deed proved a trifling sum) and would be entitled to reside with his family in the thakurbari, in a portion of which only the thakur was located, did not affect the absolute debutter character of the endowment. Jadu Nath v. - Mitakshara—Mortgage by ancestors for necessity—Subsequent sale of portion to pay off mortgage, if binds descendants—Antecedent debt.] According to Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, L. R. 44 I. N. 255 (1923), debts secured by mortgages executed by members of a Mitakshara family are antecedent debts which would justify for their liquidation a sale of family property not otherwise improper, so as to make such sale binding upon their descendants. But there is no necessity to invoke this rule to support such a sale where the mortgages themselves were such as to bind the descendants. LAL RAHADUR v. AMBIKA PRASAD ... 701 mortgages frustrated by intervention of pre-emptor—Sale to pre-emptor, if to pay off antecedent debt—Suit to set aside sale by younger sons, after eldest son's claim had become barred through attaining majority earlier, if also barred—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), secs. 7 and 8.] A Mitakshara father entered into negotiations for sale of family property with one U in order to discharge certain debts due to money-lenders upon mortgages and a deed of sale for a consideration of Rs. 13,000 was actually drawn up in favour of U, when D intervened as pre-emptor and obtained a decree for purchasing the property on payment of Rs. 13,000. D accordingly paid the amount and the property passed to him. The mortgages had been paid off pending the suit: Held—That the sale to D could in no sense be regarded as a sale to pay off the antecedent debt due to the mortgagees. A contract for a loan which never was completed to pay off a previous debt otherwise discharged is not an "antecedent debt" as defined in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, L. R. 44 I. A. 126 at p. 133; s. c. I. L. R. 39 All. 437; 21 C. W. N. 698 (1917). The fact that one of the sons of the vendor had attained majority so long before this suit to set aside the sale by his younger brothers that if brought by him, it would have been time-barred, did not affect the undoubted rights of the Plaintiffs to sue within the extended period of limitation to which their minority at the date when the cause of action arose entitled them. JAWAHIR SINGH v. Joint family property—Existence of nucleus of joint property necessary to raise presumption of jointness as to property in the hands of any one member—Circumstances varying strength of presumption—Ancestral property in joint possession not sufficient to provide fund for acquiring property—Separate property subsequently acquired by individual member—Suit to recover such property—Presumption of jointness, how far arises as to such separate property—Onus of proof.] It is necessary to establish the existence of a nucleus of joint family property before property in the possession of any one member can be presumed to be joint family property. In order to hold that property purchased in the name of one of two brothers was the joint property of both, it is not enough to find that at the time of the purchase they were living together. It has to be found further that they were joint in mess and estate and that there was sufficient estate out of which it may be presumed that the property was acquired. The onus of proof in a case where the property is said to be the joint property of a joint family must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Where the family was joint in mess and estate at the time of the acquisition and there was a nucleus of joint fund, however small it may be, the onus is undoubtedly upon a member of the family to prove that the property though purchased in his name was not a joint property. But when the only fact found was that the two brothers lived together, this circumstance alone did not throw any burden of proof on the Plaintiff, who claimed the property as the self-acquisition of one of the brothers, more than is to be borne by him as the Plaintiff in the case to prove that the property was purchased by the brother through whom he claimed. TRILAKYA-NATH CHAR v. Agarwalla Jains, law of adoption governing—Power of brothers to give in adoption—Adoption made in fact but not good in law—Conduct affirming fact of adoption, if estops from denying validity of adoption in law—Estoppel, law of, as affecting adoptions—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 115.] The Agarwallas generally adhere to Jainism and repudiate the Brahmanical doctrines relating to obsequial ceremonies, the performance of shraddh, the offering of oblations for the salvation of the soul of the deceased, nor do they believe that a son, either by birth or by adoption, confers spiritual benefit on the father. An Agarwalla boy who has lost both his parents cannot, according to the admitted rule of Hindu law, be adopted, for he cannot be given in adoption by anybody but his father, or if he be dead, by his mother—not even under authority delegated to him by the parent. Where the facts were that such a boy was given to J in adoption by his brothers, the parents being both dead, and it was alleged that K, a brother of J and a coparcener with J, brought the boy from his native village to J's place, became a witness to the deed of adoption, allowed him to perform the cremation ceremony of J and at the time of his marriage represented him to be the adopted son of J: Held—That there was no misrepresentation of fact by R, and R's heir was not estopped from denying the validity of the adoption in law. Gopas Lal v. Musamat Sree Chundrasolee Buhoojee, L. R. I. A. Sup. Vol. 131; 19 W. R. 12; 11 B. L. R. 391 (1872), followed. Precedents bearing on the question of estoppel in relation to adoption considered and it was pointed out that in those cases the Courts considered in substance that a long course of recognition and acquiescence by the person making the adoption—the person best acquainted with the circumstances—gave rise to the inference that the conditions relating to the adoption were duly fulfilled, whilst in Rani Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh, L. R. 39 I. A. 142; s. c. 16 C. W. — Widow, decree against, if binds reversioners—Conditions necessary—Dispossession of widow—Suit for recovery, limitation for—Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sec. 129—Act XV of 1877, Art. 141.] A Hindu widow has no power to sell or assign the estate she holds as a limited owner except for necessity so as to bind her husband's reversioners after her death. But she represents the estate in suits brought by her or against her for possession of the estate or any part of it, and she and the reversioners are equally bound by any final decree which a Court makes in such a suit provided that the suit was fought out according to law and was not collusive or fraudulent. When the suit was not collusive, it did not make any difference that in resisting the suit she was actuated by a purely personal and selfish object, if she in fact and in law represented the estate as well as her own interest as a Hindu widow. Katama Natchier v. The Rajah of Shivagunga, 9 M. L. A. 539 (1863) and other cases referred to. Where the widow made over the estate to a person whom she had adopted as son to her husband in 1862: Held—That although the adoption was in law invalid, there could be no recovery without displacing the apparent adoption by a suit which under Art. 129 of Act IX of 1871 stood barred after the expiry of 12 years from 1862, i.e., in 1874, long before Art. 141 of Sch. — Hindu widow, debts incurred by—Amount borrowed in excess of necessity

— Effect on the transaction—Onus of proof on person challenging transaction, to show excess—Nature and scope of enquiry to be made by Court. [In cases where it is shown that the money borrowed by a Hindu widow was more than the necessity justified the Court should find whether the creditor knew or could have known by means of enquiries then available that the money was in excess of the necessity, and if the finding is in the affirmative then the Court should allow the reversioner to recover the property on payment of the sum really justified by the necessity. If on the other hand the finding of the Court is in the negative, the transaction should be upheld in its entirety. The onus is on the reversioner who challenges the transaction to show that the sum which the widow borrowed for the necessity which really existed was in excess of the necessity and that there were means available to the creditor for making an enquiry as to the actual amount needed by the lady or that the amount was excessive to his knowledge. It is impossible to draw a line as to the extent to which an excess should be held not to vitiate the transaction. In the absence of fraud or collusion between the widow and the creditor, when the necessity for the loan is established, mere excess of the amount lent should not be held to vitiate the transaction. When the excess is disproportionately large that itself being evidence of collusion the Court should not uphold the transaction. In cases where the Court finds that the necessity was inadequate for the entire loan the reversioner should be put to terms. TARAPROSAD SAU v. MADHU SUDAN GIRI ... 204

Religious endowment—Family idol, if capable of disposal of property—Legal position of founder and his heirs when no separate Shebait appointed—Founder's heir, whether can determine the location of the Thakur—Power to remove—Division of worship into turns—Contest between co-Shebaites regarding worship—Thakur to be represented by independent next friend appointed by Court—Members of family entitled to worship but not Shebaites should be made parties—Scheme of worship to be framed on hearing all interested parties and guardian of Thakur.] A Hindu idol is a juristic entity and has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. The person who has the deity in his charge is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. The person founding a deity and becoming responsible for the duties of the manager of the idol is de facto Shebait. This responsibility is maintained either by the personal performance of the religious rites or, as in the case of Sudras, by the employment of a Brahmin priest to do so on his behalf. The founder, at any time before his death, or his successor likewise, may confer the office of Shebait on another. Family idols are not mere moveable chattels and their destruction, degradation or injury are not within the power of the founder or other custodian for the time being. Where the founder of the idol continued till his death to be the de facto Shebait, his heir stood vested with the custody of, and management of the trust for, the family idol which belonged to the founder. Where the founder's heir conveyed and dedicated to his family idol certain premises for its location and directed that the idol was on no account to be removed therefrom except upon dedication to it of another Thakurbari of the same or of larger value, and the office of Shebait having devolved by inheritance on several persons, there was a division of the worship into palas or turns, and the question was whether one of them during his turn of worship was entitled to take the Thakur to his own residence for such purpose: Held—That, if in the course of a proper and unassailable administration of the worship of the idol by the Shebait, it be thought that a family idol should change its location, the will of the idol itself, expressed through its guardian, must be given effect

to. A fortiori it is open to an idol acting through its guardian, the Shebait, to conduct its worship in its own way at its own place, always on the assumption that the acts of the Shebait expressing its will are not inconsistent with the reverent and proper conduct of its worship by those members of the family who render service and pay homage to it. The question having arisen in a suit between contesting co-Shebaites, the Judicial Committee held that the idol should be represented in the suit by a disinterested next friend appointed by Court, and that the female members of the family who are entitled to participate in the worship without obstruction or inconvenience should also be joined, and a scheme framed for the regulation of the worship of the idol. PRAMATHA NATH MULLICK v. Shebait's right of worship of family deity, alienation to another member of family, if legal in the absence of custom—"Benefit to idol," if justifies alienation—"Consensus" of persons interested, if justifies alienation—"Benefit," what is,] There is a distinction between a shebait's obligation to perform the spiritual duties of his office and his obligation to manage the temporalities of the idol. A shebait primarily and mainly is a sacred office and because in certain circumstances a shebait may be entitled to alienate the temporalities of the deity, it does not follow that in similar or any circumstances he is entitled to transfer the spiritual duties and privileges which appertain to his office. In the nature of things, there can be no necessity for a voluntary transfer of the spiritual duties of a shebait, and the doctrine that a shebait at his own will and pleasure is at liberty to alter the line of shebaites on the ground that to do so would be for the benefit of the deity offends against the common law of India and is in conflict with the uniform rulings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Muncharam v. INAM GRANT RULS. Rule No. V—Condition specified in rules, if may be varied—Decree declaring Plaintiffs' share in property and awarding share, if res judicata in subsequent partition suit, when partition might have been refused in previous suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.] The Inam rules lay down the conditions which are usually to accompany an Inam grant, but they contain nothing to prevent Government from altering or modifying any of the conditions in the case of any particular grant. Where such a grant, expressly made heritable to male descendants of the grantees to the exclusion of all females, was, in a suit by certain female descendants, against the certificate-holder for a share of the profits, erroneously declared to belong in part to the Plaintiffs and they were given a decree for the share of profits claimed: Held—That as there were grounds on which a decree for partition, if claimed, might have been refused to the Plaintiffs in that suit, and such a claim was not raised or decided, a claim by the same Plaintiffs for a partition of the property in a subsequent suit was not res judicata and should be refused, but the previous decree being binding upon the parties, the certificate-holder was to hold the property subject to the obligation to pay to the Plaintiffs the share of the profits declared by the decree.

Subsequently the decree and attachment were set aside on the ground that the summons had not been duly served. Held—That the order was not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and was not appealable. *The Justice of the Peace for Calcutta v. - LANDLORD AND TENANT—Ejectment—Rent, payment of, as marfatdar—Marfatwari rent receipts, grant of, if amounts to recognition of tenancy—Title as tenant acquired by prescription—Kabuliyat, construction of—Heritability.] It is not always a fact that where rent receipts are granted with the word "marfatdar" it is conclusive that there was no recognition by the landlord of the person who pays the rent as a tenant but the Court should determine in each case whether on a consideration of all the facts a legal inference can be drawn that there has been a recognition establishing the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. Where a tenant died in 1902 and rent was paid by his heirs who had no heritable interest from that date up till 1915, and rent receipts were given to them as marfatdars. Held—That in the circumstances of the case a legal inference could be drawn that the landlord who was entitled to take khas possession on the death of the tenant not having done so but having allowed the heirs to remain in possession and received rent from them, his conduct amounted to recognition of them as tenants. Prabhabati Dasi v. "The appeal being time-barred is not admitted" amounts to a dismissal of the appeal and is a decree. Where the judgment of the Munsif was pronounced on the 6th October and the same day the Appellant applied for a copy of the judgment and decree and put in a certain number of folios and stamps by guess, which were sufficient for the copy of the decree only, and on the 8th October the actual number of stamps and folios required was notified and the Court was closed after the 8th October and reopened on the 12th November and the remaining number of stamps and folios were filed on the 14th November and the copy of the decree was ready for delivery on the 16th November, and the appeal was filed before the District Judge on the 19th November: Held—That the Appellant was entitled to deduct the period from the 6th October to the 16th November under sec. 12 of the Limitation Act. That assuming that the actual number of folios for the copy of the judgment was not filed in proper time, that did not debar the Appellant from deducting the period required for the preparation of a copy of the decree for which the requisite number of folios had been filed. P. C., in respect of a jalkar the Magistrate found that the first party had the right to fish by large nets only during a certain period of the year and the second party the right to fish by small nets during that period and both by large and small nets for the rest of the year and directed that the parties should be entitled to catch fish in the manner aforesaid. In 1910 the first party to the proceeding under sec. 145 as Plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration and injunction that the Defendants, the second party to the proceeding under sec. 145, had no right to catch fish with small nets or with any other means during the period the Plaintiffs were entitled to catch fish in the jalkar and further asked for a declaration that the Plaintiffs had the right to catch fish throughout the year. The suit was decreed in a modified form in respect of a portion of the jalkar in which it was held the Defendants had no right to catch fish with small nets or with any other means during the time the Plaintiffs were entitled to catch fish and a permanent injunction was granted accordingly. The Defendants again interfered with the Plaintiffs' rights and in 1917 a suit was brought by the Plaintiffs in respect of the same portion of the jalkar asking for a declaration and permanent injunction that the Defendants had only the right to catch fish with small nets during a particular period: Held—That the suit was not barred by limitation under Art. 47 of the Limitation Act. Per Suhrawardy, J.—That under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate was only entitled to decide the question of possession at the date of the proceeding. His order that the Defendants were in possession of the fishery throughout the year whilst the Plaintiffs were entitled to possession jointly with the Defendants for a portion of the year was without jurisdiction as also the portion of the order laying down the way in which each party should exercise his possession. Art. 47 of the Limitation Act prescribes a period of three years for a suit by a party against whom possession has been found under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. That article has no relation to any portion of the order of the Criminal Court which has no reference to the question of possession. The suit of 1910 was brought within three years from the order of the Magistrate so far as it decided the question of possession and was therefore rightly constituted and within time. Moreover as the order of the Magistrate did not dispossess the Plaintiffs or maintain Defendants' possession to the exclusion of the Plaintiffs, Art. 47 did not apply. As regards Art. 120 the Magistrate's order as to the mode of possession or the use of large nets by the Defendants could not give a cause of action for a suit which, if not brought within the statutory period, made that portion of the order binding between the parties. The intention of the law of limitation is that if no suit is brought within the statutory period the remedy is lost and in case of an order of a competent Court it remains binding between the parties. The cause of action was not the Magistrate's order under sec. 145 but the infringement of Plaintiffs' right, and when the Defendants again started doing what they had no right to do, it gave rise to a fresh cause of action. That it was also a case of continuing wrong. That the suit was not barred under Or. 2, r. 2, C. P. C., which is directed to securing the exhaustion of the reliefs in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion in one and the same action different causes of action even though they arise out of the same transaction. The order under sec. 145, even if valid, gave rise to two different causes of action: one in respect of the Plaintiffs' period of the possession of the fishery and the other in respect of the Defendants' period. That the decision in the suit of 1910 was res judicata as to the size of the nets and, even apart from the question of res judicata, the Defendants, having invited the Appellate Court to decide the question although it was not necessary for the purposes of that suit, were estopped from re-agitating the matter. Per Graham, J.—That the order under sec. 145 was superseded by the decree in the first suit; and every fresh infringement of the Plaintiffs' right gave rise to a fresh cause of action. That as regards the applicability of Or. 2, r. 2, there was no necessity in the earlier suit to ask for a negative relief in regard to the Defendants' claim, since the declaration prayed for as regards Plaintiffs' right excluded the Defendants' claim, and there was thus no relinquishment of relief within the rule. That the decision in the suit of 1910 was res judicata as to the size of the nets. RAHINI NANDAN CHAUDHURY v. JADUNANDAN CHAUDHURY ... 573

the judgment-debtor's title—Limitation, if runs from the date of the decision declaring that the judgment-debtor had no title at the time of sale or from loss of possession—Rateable distribution.] The judgment-debtor's properties were separately sold in different lots in execution of a money decree and bought by the decree-holder himself (Plaintiff-Respondent). The Defendants' (Appellants') predecessor obtained another decree for money against the same judgment-debtor and a portion of the purchase money in deposit was given to him under Court's order upon his application for rateable distribution. The sale of some lots out of the several lots sold was ultimately set aside and declared to be invalid on 11th December 1916 on the ground that the judgment-debtor possessed no saleable interest therein at the time of sale but that the same belonged to his wife. The Plaintiff-Respondent brought a suit on 4th September 1920 against the Defendants-Appellants for recovery of a proportionate share of the purchase money paid by him for those lots, and which the predecessor of the Defendants had taken out of Court under the above order. Held—That the period of limitation in this case commenced to run from the 11th December 1916, the date on which the auction sale was declared to be invalid on account of the judgment-debtor's want of title, and not from the earlier date on which the Plaintiff lost possession. Quare—Whether Art. 97 of Sch. Arts. 134, 144—Sale or mortgage by shebait not supportable for necessity—Possession of alienee, if adverse and from when.1 There is no question that the possession of the alienee of debutter property becomes adverse from the death of the shebait who made the alienation. Where the alienation is in the form of an unauthorized lease, if the lessor's possession is consented to by the succeeding shebait, the consent being referable to a new tenancy created by him, there is no adverse possession until his death. This reasoning, however, is not applicable to the case of a sale. Vidya Varuthi Tirtha v. Balusami Ayyar, I. R. 49 I. A. 302; s. c. I. T. R. 44 Mad. 531; 26 C. W. Art. 142—Suit to recover diluviated land which has reformed—Onus on Plaintiff to prove possession within 12 years, actual or constructive—Possession, when will be presumed in Plaintiff's favour.] Cases of diluviated land or jungle or waste lands are no exception to the general rule that a Plaintiff who is dispossessed and brings a suit for recovery of possession must show that he was in possession within 12 years of the date of the suit. To do this he may rely on a variety of evidence. For instance, he could show that he was in possession up to the time of diluvion and that the land remained under water or incapable of being possessed up to a point of time within the statutory period, or even though out of possession he might show that he had a subsisting title, in which case possession would be considered to go back to him when the trespasser was evicted by vis major when the lands were washed away. PANCHANON SARKAR v. There is no presumption that the death took place at the close of the first seven years of such disappearance. Rango Balaji v. Mudiyeppa, I. L. Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 11 to 14, 17.] Where an application for execution filed on the 25th August 1923, which was in time, was returned on the ground that there were omissions with regard to the amount of interest and costs to which the decree-holder was entitled, and it was ordered to be re-filed within ten days after the necessary corrections, but it was not re-filed within that time, and on the 28th June 1924 a fresh application for execution was made giving the necessary particulars and the previous application of the 25th August 1923 was also filed along with it, and thereupon the Court ordered the return of the previous application on the ground that it was not necessary as a fresh one had been filed, and objection was taken by the judgment-debtors that the application filed on the 28th June was barred by limitation: Held—That the application made on the 25th August 1923 was one "in accordance with law" under Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act and the present application for execution was not barred by limitation. The question whether an application for execution or for taking step in aid of execution is one "in accordance with law" is to be determined with reference to the circumstances of each particular case. Per Suhrawardy, J.—The words "in accordance with law" in Art. 182 (5) should be taken to mean that the application, though defective in some particulars, was one upon which execution could be issued. If the omissions were such as to make it impossible for the Court to issue execution upon it, such an application is not in accordance with law. If upon the application the Court is able to take further steps in execution it cannot generally be said that such an application, if not defective in material and substantial particulars, is an application not in accordance with law. The only defect, in the present case, was the omission of certain sums which the decree-holder was entitled to receive from the judgment-debtors but which he did not mention in the application for execution and so there was no bar to the Court levying execution for the lesser sum claimed by the decree-holder. If an application is presented to the Court and the Court takes judicial action upon it either in registering the application or by returning it for amendment, such an application, though not filed within the time fixed by the Court, should not be considered as not having been made. Per Page, J.—Where an application for execution in substantial compliance with the law is preferred to the Court, such an application will be effectual to stay the progress of limitation whether the Court admits or returns the application or allows such application to be amended. Gopal Sah v. Certain putnidars were in possession of the lands of three villages as recorded in the settlement record-of-rights. The landlord sued for additional rent on the allegation that the putni was originally in respect of the lands of one village only and the putnidars were in possession of more lands than they had taken settlement of. The landlords did not challenge the correctness of the record-of-rights, nor did they prove that the "lot" in the putni potta meant only one village: Held—That the word "lot" in the parlance of putni potta usually meant a group of villages. As the Plaintiffs did not challenge the record-of-rights or prove that the "lot" in the putni potta comprised only one village and not more, the landlords were not entitled to additional rent for additional area. KUMAR ARUN CHANDIA SINHA BAHADUR v. Adverting to the modification of this position as enacted in sec. 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1 of 1908, M. C., where occupancy raiyats cut down some palmyra trees: Held—That sec. 12 of the Act applies and the landholder has no claim for compensation for trees growing on the land which is held by a raiyat though no mention of trees be made in the lease. Sec. 12 does not apply where the trees are let to a person on whose land they do not grow and the landholder is entitled to the full value of the trees cut. Murugappa v. Ramanathan, 1 L. The widow has no estate or interest in the property as has a mortgagee under a mortgage, ordinary or usufructuary, and the principles applicable to mortgages cannot be safely applied by analogy to such a case. In a suit by the other heirs of the deceased husband to recover immediate possession of their shares of the estate on their paying to the widow such amount as should after proper deductions be found due to her on account of dower, the decree was that on paying the amount found due by a fixed date, the Plaintiffs would be put in possession of the shares in question. On 20th March 1895, he made a wakf of his properties. He lingered on in the same condition till his death in November 1895 from the same illness: Held—That the wakf having been made in death illness, operated only to the extent of a third of his properties. Per Walmsley, J.—That the wakf having been made when T was under an immediate apprehension of death, the months of lingering before actual death did not take the case out of the doctrine. Per Mukerji, J.—That the crucial test as settled by the authorities was whether there was an apprehension of death in the mind of the donor as distinguished from apprehension banded in the minds of others. VI.] Reversioners possess individually what has been called a spes successionis, the bare possibility of succeeding to the estate of the last owner in case the widow dies leaving any one of them surviving entitled to take immediate possession after her, unless the husband has left the power to her to adopt a son. But the spes is common to them all; so is the danger by the widow's act against the interest of the reversioners. The right to sue to set aside that common danger is given for obvious reasons of policy and convenience to the person who, if the widow died at the moment, would take the estate. But the result, favourable or otherwise, affects the reversioners as a body. Under Exp. VI to sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, in the absence of anything to show that the litigation by the presumptive reversioner was collusive or vitiated by fraud or laches on his part in conducting the suit or in asserting his reversionary right, the decision is res judicata against the reversioners as a body. Sec. 6 of the Oudh Estates Amendment Act (III of 1910) is not retrospective. A taluqdar purported to bequeath a property included in List V prepared under the Oudh Estates Act (X of 1869) to his younger son, but the Will was not registered as required by sec. 13 of the Act. Held—That with the failure of the bequest the property passed out of the Act and became subject to Hindu law and did not once more become subject to that Act on the passing of Act III of 1910. That in a suit by the heir of the taluqdar according to Hindu law to recover the property from the widow of the younger son who had been in possession up to his death, it was prudent and reasonable on the part of the widow to enter into a compromise with the heir under which she was left in possession of the property for life, on her acknowledging that the estate was subject to Act I of 1869, and it should be upheld as a family settlement, specially as the compromise gave effect to the rule of the Hindu law which applied to the case, the acknowledgment of the widow that the property was subject to Act I of 1869 not affecting the rights of the parties on the basis of the law governing the succession. It is not open to Courts in India to question any principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee, although they have a right of examining the facts of any case before them to see whether and how far the principle on which stress is laid applies to the facts of the particular case. PARTNERSHIP—BUSINESS —Lunacy of partner, effect of, if dissolution—Contract Act (14 of 1872), ss. 254, 254—Dissolution, how affects rights of persons dealing with firm without notice—Rights of persons who commenced dealing with firm after dissolution.] Lunacy of a partner does not ipso facto dissolve a partnership. It provides a ground for dissolution and if there has been no dissolution in fact by reason of the lunacy of a partner, the partnership must be deemed to continue. Sec. 254 of the Contract Act preserves, as against persons known to have been partners, the rights of persons who have dealt with the firm subsequently to the dissolution of the partnership or change of partners without notice of such dissolution or change. The application of the section is not confined to persons who had dealings with the partnership before the dissolution. JAGAT CHANDRA BHATTACHARYA v. GUNNY HAJEE AHMED ...	11

PERMANENT LEASE OF PROPERTY , if can be clogged with condition that certain heirs will not succeed—Such stipulation by lessee not operative and opposed to general principles of inheritance—Right of lessor to khas possession when such excluded heir is in possession—"Putra poutradi Krame," if excludes females.] The Plaintiff granted a permanent lease of a certain property and the lessee executed an ekranama to the effect that his daughter and daughter's sons would not be entitled to succeed as heirs. After the death of the lessee and his widow, his daughter (the Defendant) remained in possession of the property and the Plaintiff sued for khas possession by ejecting her: Held —That the clause in the ekranama regarding the exclusion of the daughter and daughter's sons was inoperative and did not give the landlord the right of re-entry in the event of the nearest heir being the daughter or daughter's son. A subject has no right to impose on land or other property any limitation of descent which is at variance with the ordinary law of descent of property applicable to his case. Even assuming that the clause in question was operative the grantor would have no right of re-entry on the

- PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—Difference between legal agent and so-called agents who are specially favoured or favouring buyers—Agent selling as principal with a view to make undisclosed profit, if may claim indemnity from principal for loss.] [The extension which modern business has given to the terms "agent" and "agency" adverted to. In many trades—particularly, for instance, in the motor-car trade—the so-called agent is merely a favoured or favouring buyer, one who under an overriding contract undertakes to do his best to find a market for the manufacturer's stock, who is given some special advantages, such as a special discount or preference in complying with his orders, but who in each particular contract acts as a buyer from the manufacturer and sells at whatever price he can get, unless—as is sometimes the case—he is by a special provision in the overriding contract forbidden to sell too cheaply or required not to spoil the market by asking too much. Held, however, upon the evidence in the case—That the Respondents were Appellants' "agents" in the legal sense of the term and not favoured buyers, loosely called agents. That, as agents, they had no authority to sell as principals, and could not claim indemnity as agents from the Appellants, their principals; neither could they claim as a link in a chain of buyers and sellers for the damages recovered by the ultimate buyer, because there was no contract of sale between the Appellants and themselves. HOPE PRUDHOMME AND COMPANY v. It was found that the Plaintiffs failed to substantiate the allegation of fraud: Held—That the allegation of fraud being negatived the Plaintiffs' suit failed under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act. It is not open to a certificate-debtor to evade the provisions of secs. 36 and 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act by making a fictitious allegation of fraud. PUBLIC DOCUMENTS, entries in, admissibility of—Exception to rule of hearsay evidence—Reasons therefor—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), sec. 74.] For a series of years since 1852 Plaintiff's family had been shown in the Revenue Records as belonging to a caste of Mohals, which, if true, would make the Plaintiff a Rajput and so a member of an agricultural tribe. The Appellate Court in India discounted these entries on the ground that "there was no proof that whoever first caused this entry to be made had any title to the use of the term Mohal." Held—That the reason given was not sufficient to disregard entries in public records made in accordance with the requirements of the law, in a pedigree case. Statements in public documents are receivable to prove the facts stated on the general grounds that they were made by the authorised agents of the public in the course of official duty and respecting facts which were of public interest or required to be recorded for the benefit of the community. The reason for this exception made to the rule of hearsay evidence is that in nearly all cases, after a lapse of years, it would be impossible to give evidence that the statements contained in such documents were in fact true. *GHULAM RASUL KHAN v. the High Court. A body of rules framed by the Temple Committee was after certain alterations sanctioned by the District Court. An appeal preferred against the order of the District Court sanctioning the rules treating the same as an order under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and an application under cl. (20) to the High Court for notification of the rules came on before a Judge of the High Court, who, in spite of doubts as to whether the appeal lay against the order sanctioning the rules, entertained the appeal because no objection was taken thereto, and having considered the rules in the appeal, dismissed the application under cl. (20) of the scheme: Held—That the appeal did not lie and, as jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent or acquiescence, should have been rejected. But the High Court could alter, modify or add to the rules sanctioned by the District Judge upon the application under cl. (20) of the scheme. That there was no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decision of the High Court except on the sole ground that the judgment of the High Court and the decree drawn up thereon were incompetent. *SEVAK VERANCHOD BHOGILAT, v. PURDANASHIN LADY, deed by, law governing enforcement of—Want of independent advice, if in itself fatal—Intelligent execution, onus to prove—Discrepancy between draft and conveyance, how affects the consideration of the question—Duty of Court to apply law for protection of persons under disability strictly.] In the case of an illiterate purdanashin lady disposing of a large proportion of her property without professional or independent advice, the authorities show that independent legal advice is not in itself essential to its validity. The real point is that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it. If the lady really understands and means to make the transfer, it is not required that some one should have tried to persuade her to the contrary. The onus is on the party who sets up and relies on a deed executed by a purdanashin lady to satisfy the Court that it had been explained to and understood by her either before execution or after it under circumstances which establish adoption of it with full knowledge and comprehension. Mere execution, though unaccompanied by duress, protest or obvious signs of misunderstanding or want of comprehension, is in itself no real proof of a free understanding mind in the executant. Evidence to establish such comprehension is most obviously found in proof that the deed was read over to the settlor and, where necessary, explained. The extent and character of the explanation required must depend on the circumstances. Length, intricacy, the number and complexity of the dispositions or the unfamiliarity of the subject-matter are all reasons for requiring an increased amount and efficiency of explanation. Thus a matter not likely to attract the attention of the executant in itself ought not to be relied on as binding unless her attention has been directly drawn to it. So if a deed, as presented for execution, differs substantially, either by way of addition or of omission, from the scheme and details which the intending settlor has previously laid down, the discrepancy ought to be clearly pointed out and its nature and effect should be fully described, unless, which must be rare, the difference is so obvious that even a person of the executant's position must perceive and appreciate it for herself. If the description and explanation have been partial or erroneous, or have not been given at all, the question will then arise, as it arises where there has been no independent legal advice, whether, if proper information had been given it would have affected the mind of the executant in completing the deed. On the other hand, the doctrine cannot be pushed so far as to demand the impossible. The mere declaration by the executant, subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing is not in itself conclusive. It must be a question whether, having regard to the proved personality of the settlor, the nature of the settlement, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the whole history of the parties, it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the settlor or not. Fraud, duress and actual undue influence are separate matters. It is a matter of obligation on the Judicial Committee to be strict and unwavering in defence of those strict rules which have been laid down for the protection of the defenceless in India. FARIDUNNISA v. If the use does not threaten the complete destruction of the property or if it does not threaten such a change as to endanger the rent the zamindar has no cause for complaint. Held further—That it could not be held that because the putni instrument did not authorise brick-making it forbade it by implication. The loss, as contemplated by sec. 72 of the Indian Railways Act, is loss of the goods by the Railway and not loss to the consignor. The East Indian Ry. Co. v. Jogpat Singh, 28 C. W. In a previous suit for rent of the same putni against the executor of the estate of N's mother-in-law the said estate had been absolved from liability to pay. The facts relating to the purchase appeared to be that the owner of the eight annas interest owed a certain amount to N's mother-in-law on a note of hand on which a decree was obtained and in execution of that decree the share of the putni was purchased: Held—That the decision in the previous suit did not operate as res judicata. The essence of the doctrine of res judicata is that where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a proper Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other or as to the right or title claimed by one of them against the other, the same question cannot be agitated by them again in another suit. In the case of suits for rent or other recurring liability the causes of action for suits for successive periods are different. In the case of such suits for the doctrine to apply it will have to be shown that the question of right or liability not merely for the period in the previous suit but that for all times or once for all was directly and substantially in issue and was tried and determined. If a direct issue on the point was raised and decided, the decision would be res judicata in respect of any suit for a subsequent period. If the decision falls short of that requisite and if the general question was gone into and decided merely for the purpose of deciding the right or liability for the period involved in the suit, then the issue was raised not directly and substantially but collaterally or incidentally. In a suit for rent no issues need be framed, but where issues are framed the non-existence of a direct issue of this character has to be seriously taken into account in determining whether the question of right or liability for all times was really directly and substantially in issue. The principle that the decision of a question in an earlier suit which was not raised in the issues but which it was necessary to decide therein operates as res judicata in respect of the same question when it is raised in a subsequent suit had no application to the present case as it was not at all clear that the question of liability of the estate for the rent of the putni for all times was either raised or decided; while, on the other hand, the matters on the record pointed to a contrary conclusion, namely, that the estate was absolved from liability in respect of the particular decree and the question of the liability of the estate for all times was undetermined. ----- Decision in previous rent suit on rate of interest, if res judicata in subsequent rent suit when law altered by judicial decisions after passing of previous decision—Stipulation in kabuliya about interest at 75 per cent., if penal.] The Plaintiffs sued for rent on a kabuliya in which interest for arrears of rent was stipulated at 75 per cent. per annum. It appeared that in a previous suit for rent between the same parties it was held that the stipulation as to interest was of a penal nature and interest was allowed at 12 per cent. per annum: Held—That the mere fact that 75 per cent. is the rate stipulated in a kabuliya does not show that the rate was a penal one. Asutosh Dhar v. Joylal Sardar, 17 C. L. J. 50 (1912), referred to. That the law on the subject having been altered by judicial decisions since the judgment in the previous suit it could not operate as res judicata. Cases must be decided upon the law as it stands when the judgment is pronounced and not upon what the law was at the date of a previous suit and if the said law has been altered in the meantime and the effect of the law has been differently interpreted by judicial decisions or altered by statute, the decision on the question of interest in an earlier suit for rent would not operate as res judicata with regard to the same question in a suit for rent for subsequent years. *Alimunnissa Chaudhuran v. if to be included in arrears of revenue—Revenue money order—Collector, if can appropriate remittance to kist other than that mentioned by remitter—Contract Act (I of 1872), s. 59.] The notice under sec. 5 is to be issued for the purpose of giving warning to the people concerned of the liability of the mahal being sold in the event of the payment not being made within the time fixed therein. It must therefore issue before the mahal has become liable to sale; whereas the notification under sec. 6 has to be issued after the property has become liable to sale—a date for sale having been fixed. Therefore a combined notification under secs. 5 and 6 cannot be legally issued and when such a notification is issued the effect is non-service of a proper notification under sec. 6. Under sec. 33 of the Act what is meant by irregularity is the fact of the sale having been held contrary to the provisions of the Act. There is no distinction made between illegality and irregularity. The authorities show that when the Collector has jurisdiction to hold the sale, non-compliance with any of the provisions of the Act will render the sale liable to be set aside only on the ground that a party has sustained substantial injury by reason of the illegality or irregularity complained of. The finding of fact that the low price fetched at the sale was not due to the failure of the Collector to issue a proper notification under sec. 6 of the Act is a finding of fact which must be accepted, and whether the non-compliance with the provisions of sec. 6 amounts to illegality or irregularity, the Plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed in view of the finding of the Court below that the inadequacy of price was not due to the breach of any provisions of the Act. Cesses should not be included in the amount recoverable under the Revenue Sale Act, but if there be arrears of revenue due and unpaid, the fact that the amount of arrears claimed was different from what is found really due did not take away the jurisdiction of the Collector. Where an amount is sent to the Collector by postal money order it must be appropriated by the Collector to the kist mentioned by the remitter under sec. 59 of the Contract Act. Per Graham J.—Act XI of 1859 is a stringent enactment for the realisation of arrears of revenue and that being so, there is an obligation to comply exactly with its requirements. A notification under sec. 6 ought to be issued in all cases and it cannot be dispensed with on the ground that a notification has already been issued under sec. 5. *LAL BENARY MAITY v. Where the largest co-sharer in a revenue-paying estate deliberately defaulted with the intention of getting rid of his co-sharers and purchasing the estate himself, the Court would in equity be justified in ordering him to re-convey to the other co-sharers their shares of the estate which he purchased at the sale on such co-sharers paying to him the amount of arrears due from them together with their shares of the costs incurred. SM. SONTHAL PARGANAS REGULATION III of 1872, as amended by Regulations V of 1893 and III of 1898, secs. 5, 6—Civil Court at Bhagalpur, if competent to entertain suit to enforce mortgage of properties partly in Sonthal Parganas and partly in Bhagalpur—Interest awardable—Post litem interest, award of, discretionary—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 34—Sec. 11, Expl. IV, object of—Omission to claim relief in previous suit, claim barred—Preliminary decree refusing to award interest post litem—Final decree, if may award same.] The joint family property of certain Hindus who were governed by the Mithila School of Hindu law, the greater portion of which was situated in the Sonthal Parganas and the remainder in the District of Bhagalpur was mortgaged in 1906. A suit to enforce the mortgage by sale of the property brought in 1904 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur was dismissed as incompetent by the Privy Council in 1914 in view of sec. 5 of Reg. III of 1872 as amended by Reg. V of 1893; a personal decree, to the passing of which sec. 5 of Reg. III of 1872 would be no bar and which was prayed for in the plaint, was not passed in that suit owing to Plaintiff's omission to press for it. The statute was amended by Reg. III of 1908 which only excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts suits to be instituted between the date of a notification in the Gazette that a settlement shall be made of the whole or any part of the Sonthal Parganas and the date on which the settlement shall, by similar notification, be declared to have been completed. In 1915, the mortgagees instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhagalpur upon the mortgage bond praying for the same reliefs. Held—That in view of the change in the law, in the absence of proof that at any time the mortgaged property was notified for settlement and not notified as settled, the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit within the meaning of sec. 6 of Reg. III of 1872 as amended by Reg. V of 1893. That in dealing with the suit the Court would be bound to give full force and effect to the provisions of sec. 6 of the Regulation in regard to interest. Ram Chandra Marwari v. Rani Keshobati Kumari, 1 C. L. J. 182 (1905), approved. Where the preliminary decree refused to award post litem interest upon the amount decreed on foot of a mortgage, the Court had no power to award such interest by the final decree. The allowance of interest post litem is, by sec. 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, within the discretion of the Court and the High Court having in the exercise of such discretion refused such interest, the Privy Council declined to interfere with that decision. That the prayer for a personal decree could not be granted in this suit in view of Expl. IV to sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Plaintiff having omitted to claim this relief in the previous suit. SURENDRA MOHAN SINHA v. HARI PRASAD SINHA ... 482

126—Will—Construction—Absolute gift accompanied by void settlement, or estate for life—Gift to daughters for life, remainder to children on attaining 21 years—Gift to class—Perpetuity, rule against, in England and India—Act VIII of 1921.] The testator, a Hindu who died in 1904, bequeathed his estate to trustees with directions to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal shares as he might have daughters living at the time of his death or who having predeceased him should have left issue surviving the testator and to pay the income of each of such shares to his said daughters respectively during their respective lives, and from and after the decease of each of the said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter upon trust for the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of 21 years. All his three daughters having survived him: Held—That there was no disposition in favour of the daughters of an absolute estate in the respective shares followed by a provision for settlement which became inoperative within the meaning of sec. 126 of the Succession Act the principle of which is not substantially different from that laid down in Lassance v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & G. 531 (1849). That the ultimate dispositions in favour of the daughters' children on their attaining the age of 21 years failed altogether as being obnoxious to the provisions of sec. 101 and sec. 102 of the Succession Act, the children of the daughters being intended to take as classes, within the meaning of sec. 102. The difference between the rule obtaining in England and that laid down in sec. 101 of the Succession Act pointed out. Whether Madras Act I of 1914 was ultra vires or not, Act VIII of 1921 of the Indian Legislature made secs. 101 and 102 applicable to the Will. The provisions of the Majority Act extending the period of minority in cases mentioned therein to 21 years did not validate the disposition, as at the testator's death one could not be certain whether all or any of the members of the classes in whose favour the disposition was made would ever have guardians appointed as contemplated by the Act. S. Act not limited in application to intestate succession—Sec. 14—Application made within six months of the death of widow who intervened as holder of life interest, if within time.] One P by his Will gave a life interest in his properties to his wife and also authorised her to adopt a son, failing which event the properties were to vest in two idols. After P's death his widow was in possession for a long time and on her death one B took possession of the properties alleging that the widow had adopted his son. On the application of the mother of P representing herself as a shebait of the idols the District Judge made an order directing that the curator appointed under the Act should make over the properties to the applicant before him: Held—That it is competent for a shebait to present an application under the Act. The expression "succession" in the Act is not confined to intestate succession and applies also to testamentary succession. It is not necessary to bring the operation of the Act into play that the succession should be claimed from the last deceased proprietor and the application having been made within six months of the death of the widow of the testator was properly made within the meaning of sec. 14 of the Act. BENODE BEHARY SAHA v. — for rent—Joint co-sharer, if alone may sue for his share of the rent.] The Plaintiff and his brother were joint owners of one-third of an estate. The Plaintiff might sue for the enforcement of the entire contract between him and his brother by making his brother a party Defendant but he was not entitled to enforce a part of the contract between himself and his brother on the one hand and the tenants on the other. RADHABINODE MONDAL v. The principle of marshalling of securities as contained in sec. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act also did not apply in such a case as the lessees having taken the lease subject to the encumbrance with full notice of the indebtedness of the mortgagor had no equities in their favour. That in the circumstances of the case, the order directing the sale of the leased properties first was properly made. MESSRS. H. V. LOW & CO. v. HAZARIMULL BABU ... 183 terms—Notice by vendor to purchaser to engross conveyance for signature and pay money within four days, if unreasonable, specially when purchaser gave assurance that he had money.] Though time was originally of the essence of a contract of sale of land, the parties having allowed the negotiations to continue far beyond the time appointed, the condition as to time being of the essence of contract was, by conduct of the parties, obliterated therefrom. When subsequently the negotiations were concluded and all the terms were settled and only two things remained to be done to complete the transaction, viz., the engrossment of the conveyance for signature and the payment of the money, and the vendor then pressed for early completion of the purchase at the same time expressing doubts as to whether the purchaser had money and received an assurance that he had: Held—That in the circumstances the vendor did not act unreasonably in thereupon demanding that the contract should be completed within four days. That the purchaser was estopped from urging that the assurance he gave that he had money was unfounded. That irrespective of the estoppel created by the assurance, the vendor was in the circumstances justified, in a time of financial strain, in demanding the completion of the little that remained to be done within four days. MOTILAL ITCHIALAL GANDHI v. The Plaintiff also asked for enhancement of rent in the alternative. It appeared that the tenure had existed since the year 1843, that the rent had remained unchanged during three matwaliships for a period of about seventy years and that applications for enhancement of rent had failed: Held—That unless authorised by a kazi no matwali can create a leasehold interest to endure beyond his life, that the lessee acquires no title by adverse possession against the succeeding matwali and that if the succeeding matwali recognise, the interest, the consent is only reforable to a new tenancy created by him and there is no adverse possession until his death or until a new matwali takes his place. That it was not within the scope of the matwali's agency to make a representation on behalf of the Deity at Court sales that the tenure sold at his instance was a permanent tenure, so as to give rise to estoppel if the lease was in fact granted without the authority of the kazi. That the Defendants by admitting their tenancy admitted that the lands were part of the permanently settled estate and as such liable to rent which they acknowledged they were liable to pay and it was therefore for them to show that they held a lease of their lands which entitled them to hold in perpetuity at a fixed rent. That in the circumstances of the case the Court should presume that the grant was in its origin lawful. The cases lay down that the meaning of the term istimrari mukarrari is not necessarily permanent and heritable but that the nature of the grant is to be determined from the circumstances which in the present case justified the Court to infer that the grant was permanent and heritable. There is, however, a well-established principle of law that a watercourse originally artificial may have been made in such circumstances and have been used in such a way that an owner of land situated on its bank will have all the rights over it that a riparian owner would have if it had been a natural stream. A raised road or bund run transversely across the depressed ground through which flowed an ancient fresh-water channel and was properly provided with a gap for the flow and a bridge over the channel. The bund thus provided with an eye and a bridge to permit the inflow and outflow of water was interfered with by the Defendant who filled up the eye and the channel course thereat and converted an innocuous bund into a dam, which dammed back the water on to the Plaintiff's land. INDEX OF CRIMINAL CASES:

(Vol. XXX)

APPEAL—Conviction of rioting, if can be altered to one of simple hurt in the absence of charge under sec. 323, Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).] In the absence of a charge under sec. 323, I. P. C., framed during the trial, a conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C., cannot be altered in appeal to one under sec. 323, I. P. C. RAKHAL CHANDRA BINWAS v. KING-EMPEROR ... 528

CALCUTTA POLICE ACT (IV, B. C., of 1886), ss. 46, 47, sec. 44—Common gaming house—Formalities necessary before issuing warrant for searching such a house—issuing officer must have information on oath on which he may have reason to believe that the house to be searched is used as a common gaming house—mere suspicion not sufficient—Warrant issued on suspicion only invalid—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 114, ill. (e), scope and effect of—Official act must be proved to have been done before regularity in doing can be presumed—Search warrant, necessity of caution in issuing.] A warrant such as is issued under sec. 46 of the Calcutta Police Act is not a public record and there is no presumption of any kind attaching to it; therefore the contents thereof must be proved in the regular way. It is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that a warrant of this description is in strict compliance with the provisions of sec. 46 of the Act and that it was issued after information upon oath had been brought before the issuing officer and after such enquiry as he thought it necessary to make had been made. A warrant issued merely on the ground that the issuing officer has cause to suspect that the premises in question are used and kept as and for a common gaming house is not a valid warrant under sec. 46 of the Act and that being so, the presumption that would otherwise have arisen under sec. 47 of the Act cannot arise and the prosecution must fall back upon sec. 44 of the Act for the purpose of proving that the premises in question were kept and used as a common gaming house. The expression "reason to believe" is entirely different from the expression "cause to suspect." The former connotes a great deal more than is conveyed by the latter. The police may have cause to suspect that a certain house or place is used as a common gaming house but the officer who issues the warrant has to bring his judicial mind to bear upon the question and he can only issue the warrant contemplated under sec. 46 of the Act if in his opinion there is reason to believe that a certain house or place is used as a common gaming house. The law clearly intends that evidence shall be given of such facts as shall satisfy the officer issuing the warrant that there is "reason to believe" as required by sec. 46 of the Calcutta Police Act that a house, room or place is used as a common gaming house. Search warrants are always open to very serious objections and very great particularity is justly required by law in cases where they are authorised, before the privacy of a man's premises is allowed to be invaded by the minister of the law. Sec. 114, illustration (e) of the Indian Evidence Act cannot be invoked for the purpose of doing away with the necessity of proving that the formalities required by sec. 46 before issuing a warrant were complied with. Ashanullah v. ... s. 78—Deputy Commissioner's power to detain in police custody person arrested without warrant—Such person, if can be detained for longer time than necessary, to bring him before a Presidency Magistrate—Such detention, if can be continued for furtherance or completion of police investigation.] A Deputy Commissioner of Police in Calcutta by virtue of his powers as a Justice of the Peace or otherwise cannot lawfully order the detention in police custody of a person arrested without warrant for any longer time than is necessary to enable such person to be brought before a Presidency Magistrate. Such officer cannot lawfully order that the detention of any such person as aforesaid at a police-station or in police custody shall continue until the police investigation shall have been (a) further advanced or (b) completed, notwithstanding that the time within which such person might have been brought before a Presidency Magistrate has elapsed. MUHAMMAD SULEMAN v. (3)—Commitment based on such evidence, validity of—Powers of the Police, how regulated, in the Presidency Town, in the mofussil—Police, if they have any general inherent power in matters of investigation into an alleged offence, apart from the powers conferred on them by Acts and Circulars.] A complaint was preferred before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, charging S and others with cheating, forgery, theft, etc. The Magistrate directed an enquiry into the matter. In the course of the enquiry, the Investigating Police Officer went to Howrah and got a statement from S. No requisition was made to the Superintendent of Police, Howrah, in this behalf, under sec. 78A (3) of the Calcutta Police Act. The Magistrate on the evidence contained in the statement committed S for trial at the High Court Sessions. Held—That the evidence was inadmissible in evidence and the commitment was bad. All

CALCUTTA POLICE ACT—concl'd.

Investigations of the police must be controlled in Calcutta by the Calcutta Police Act and by any Circular issued on that behalf, and in the Mofussil by the Code of Criminal Procedure; apart from these Acts and Circulars, the police has no general inherent powers in such matters. The Investigating Police Officer in this case had no power to take the statement without requisition being made to the Superintendent of Police, Howrah. The attendance and questionings contemplated by sec. 76A, sub-secs. (1) and (2) of the Calcutta Police Act are intended to take place within the Presidency Town itself but if information has to be obtained from outside the Presidency Town, the procedure laid down in sub-sec. (3) has to be followed. SATYA CHARAN MITTRA v. KING-EMPEROR ... 427

TRAFFIC ACT (XIII, B. C., of 1923), s. 4, cls. (1) and (2).—"Living" in brothel, meaning of.] Residence in a brothel for about four days previous to the rescue is living in a brothel within the meaning of sec. 4 (2) of Act XIII, B. C., of 1923. The whole purpose of the section is to rescue girls from brothels, and the whole object of the Act will be frustrated if a girl has to be an ordinary resident before the section can come into operation. SRIMATI HEMANGINI DAS v. CHARGE of murder and in the alternative of causing disappearance of evidence of murder—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302 and s. 201, alternative charges under, if legal—Witness cognizant of commission of offence but withholding information until compelled to disclose it not described as accomplice in charge to jury but otherwise sufficient directions given—Misdirection, if any.] An alternative charge under secs. 302 and 201, I. P. C., is legal. Under the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Begu Singh v. Emperor, L. R. 52 I. A. 191 (1925), a person though not charged under sec. 201 can be convicted thereunder in a trial on a charge under sec. 302. That being so, there cannot be any illegality in charging him under both the sections alternatively. suspicion arising from the delay in the production of the evidence and also placed before the jury the explanation of the delay given by the witnesses and further advised them to place proper value on their evidence: Held—That there was no misdirection merely on the ground that the Sessions Judge did not tell the jury that the witnesses in question were no better than accomplices. UMED SHEIKH v. CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, when sufficient for conviction—Verdict of jury—

Verdict of guilty of murder with dacoity—No direct evidence and circumstantial evidence wholly insufficient—Accused acquitted by High Court on the ground of no evidence—Conviction of murder and sentence of imprisonment, impropriety of—Judge's duty when in his opinion verdict not right.] The case for the prosecution was that the accused who worked at a particular place as reapers of paddy went away on a particular night with a quantity of paddy loaded in two boats belonging to them and accompanied by one K and his son for whom they had worked. K had a boat of his own which was lashed to one of the boats belonging to the accused. The accused reached their place of destination with their boats, but K and his son and their boat were never seen again. The defence was that K and his son did not accompany the accused who went home after finishing their work with their share of the paddy to which they were entitled. The accused were tried on a charge under sec. 396, I. P. C., of committing dacoity with murder and unanimously found guilty by the jury and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment: Held—That circumstantial evidence in order to bring a charge home to an accused person must be such as to show that within all human probability the act alleged must have been done by the accused persons. Here the utmost proved was that the two presumably deceased persons went away with the accused on a windy night in accused's boat of their own free will, having their own boat in attendance and were never seen again, and it was impossible to say from this that they were murdered and the charge of dacoity also failed in the absence of evidence that the paddy did not belong to the accused. The High Court finding that there was no evidence to substantiate the charges acquitted the accused. Held further—That if a Judge accepts a finding of murder there are only two penalties and he has no right to pass inadequate sentences. If he does not believe the verdict is right it is his duty to refer it to the High Court. ARAJATI v. KING-EMPEROR ... 376

set of accused—Complaint against another set in respect of the same occurrence before another Magistrate—Plea of autre fois acquit, if tenable—Magistrate's duty to consider the fact of the previous trial—Omission to do so, effect of.] Under the Code of Criminal Procedure a wide discretion is given to Magistrates with respect to the grant or refusal of process and in the interest of the community generally it is essential that Magistrates should be vested with an ample discretion in this matter. In India where the Grand Jury system does not exist as an additional shield to innocent persons against whom unfounded complaints are laid in a Criminal Court it is specially necessary that caution and discretion should be used in issuing process. An accused person ought not to be dragged off to answer a charge merely because a complaint has been lodged against him. The Magistrate's discretion must be exercised judiciously and if after carrying out the instructions contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure he is of opinion upon the materials before him that a prima facie case has been made out he ought to issue process and in such circumstances he is not entitled to refuse to issue process merely because he thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in a conviction. It is settled practice that if the Magistrate, having followed the procedure laid down in the Code, has exercised a judicial discretion as to whether he ought to issue process or not, the High Court will respect his decision and will be slow to disturb the order that he has passed. Where on a complaint one set of accused persons are tried and acquitted by a Magistrate and subsequently another complaint in respect of the same occurrence is filed before another Magistrate against other persons the plea of autre fois acquit would not be available to the accused in the subsequent case but the fact that other persons accused upon the same facts of having been implicated in the same offence has been acquitted may properly be taken into consideration by the Magistrate in determining whether upon the materials before him there is sufficient ground for issuing process and the Magistrate acts improperly in summoning the accused without paying any regard to what had taken place in the earlier proceedings. SUBAL CHANURA NAMADAS v. CONSPIRACY to commit criminal breach of trust—Only three accused alleged to be conspirators—Acquittal of two and its effect on the other accused—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 120/402. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 108—Security for good behaviour for disseminating matter, publication of which punishable under s. 153A, I. P. C.—Scope of the section—Intention to promote feelings of enmity between classes must be present—More tendency of matter disseminated to promote class hatred not sufficient—Facts not sufficient to prove guilt under sec. 153A, I. P. C., do not justify proceedings for security under sec. 108, Cr. P. C.—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 153A—Internal evidence and meaning of words used, not the only test of intention—Admissibility of other evidence for the purpose—Publication of news having tendency to promote class hatred without such intention not sufficient to bring publisher within the mischief of the section—Scope of restriction put by legislature on liberty of the press.] The Appellant who was the editor of a newspaper called the "Forward" published therein an article headed "Yellow Urdu Leaflet; Attempts at Incitement; Will Mahomedan Leaders Intervene?" in which he animadverted on a pamphlet in Urdu circulated for the benefit of the Mahomedans. In the body of the article an English translation of the pamphlet was printed as also a transliteration in English letters of the original Urdu and it was observed that the pamphlet was being circulated and it was not difficult to trace the source from which it emanated. The Appellant added:—"Let us wait and see what steps the guardians of law and order take in the matter." For this the Appellant was proceeded against under sec. 108, Cr. P. C., and ordered to enter into his own recognizance in the sum of Rs. 500 to be of good behaviour. Held:—That the utmost that is warranted on any view of sec. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that a person comes within its scope if he disseminates matter which reveals an intention to promote feelings of enmity between classes. Where there is no such intention, the mere publication of news which is of such a character that it is possible to suppose that some people reading it may momentarily or foolishly be induced to entertain unreasonable feelings towards a class of other people is not enough to bring it within the mischief either of sec. 153A, I. P. C., or of sec. 108, Cr. P. C. It is not for the Criminal Courts to abandon "intention," the ancient and statutory test and to put in peril of their process persons of innocent intention. If the legislature meant to say that a Magistrate could proceed under sec. 108, Cr. P. C., against any person who was found to have disseminated matter which in the opinion of the Magistrate had a tendency to promote class hatred, it would have said this very plainly in terms very different from those which it has employed. If the person proceeded against under sec. 108 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is innocent under sec. 153A, I. P. C., he does not come under the former section as a person disseminating matter, the publication of which is punishable under sec. 153A, I. P. C. Sec. 108, Cr. P. C., seems to assume that one has only to look at the matter to tell whether its publication is punishable or not. This is broadly true no doubt but it is not the truth and it ill consists with sec. 153A, I. P. C., under which no matter is set aside or classified except with reference to the intention of the particular person accused. Sec. 153A, I. P. C., does not mean that any person who publishes words that have a tendency to promote class hatred can be convicted under that section. The words "promotes or attempts to promote feelings of enmity" are to be read as connoting a successful or unsuccessful attempt to promote feelings of enmity. It must be for the purpose or part of the purpose of the accused to promote such feelings and if it is no part of his purpose, the mere circumstance that there may be a tendency is not sufficient. The internal evidence of the words used and the meaning of the words used will very generally be decisive of the question whether or not the Court is confronted with a successful or unsuccessful attempt to promote feelings of enmity. They will be decisive in all cases where the intention is expressly declared; also if the words used naturally, clearly and indubitably have such a tendency, then it must be presumed that the publisher intended that which is the natural result of the words used. But the words used and their true meaning are never more than evidence of intention and it is the real intention of the accused that is the test. Whether or not the promoting of enmity is the intention is to be collected in most cases from the internal evidence of the words themselves, but other evidence can also be looked at. The explanation to the section shows quite conclusively that in any matter on which other evidence could assist it may be taken. An explanation is not the same as a proviso. The explanation to sec. 153A, I. P. C., cannot be used to enlarge the provisions of the substantive section any more than a proviso can be used to enlarge the provision to which it is a proviso, such things are put in constantly to enable certain classes of people to feel safe that the section will not penalise them if they are acting in a certain manner. Held—That in publishing the article in question the newspaper has given its readers in the ordinary way a perfectly legitimate and sensible piece of news without any intention to utilise that piece of news for the purpose of promoting or furthering class hatred and even assuming the article to have in some sense a tendency to promote ill-feeling in the minds of certain persons, it is quite plain that the editor or the publisher was not attempting to do anything of the sort and the reasonable explanation of the publication of the matter in question was the ordinary desire of the editor to publish a fairly important piece of news likely to be of some genuine interest to reasonable readers. That apart from the fact that the article does not come within the first part of sec. 153A, I. P. C., it is also within the terms of the explanation to that section which prima facie covers it, malice not being imputable without definite and solid reason. Quære.—What is the effect of the amendment of sec. 108, Cr. s. 109—Security for good behaviour—Suspicious persons, liability to prove source of livelihood, if ground for action against—Evidence justifying under (a), (b)—ss. 109 and 118, Cr. P. C. If a person is unable to prove the source of his livelihood he ought not to be ordered to execute a bond under secs. 109 (b) and 118, Cr. P. C., unless there is reasonable ground for suspecting that he is sustaining himself by dishonest means. Passing the time in a certain street to all outward appearances innocently and in a manner void of suspicion would not bring him within the ambit of secs. 109 (b) and 118. If proceedings under sec. 109 (b) are taken against a person because he cannot give a satisfactory account of himself, the Magistrate would not be justified in passing an order under sec. 118, Cr. P. C., merely because he is unable to prove that he spends his time or at least his leisure hours in a satisfactory manner. In such a case the prosecution must satisfy the Magistrate that suspicion that he is living dishonestly attaches to the accused because of his failure to give a satisfactory explanation when called upon to account for his presence in the place where he is found, e.g., if he fails to account for being discovered in the company of persons living a dishonest or criminal life or detected in some place where he has no legal right to be. to be made to High Court.] An order of attachment made under sec. 146, Cr. P. C., can only come to an end under one of two circumstances, viz., where the Magistrate withdraws the order because there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace or where a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties to the proceeding or the person entitled to possession of the subject-matter of dispute. When after the order of attachment was made there were series of litigations between the parties, and the Magistrate vacated his order relying solely on an entry in the finally published record-of-rights: Held—That the entry in the record-of-rights could at best be treated as presumptive evidence of the relation of landlord and tenant existing between the parties but could not be regarded as constituting the final adjudication of a competent Court within the meaning of sec. 146 (1). The High Court set aside the order and directed the ing an alleged obstruction of a pathway the Magistrate immediately ordered a police enquiry but proceedings under sec.

more than three months after and a final order made thereon: Held—That the order under sec. 147 was without jurisdiction.
The word "enquiry" in the proviso has reference to the words "enquire into the matter" in the first paragraph. The enquiry that is contemplated there is enquiry by the Magistrate and not enquiry by the police. Institution of the enquiry into the existence of the likelihood of breach of the peace must precede the enquiry

Under sec. 162 as now amended, statements made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under Chap. XIV shall not be used for any purpose except to contradict a witness at the request of the accused in the manner provided in the second paragraph of the tion made statements to the police supporting the case for the prosecution but although he did not positively draw the attention of the jury to these statements as evidence against the accused, refrained from warning them that these statements

... s. 164—Confession, record of—Investigation under Chap. XIV at the request of the police within whose jurisdiction offence is committed—S. 307, Cr. P. C.] The Sessions Judge of Burdwan disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jurors found the accused guilty of the offence of causing grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation under sec. 335, I. P. Code, and submitted the case to the High Court under sec. 307, Cr. P. Code. The main item of evidence, relied on by the learned Sessions Judge, was the confession made by the accused before a Presidency Magistrate at his residence in Calcutta in the course of an investigation made by the Calcutta police at the request of the Burdwan police. This confession was not taken down in the form prescribed for the Magistrate's guidance in recording confessions. The only warning given to the accused by the Magistrate was that he asked him whether he was willing to make a voluntary confession and that such confession might be used against him without informing him that he was a Magistrate, nor did he put to the accused questions to enable him to find out whether the confession was a voluntary one or not. The confession was taken down in a narrative form. Held—Although the investigation under Chap. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code was being held by the Burdwan police, the accused's arrest in Calcutta and his production before the Magistrate in Calcutta must be considered as something done in the course of and not apart from that investigation which was being held in Burdwan and the officer of the Calcutta police merely lent his services to the Burdwan police who were holding the investigation. The Magistrate was therefore bound to record the confession strictly in compliance with the provisions laid down in sec. 164, Cr. P. Code, and the Rules and Circular Orders issued by High Court. Though he might have given the warning required by the first part of cl. (3) of sec. 164 he had done nothing which he was bound to do under the latter part of that clause. Nor was there such enquiry in the case as was necessary for the Magistrate to make, in order to enable the High Court to form an opinion as to whether the confession was a voluntary one or not apart from the provisions of sec. 164, Cr. P. Code. KING-EMPEROR v. GARIB HARI ... 451

C., the accused cannot be convicted of using a forged document under sec. 471, I. P. C. Secs. 236 and 237, Cr. P. C., do not warrant such a conviction. The offence of abetment of forgery is complete when the document is written and signed but the user is a distinct and different offence for which the accused is entitled to be separately charged. HARUN RASHID v. ... ss. 236, 237—Charge of murder—Conviction for removal of dead body, if legal—Assessors, opinion taken in writing and not orally, not shown to cause miscarriage of justice, if ground for consideration by Privy Council.] Under sec. 237 read with sec. 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a man may be convicted of an offence although there has been no charge in respect of it, if the evidence is such as to establish a charge that might have been made. Where several persons were charged under sec. 302 of the Penal Code with murdering the deceased, and the evidence went to show that several persons had set upon the deceased in a field, and after he had been killed, his corpse was wrapped up in a cloth, placed on a horse and in that way removed, and as regards some of the accused, the Judge was of opinion that the evidence did not sufficiently or definitely prove that they were present at and had taken part in the murder, but on the other hand, he convicted each of them of having removed the body and convicted them of that offence. Held—That they were properly convicted under sec. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code of that offence though they were not formally charged with it. Unless an alleged aberration from the precise directions of the Code of Criminal Procedure is shown to have led to a miscarriage of justice, the point is not one for consideration by the Judicial Committee. BEGU v. ... s. 370—Conviction by a Presidency Magistrate—Omission to record all the particulars required by section, whether an illegality or irregularity when such omission is not of real importance—Reference in recording reasons on re-trial to those recorded on the first occasion, propriety of.] A Presidency Magistrate has not to write a judgment in accordance with the provisions of sec. 367, Cr. P. C. All that he is required to do is to record certain particulars laid down in sec. 370 and in case of conviction and sentence of imprisonment or fine exceeding two hundred rupees, a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. Where the Magistrate did not strictly comply with sec. 370 and did not record the various particulars required to be recorded in the usual way on the printed form provided for the purpose, but the omissions were of no real importance: Held—That the omission to comply with the provisions of sec. 370 was no more than an irregularity and was not an illegality which vitiated the trial. Where the Magistrate in recording reasons under sec. 370 in a re-trial held under orders of the High Court referred to those recorded by him when the case had been tried in the first instance: Held—That since the Magistrate is only required to record brief reasons for the conviction there was no serious objection to his referring to a document on the record instead of taking the trouble to re-write those portions of it which should have been included in his final order. P. C., the Municipal Commissioners later at a meeting passed a resolution sanctioning the prosecution of the accused under the said Act and he was again prosecuted and tried for the same offence: Held—That the previous acquittal of the accused did not operate as a bar to his subsequent trial. There having been no order or consent in writing of the Municipal Commissioners sanctioning the prosecution of the accused for any offence under the Bengal Food Adulteration Act, the prosecution was incompetent and no cognizance could have been taken by any Court of any offence, and as such there could have been no trial of the accused within the meaning of sec. 403, Cr. The remedy of the accused was to move the High Court in its Revisional Jurisdiction. Per Rankin and Chakravarti, JJ.—In making a complaint to himself the Chief Presidency Magistrate adopted a course unknown to the law. s. 526—Transfer of case—Conviction of accused by a Magistrate at previous trial, if ground under sec. 526 for transfer of case pending for re-trial by the same Magistrate—"Expedient for the ends of justice," as used in sec. 526, interpretation of—Re-trial, order of, by High Court, without stating, if re-trial to be held by the same Magistrate or some other Magistrate—Effect of such order.] The question as to whether a trial before a particular Magistrate is expedient for the ends of justice or not has got to be considered from the point of view of the accused person as well, and unless it is impossible to get a Magistrate other than the one who has already convicted the accused person on the same charge at a previous trial, or unless there be circumstances which would necessitate the trial of the same case before the same Magistrate over again, it is desirable that the re-trial should not be held before the same Magistrate. If an order for re-trial is made by the High Court and it is not stated in the order whether the re-trial is to be held by the same Magistrate or by some other Magistrate, then it should not be presumed that it was the intention of the Court to direct that the re-trial should be held by the same Magistrate. CRIMINAL TRIAL—Witness for prosecution acting as interpreter—Impropriety of proceedings vitiating trial.] In a trial on a charge of murder one of the witnesses for the prosecution acted as interpreter and he interpreted the evidence of the witnesses including his own evidence to the accused: Held—That it was a procedure which was absurd from the very outset and opposed to elementary ideas of justice. That a witness who had taken an active part during investigation, who had given evidence in the Committing Magistrate's Court on behalf of the prosecution and who was found to be ready and willing to give evidence in the Sessions Court on behalf of the prosecution against a man who was charged with very serious offences under secs. 302, 304, I. which called forth severe condemnation and was highly irregular, the irregularity being of such a nature as to border on illegality. ALI SOI v. KING-EMPEROR	696	ground that they were inadmissible in evidence: Held—That the statements in question which were at variance with those made before the Magistrate were admissible in evidence and as they were important from the point of view of the defence and the Magistrate had not taken them into consideration in convicting the accused, the conviction and sentence should be set aside. Held—That such a delay as took place in the case was inexcusable having regard to the simple nature of the case and it might easily amount to a denial of justice. Having regard to the circumstances of the case and especially to the fact that the trial extended over more than a year, the High Court did not direct a re-trial. Per Pearson, J. —The evidence was admissible under sec. 155, sub-sec. (3) of the Evidence Act subject only to this that the provisions of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act had been complied with in the matter of putting the specific parts of it which were to be relied upon to the witness in cross-examination. The delay which occurred in the case was only inviting evidence which could not be relied upon. The longer the period allowed to elapse from the time of the event to the time when the witnesses gave evidence the greater the probability of confusion and of the truth being obscured, particularly in a case where the accused happened to be a police officer and the alleged offence arose out of his conduct during the course of his duties. very large way, that her reputation for years had been that of one of the most notorious of cocaine dealers and that she possessed some of the finest equipages in Calcutta and three motor-cars and an exemplary sentence was necessary. It appeared that in the course of the trial various complaints were made by the accused as regards the manner in which the search was conducted and in which she herself was treated, that certain statements obtained from the accused and one of her servants while in custody in the excise barracks were received in evidence and that the opinion of the excise officer as to the reputation of the accused as a dealer in cocaine on a large scale elicited from him by the Magistrate was also admitted in evidence. Held—That the statements in question which could not be considered as voluntary statements should not have been received in evidence. That the Magistrate should not have allowed the excise officer's opinion as to the reputation of the accused to be admitted in evidence. That excluding the inadmissible evidence the residue was enough to justify a conviction, but there being no evidence as to the matters relied on by the Magistrate in passing an exemplary sentence, in fixing which he was influenced by extraneous matters the sentence inflicted was extraordinarily severe and quite uncalled for. That there might be exaggerations in the complaint made by the accused about the manner in which her premises were searched and the way she was treated, but indications were not wanting on the record to show that the search was conducted and the accused detained in an inconsiderate manner. Prosecutions ought to be conducted fairly and squarely and nothing should be done so as to give ground for complaint on the part of the accused. BATASI MONI DASSI v. KING-EMPEROR ... 854

the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to arrest the Petitioner and it was provided in the warrant that if the Petitioner should give bail himself in the sum of ten thousand rupees with two sureties each in the sum of five thousand rupees to attend before the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, and to continue to attend, he may be released. It was alleged that bail was refused on the ground that the Petitioner was not in the opinion of the Deputy Commissioner good for ten thousand rupees and the sureties instead of being examined as to their sufficiency were rejected on the ground that they were not likely to keep the Petitioner under control: Held—That refusal of bail on either of the aforesaid grounds alleged would be an illegal abuse of law not merely on general principles as regards the liberty of the subject but on the face of the Goondas Act itself and on the face of the warrant which is notified for use under the Goondas Act which is in terms of sec. 76 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On such a warrant the business of the officer who fixes the sum of money is to see that he fixes a reasonable sum of money having regard to all the circumstances and that it is not an excessive one and it is sufficient so far as the person under arrest is concerned that he is willing to execute a bond in that sum. As regards the surety offered, when the object is to secure the attendance of person arrested, embarking on a consideration of control over the person arrested (waiving aside the mere question of sufficiency) is an illegal abuse of power on the face of the Goondas Act and the warrant. The Commissioner of Police acting under such a warrant is not acting under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The proceedings are of the executive armed with certain special powers and the High Court can interfere under sec. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by issuing a writ of habeas corpus only when those powers have been exceeded and the person arrested is illegally or improperly detained in public custody. That in the circumstances of the case no illegal detention was made out which could justify the interference of the High Court. BISSESWAR ROY GARIA v. KING-EMPEROR 791 mere fact that the accused persons do not admit their presence at the occurrence and render it unnecessary to give the jury a

PENAL CODE (Act XLV of 1860), s. 197, interpretation of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 253—Government Savings Banks Act (V of 1873) and the rules relating thereto. The certificate given under the rule, viz., that in the case of female depositors withdrawing money from Post Office Savings Bank by their authorised agents under r. 18, the agent must sign a certificate on the application for withdrawal to the effect "Certified that the depositor is on this day alive and sane," is not a certificate prescribed by the Government Savings Banks Act (Act V of 1873) or statutory rules made thereunder and this certificate is not a certificate within the meaning of sec. 197, I. P. C. Per Suhrawardy, J.—The word "certificate" occurring in sec. 197, I. P. C., contemplates a certificate which is required by law to be given or signed for the purpose of being used in evidence in the course of administration of justice. BIRENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE v. UMANANDA MUKHERJEE ... 120

... s. 304—Causing death by rash and negligent act—Criminal rashness, criminal negligence, what is—Road closed to traffic for repairs—Coolies sleeping on closed road at night—Driving a motor car into the closed road and running over coolies, if rash and negligent act.] Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury but without intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge arises, was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. A person driving at night a motor car along a portion of a road which was closed to traffic for repairs cannot be reasonably expected to take precautions against the chance of coolies sleeping on that portion. Two coolies who were so sleeping with their bodies covered except for their faces having been run over and killed by the accused driving over them in a motor car in the above circumstances, the latter could not be held

... s. 339—Exception, accused in revisional stage, if can claim benefit of, when he did not raise the defence under the Exception in the lower Courts—Dispute of civil nature, propriety of trial by Criminal Court.] A person accused of an offence under sec. 341, I. P. C., for obstruction of a way by raising a wall, did not raise the defence that he was entitled to the Exception to sec. 339, I. P. C., and denied having raised the wall. But at the same time he contended that the wall which had been raised was on his own land: Held—That the dispute between the parties was evidently one which could be better determined in the Civil than in the Criminal Court. In the present case the obstruction put up by the accused having been put up in good faith in the belief that he had a lawful right to obstruct the complainant from going along the path, he was entitled to the benefit of the Exception to sec. 339, I. P. C., though he did not clearly raise that defence in the lower Courts. KALIDAS RAHA v. DEODHARI MISTRI ... 192

... s. 362—Kidnapping—Elements necessary to constitute the offence.] In order to support a conviction for kidnapping from lawful guardianship the following are the points requiring proof—(1) That the person kidnapped was then a minor under sixteen years of age if a female. (2) That such person was in the keeping of a lawful guardian. (3) That the accused took or enticed such person out of such keeping. (4) That he did so without the consent of the lawful guardian. The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardian's keeping. But if the minor abandons her guardian with no intention of returning she cannot be held to continue in the guardian's keeping: Held, on a consideration of the circumstances of the case—That the offence of kidnapping was not made out. R. W. VALLIANT v. MRS. ELEAZAR ... 215

... s. 379—Theft, charge of, not maintainable when object of theft admittedly in possession of accused.] Where it appeared that certain trees which were the subject of the charge of theft stood on the holding in the possession of the accused: Held—That the charge of theft could not stand because the offence under sec. 379, I. P. C., is an offence against possession. SHEIKH GARIB HAJI v. MUCHIRAM SHAHA ... 359

to—Recusal of Governor-General to transfer case to another Province—Violation of natural justice.] The rule in Dillet's case that the King in Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal and will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done—was re-affirmed. A question whether the trial Judge had properly explained sec. 111 of the Penal Code is one for a Court of Criminal Appeal and not one for consideration by the Judicial Committee. The refusal by the Governor-General of India to transfer the case for trial to another Province on the alleged ground that there had been such copious and prejudicial newspaper comment on the crime committed that a fair trial by a local jury was impossible cannot be challenged before the Judicial Committee as a violation of the principles of natural justice. SHAFI AHMED NABI AHMAD v. KING-EMPEROR ... 557		—Magistrate's power in this respect—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 45, iii. (c)—Opinion of expert on comparison of thumb impression.] The Respondent was prosecuted under sec. 82 of the Registration Act for having falsely personated another woman at the time of the registration of a document purporting to have been executed by the latter. Under orders of the trying Magistrate the Respondent's thumb impression was taken by an expert and compared with that on the document in question and relying on the evidence of the expert that the two tallied and were totally different from the thumb impression of the woman whom the Respondent had personated, the Magistrate convicted the accused but the Sessions Judge on appeal set aside the conviction and the local Government appealed: Held—That sec. 5 of Act XXXIII of 1920 authorised the Magistrate to direct the thumb impression to be taken in the manner in which it was done and illustration (c) to sec. 45 of the Evidence Act makes it abundantly clear that in a case like the present the opinion of the expert formed by comparison of the various thumb impressions referred to is admissible in evidence. The procedure adopted by the Magistrate was therefore in strict accordance with law. The High Court in setting aside the acquittal directed, upon a consideration of the circumstances of the case, that the Respondent should be released under sec. 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code on her entering into a bond with surety to appear and receive sentence when called upon within one year. THE CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES.

REPORTS.

PRIVY COUNCIL,
[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD DUNEDIN.

LORD ATKINSON.

MR. ANNEER ALI.

LORD SALVESSEN.

Heard, 3, 4 and 6, November.

11, December.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 160, 161—Permanent tenure, nature of tenant's interest—Tenant's duty to protect himself from illegal encroachment—Trespasser acquiring title to lands of tenancy by adverse possession against tenant—Tenant, if may claim abatement of rent against landlord—Stipulation by tenant not to claim abatement of rent, if binds purchaser at rent-sale—Failure of landlord to give tenant possession of all land leased, when ground for suspension of rent—Tenancy at lump rental and at a rate per bigha, difference between.

The tenant under a permanent and transferable lease held at a fixed rent virtually becomes the proprietor of the surface of the lands subject only to the payment of the stipulated rent, and the lessor and the succeeding landlords have no interest in the lands except in so far as they form a security for the payment of rent. The purchaser of the tenure at a rent sale acquires title to the lands on the terms of the original lease unaffected by any incumbrances created by previous tenants, not being a protected interest within secs. 160, 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The duty of a tenant under such a perpetual tenure is to protect himself against illegal encroachment by others on the lands of which he has exclusive possession. If he fails to do so, he cannot prejudice the landlord's claim for rent.

WOMESH CHUNDER GOOPTO v. RAJ NARAIN ROY (1) referred to.

Where a purchaser of such a tenure at a rent sale suffered a person who at the date of the purchase was in adverse possession of some lands of the tenure to remain in such possession for the statutory period:

Held—That the purchaser could not claim an abatement of rent against the landlord in respect of the land the possession whereof he lost by his own neglect.

The doctrine of suspension of payment of rent, where the tenant has not been put in possession of part of the subject leased, has been applied where the rent was a lump rent for the whole land leased treated as an indivisible subject. It has no application to a case where the stipulated rent is so much per acre or bigha.

The Judicial Committee accepted the soundness of the long and consistent body of judicial decisions referred to in the judgment under appeal [UDOY KUMAR v. KATYANI (2)] denying the validity of the argument that a trespasser, being liable to ejectment by the lessor, acquires title by limitation against the lessor as well as the tenant and that when this happens the tenant is entitled to an abatement of rent.

Quere.—Whether a compromise by a former landlord and the tenant under which the latter stipulated not to apply for abatement on any ground whatever in respect of the area then found on measurement to be in their occupation would necessarily bind a purchaser of the tenure at a rent sale.

(2) 1 L. R. 49 Cal. 948 (1932).

SRIMATI KATYAYANI DEBI v. UDOY KUMAR DAS.

These were consolidated appeals (Nos. 134 and 135 of 1923) from two decrees of the High Court of Bengal, dated the 27th February 1922, which varied two decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 24th July 1919.

The suits were instituted by the Respondent as landlord against the Appellant his tenant to recover arrears of rent.

The Defendant contended that she was never put in possession of the whole of the demised premises and claimed an abatement of rent.

The facts so far as material to this appeal were as follows :—

In 1878, S. N. Tagore, the predecessor-in-interest of the Respondent granted a reclamation lease on a mourasi mukurari tenure of 3,800 bighas of land to Banerjee and Sarkar the predecessors-in-interest of the Appellant. The lands comprised several mouzas including Daskati, with the exception of 61 acres. This latter estate was purchased on behalf of the Appellant's husband H. C. Chaudhuri at a revenue sale in 1875.

Ten years later Chaudhuri purchased an under-tenure in Daskati, and in 1888 he dispossessed the original grantees from the whole of that mouza.

The interest of Banerjee and Sarkar was purchased by Nilkantha Singh at an execution sale in 1889 and when Nilkantha Singh in his turn failed to pay his rent a further execution sale took place in 1894 at which the present Appellant became the purchaser of his tenure.

From 1894 until the institution of the present suits in 1917 the Appellant had paid to the landlord the entire rent fixed.

The area in respect of which rent was now claimed was 5,161 bighas. The Defendant contended that she was entitled to a suspension of rent on the ground that she had been dispossessed by the Plaintiff of certain land included in the tenancy, and that she was entitled to an abatement of rent for portions of the land which did not form part of the tenancy, and of which her husband had been in possession.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the abatement claimed and on appeal the High Court (Woodroffe and Cuming, JJ.) delivered separate judgments differing from each other. The former held that the Defendant was entitled to the abatement of rent, the latter that she was not so entitled.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge was accordingly confirmed under sec. 98 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

The Plaintiff appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and the Court (Mookerjee, Newbould and Pearson, JJ.) decided in his favour.

For the judgments in appeal vide Uday Kumar v. Katyani (2).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid for the Appellant.—The claim is for arrears of rent but there can be no arrears of rent unless the area of the property leased is specific. The original lease provided for an assumed number of bighas within defined boundaries. The Appellant has not had title in those boundaries, and an area of 61 bighas therein was the property of her husband. She was entitled to be put in possession of the whole lands contained in the original lease free from all incumbrances.

It was not the duty of the Appellant but of her landlord to eject the trespasser.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondent.—The rent has been paid by the Appellant until 1913 and any rights acquired by her husband were not in violation of the lessor's title, moreover the Appellant had power to annul any incumbrance on the holding.

Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885, secs. 159, 161 and 167.

A statutory title by 12 years' possession is an incumbrance within the meaning of the Act, and it was the duty of the Appellant to protect herself against any encroachment by a trespasser.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SALVESEN.—This is an appeal from the High Court of Judicature in Bengal in two actions for arrears of rent brought by the Respondent against the Appellant. The Respondent is the successor in title to a certain Tagore, who, on the 27th November 1878, granted a reclamation lease of certain lands which were then lying waste and in a state of jungle, at a rate which fell to be calculated at 13 annas per bigha of the area embraced in the lease. Since the date of the lease the greater part of the area has been brought under cultivation and has been in the possession of several successive tenants. The Appellant acquired the tenant's rights in the lands as a purchaser at a sale in execu-

For the purposes of this appeal, in which a single question of importance has been raised, it is only necessary to consider the state of matters at the time of the Appellant's purchase, which took place in 1894. The Appellant then obtained possession of the whole lands within the boundaries mentioned in the lease with two exceptions—(1) a small area of 61 acres or thereby to which her husband had established a paramount title dating from 1875 against the original lessor, and (2) a much larger area of which her husband had taken possession without any title some six years previously and of which he had continued to hold possession, notwithstanding certain efforts by the previous tenant to eject him.

From 1894 until the first of the two suits now under consideration was raised in 1917 the Appellant paid without objection the rent of Rs. 4,300 which had been fixed as between the prior lessee and the then landlord, to be the rent due under the lease in question. In her defence to this suit the Appellant contended that she was entitled to an abatement of rent in respect of such portions of the area embraced within the boundaries of the lease of which she was not actually in possession. It was conceded that she is entitled to an abatement of rent applicable to the 61 acres above referred to, and this has been allowed by the judgment under appeal. The controversy that still remains to be determined is whether she is entitled to a corresponding abatement in respect of the much larger area which her husband continued to possess and which is now possessed by his representatives.

The lease which is evidenced by the kabuliyat of 27th November 1878, is of a kind which is familiar in the province of Bengal. As it expressly bears, it is permanent and transferable, and at a fixed rent. The tenant under such a lease virtually becomes the proprietor of the surface of the lands subject only to the payment of the stipulated rent, and the lessor and succeeding landlords have no interest in the lands except in so far as they form a security for payment of the rent. When the rent falls into arrear the landlord's only remedy is to bring the tenure to sale by public auction on the execution of a decree for payment of rent. The purchaser of the tenure, as has now been settled by a long series of authorities in the Indian Courts, which are enumerated in the learned and exhaustive judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee, acquires title to the lands on the terms of the original lease unaffected by any incumbrances created by previous tenants. An incumbrance is defined by sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as any "right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein, and not being a protected interest." There is no question in this case of any protected interest but only of such right as the Appellant's late husband may have acquired in respect of his possession of a portion of the lands embraced in the lease for a period exceeding 12 years.

At the date when the Appellant acquired the lease by purchase only six years of adverse possession by her husband had run against the former tenant. It is admitted that she could immediately have put an end to this tortious possession by her husband on her purchasing the tenure. She did not do so, but allowed him to continue in possession, so that it may be assumed that he and his heirs have acquired by limitation an absolute right as against the present tenant to continue in possession.

The case for the Appellant is that this right which her husband has acquired against her is also good against the respondent as in right of the landlord's interest under the lease. It was argued that the lessor had a title to eject the trespasser and that, if he did not do so, the trespasser obtained a title by limitation against him as well as against the tenant and that, as the latter is now deprived of the possession of the lands, she is entitled, in a question with the landlord, to an abatement of rent. There is a long and consistent body of authority to the opposite effect in India, and although the matter has not been made the subject of direct decision by this Board their Lordships see no ground for doubting the soundness of the decisions referred to in the judgment of the High Court.

The duty of a tenant under a perpetual tenure such as the one in question is to protect himself against illegal encroachments by others on the lands of which he has the exclusive possession. If he fails to do so he cannot prejudice the landlord's claim for rent. The considerations which appear to their Lordships to be conclusive are those stated by Peacock, C. J., in Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (1) and connected appeal, and which are quoted in the judgment of the High Court. It has also been pointed out in other judgments that the landlord cannot in the ordinary case know whether the possession of a particular area of land is adverse to the tenant or has taken place with his consent. He could not therefore safely sue an action at his own hand for ejectment of a trespasser, as he might always be met with the objection that the apparent trespass was acquiesced in by the tenant, who can deal with the lands as he pleases.

On the assumption that the High Court

(1) 10 W. R. 15 (1868)

has correctly stated the law applicable, the Appellant nevertheless maintained that, under the terms of the particular kabuliyat, she was entitled to succeed. The clause quoted is in the following terms:—

"Should any dispute about the boundaries given below arise with any malik we will report it to you and you will investigate it. If through neglect we lose hold of any land, we will be answerable and will compensate you for the same."

The latter part of the clause, which in their Lordships' judgment is directly applicable to the present case, is adverse to the Appellant's contention. It was entirely through her own neglect that she lost possession of the lands now occupied for more than 12 years of her own tenancy by her husband. So far as these lands were concerned he was a mere trespasser, and it is of no consequence whether a trespasser is a malik or holds some inferior position. With regard to the earlier part of the clause it may be held to cover the dispute with regard to the 61 acres of land that have been duly investigated and in respect of which an abatement of rent corresponding to the area has been made. The further contention (which was but faintly maintained) that as this plot of land was originally embraced within the boundaries of the tenure and that the Appellant has not been put in possession of same, she is entitled to suspend payment of the rent of the remaining area, was decided adversely to the Appellant in all the lower Courts, and their Lordships see no reason for differing from their judgments. The doctrine of suspension of payment of rent, where the tenant has not been put in possession of part of the subject leased, has been applied where the rent was a lump sum for the whole land leased treated as an indivisible subject. It has no application to a case where the stipulated rent is so much per acre or bigha.

So far their Lordships are in entire agreement with the judgment of the High Court, and this is sufficient for the disposal of the case.

An alternative ground of judgment is based upon a settlement which took place between the former landlord and tenants of the lands in question, under which a compromise was arrived at to the effect that the tenants should not be entitled to apply for abatement of rent on any ground whatever in respect of the area of 4,300 bighas then found to be the measurement in their occupation. Their Lordships are not, at present, satisfied that such an agreement between the lessor and the former tenants would necessarily be binding on a purchaser of the tenure at an auction sale, but, as the point is unnecessary to the decision of the case, they refrain from expressing any opinion upon it.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SETH MOTILAL HIRABHAI
and ors., Appellants,

v.

BAI MANI,
Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47—Decree for redemption—Whether certain new shares were issues of pledged shares within the meaning of the decree, a question for the executing Court—

Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec 163—Accession to bailed goods

H obtained a decree for redemption of certain pledged shares "together with all the issues thereof," and applied for execution thereof by transfer to H of certain newly allotted shares which H claimed to be accessions to the pledged shares:

Held—That the question to be determined depended upon considerations which necessarily were connected with the original case and was therefore a matter which the executing Court was fully competent to go into under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

That having regard to sec. 163 of the Contract Act the newly allotted shares were "issues" of the pledged shares and recoverable as such.

This was an appeal (No. 139 of 1923) from a decree, dated the 6th September 1921, of the High Court at Bombay, affirming an order of the Subordinate Court at Ahmedabad, dated the 28th September 1918, made in execution proceedings of a redemption decree passed in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent.

In 1883, 48 shares of Rs. 1,000 each and 48 shares of Rs. 500 each in the Ahmedabad Ginning and Manufacturing Company stood in the name of Girdharlal, the father of the present Plaintiff Bai Mani. In 1883 there were disputes between Achratlal and Girdharlal as to the ownership of the shares, the former alleging that the latter was his benamidar. The disputes were settled by arbitration and each party was entered as the owner of 24 shares of Rs. 1,000 and of 24 shares of Rs. 500 subject to certain conditions.

Shortly afterwards Girdharlal pledged 5 shares of Rs. 1,000 and 5 shares of Rs. 500 with Achratlal for Rs. 7,500. Achratlal died in 1886 and the Appellants are his trustees and representatives.

In 1886 the Company issued "B" shares one of Rs. 1,000 to every holder of a Rs. 1,000 share and one of Rs. 500 to every holder of a Rs. 500 share.

Achratlal's trustees remained in possession of the shares pledged by Girdharlal and received also the "B" shares issued in respect of them.

In 1913 a suit was instituted by Girdharlal's heir against Achratlal's trustees for redemption of the pledged shares and the "B" shares issued in respect of them.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for redemption of the mortgaged shares and their "issues" on payment of a sum amounting to about Rs. 12,000 and that decree was confirmed on appeal in 1917.

On the 20th February 1918 the present Respondent applied for execution of the decree and tendered the decretal amount.

The trustees admitted her right to the "A" shares in the Company and their "issues" but denied her right to the "B" shares submitting that they were not the subject either of the mortgage or of the redemption suit.

Both Courts in India decided in favour of the Plaintiff.

The trustees appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.—The question as to the right to the "B" shares cannot be raised in an application such as the present application under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

The only thing that can be recovered in execution is something which was the subject-matter of the decree. The "B" shares were not mentioned in the plaint nor in the issues and were not taken into consideration in the decree.

The shares did not in law belong to Girdharlal and he cannot therefore claim any accretion of sub-shares.

SETH MOTILAL HIRABHAI v. BAI MANI.

In re Piercey (1).

There are admittedly others who may have a claim to the shares and there is not sufficient material to decide their various rights on an application of this kind.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Parikh for the Respondent.—The suit is by the mortgagor and no question arises as to the ownership of the shares or the rights of 3rd parties and no such decision is desired in this application.

The contention that the "B" shares are not included in the relief desired is incorrect. The "B" shares bear the same numbers as the "A" shares and the Appellants themselves refer to the "B" shares as "Bachan" or issues of the "A" shares.

The decrees and pleadings are at least ambiguous and the question can be raised under sec. 47 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Any accession to the mortgaged property goes to the mortgagor.

Sec. 163, Contract Act, 1872.

Sec. 63, Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

The decision whether a dividend or bonus shares are to be regarded as capital or income rests with the Company, and the resolutions of the Company show that their intention in the present case was to increase their capital.

Mr. E. B. Raikes replied.

out of proceedings in execution of a decree made by the Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad on the 28th September 1915, which was affirmed by the High Court of Bombay on the 26th June 1917.

The circumstances that gave rise to this litigation are simple. It appears that one Achratlal had purchased 48 shares of Rs. 1,000 each and 48 sub-shares at Rs. 500 each issued by a Company which carried on business in Ahmedabad under the name of the Ahmedabad Ginning and Manufacturing Company. The purchase was made in the name of a person named Girdharlal Daltat Ram. This Girdharlal was the nephew of a woman called Bai Gulab, who is said to have been under the protection of Achratlal. In the year 1883 a controversy arose between Achratlal and Girdharlal as to the real ownership of the 48 Rs. 1,000 shares and the 48 Rs. 500 sub-shares. Achratlal alleged that Girdharlal was only his benamidar and that in fact he was the real beneficial owner of the said shares. The contest was settled between Achratlal and Girdharlal on the 18th July 1883. On that date an agreement was entered into by which it was agreed that 24 shares of Rs. 1,000 each and 24 sub-shares of Rs. 500 each were to be transferred to Achratlal under certain conditions. The remaining 24 shares of Rs. 1,000 and the 24 sub-shares of Rs. 500 were allowed to remain in the name of Girdharlal, subject to the following among other conditions:—

"That during the lifetime of Achratlal and Gulab, Girdharlal should not sell or mortgage the same without their consent, (2) that out of the amount to be received by Girdharlal as the dividend in respect thereof (excluding such shares as might have been sold with their consent) he was to retain for himself Rs. 1,100 and hand over the balance, if any, to Achratlal and Gulab or the survivor of them, and (3) that after the death of both of those persons the shares were to belong to Girdharlal absolutely."

SETH MOTILAL HIRABHAI v. BAI MANI.

Shortly after the settlement Girdharlal appears to have got into financial difficulties and in September 1883, Achratlal advanced him Rs. 7,500 without interest on the pledge by Girdharlal of five shares out of the 24 shares that had been allotted to him in his own right, consisting of Nos. 260-270 each of Rs. 1,000 and five sub-shares of Rs. 500 each corresponding thereto. These shares, which were pledged to Achratlal, were transferred to his name as mortgagee or pledgee thereof. Achratlal died two years after. Before his death, on the 12th February 1885, Achratlal appointed by his Will certain trustees, five in number, to carry out the directions of his Will; one of these trustees was Bai Gulab.

In 1886 the Company passed certain special resolutions to the effect that its capital should be increased by the issue of 350 shares of Rs. 1,000 and 350 sub-shares of Rs. 500, to be called "B" shares. And it was provided that those of the present share-holders who had a whole share of Rs. 1,000 should be given one whole share of Rs. 1,000 of the "B" capital, and similarly with regard to the half-share. The second resolution provided:—

"That if in respect of these shares, a call be required to be made, the same be made in this manner that a call of half of the amount of the call which would be made in respect of a whole share, is made in the case of a half-share of Rs. 500."

The third resolution was as follows:—

"That until all the calls in respect of the 'B' capital are completed (? paid up), the dividend which is distributed every six months out of the earnings (? profits) be distributed on this understanding that a sum is to be deducted for depreciation in accordance with the provisions of the deed and a portion representing two annas (in the rupee), out of the actual (? net) earnings, is to be set apart for the Reserve (fund) and the remaining amount is to be distributed among the present shareholders as dividend."

The fourth resolution is in these terms:—

"That at the time of the declaration of the dividend as stated in the above clause, there should be an understanding that interest (? dividend) at the rate of (i.e., amounting to) 6 per cent. is to be paid to the shareholders in cash and that the remainder is to be entered and acknowledged in the share certificate (as paid) on account of call."

Girdharlal appears to have been unable to carry out his obligation under the agreement of 1883, and had not paid to Bai Gulab the dividends he had undertaken to pay her out of the income of the shares he had pledged to Achratlal, and accordingly an arrangement was entered into between him and the trustees of Achratlal under which they advanced him a sum of Rs. 4,439, out of which they paid the dividends to Bai Gulab and debited Girdharlal with the amount thereof. The trustees have remained in possession of the shares pledged with Achratlal collecting the dividends and paid the value to Bai Gulab as provided in the old arrangement. They appear also to have received the "B" shares which were issued under the resolutions adopted in September 1886, by the directors of the Company.

It is unnecessary to refer to certain other arrangements which were entered into between Girdharlal and Bai Gulab and the trustees as they do not bear directly on the present controversy.

Girdharlal died in 1892. The Plaintiff in the suit before the High Court, who is the present Respondent, is his daughter and heiress. She brought a suit in 1913 in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad against the five trustees of Achratlal's Will, including Bai Gulab, for the redemption of the pledged shares "together with all the issues thereof that there may be at present."

defence to the Plaintiff's action raised various questions which were decided by the High Court in the decision arrived at in 1917. No reference was made by the trustees in their defence to the "B" shares which they had obtained from the Company and which they held at the time, nor was any specific reference made to these "B" shares in the judgments of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court.

On the 20th February 1918, the Respondent, Girdharlal's daughter, applied to the Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad for the execution of the decree passed in her favour on the 28th September 1915, and which as already stated was affirmed by the High Court in June 1917. Her application was to the effect that the trustees might be ordered to transfer to her the said five shares mentioned in the decree bearing Nos. 266-270, "together with all sorts of 'Bachan' (issues) appertaining to the same," and she brought to the Court the amount she was directed to pay for the redemption of the mortgaged shares.

The trustees admitted that she was entitled to redeem the "A" shares bearing Nos. 266-270 and their "Bachan" existing at the time of the mortgage, but denied her right to the "B" shares.

Bai Gulab died during the course of these proceedings, and one Harilal, who styled himself the trustee of Bai Gulab, was placed on the record on the 18th July 1918. His case is that he was by virtue of Bai Gulab's right entitled to the "B" shares as representing dividends to which she was entitled in her life-time.

On this state of facts two questions arose for determination in the Courts in India. First, whether the Plaintiff was entitled to proceed under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or whether she was bound to bring a separate action for the relief she was seeking. Secondly, whether the "B" shares which were held by the trustees were in fact the "Bachan" of the original shares called "A" shares. Both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court have held that the Plaintiff was entitled to proceed under sec. 47 and that in fact the "B" shares were included in her original claim as "accretions" to the "A" shares, the word "issue" being wide enough to cover the claim.

On appeal before His Majesty in Council the contentions advanced by the trustees have been repeated with some force. In their Lordships' opinion the sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to above covers fully the present controversy. The section runs thus:—

"All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit."

Every matter relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree has thus to be dealt with in the execution proceedings. The new sub-section, which runs thus:—

"The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court fees," gives to the Court the power of converting an application into a suit or a suit into an application. It is not necessary, however, to lay stress on this particular provision, as the first section abundantly covers the question in debate.

The question is whether or not by the word "Bachan" the "B" shares are included in the claim. The object of the proceeding is to have this question determined upon considerations which necessarily are connected with the original case.

SETH MOTILAL HIRABHAI v. BAI MANI.

In that view the application appears to their Lordships to be fully competent under sec. 47. The main question, however, remains, viz., whether the Plaintiff is entitled to redeem the "B" shares. It has been objected that in the present proceedings the rights of Bai Gulab cannot be properly adjudicated. In their Lordships' opinion any declaration made in these proceedings cannot affect the right (if any) of Bai Gulab to the shares in dispute. It is quite competent for her personal representative, she having died, to bring an action for the ascertainment of her rights. But it is equally clear that the mortgagees have no right to withhold the "B" shares from the Plaintiff. The Ginning and Manufacturing Company compulsorily capitalised the excess profits after payment of dividends of 6 per cent. The Company was perfectly competent to make such capitalisation and there is nothing to show that it was invalid in any way. These shares were received by the trustees, as arising out of and appertaining to the original "A" shares, and it is impossible to contend that the right to these shares could be differentiated from the right to the "A" shares. It has been objected that the word "accretion" applied by the Subordinate Judge and the High Court in respect of the "B" shares does not apply to moveable property. It may be that the word "accretion" is not quite appropriate to moveable property. But sec. 163 of the Indian Contract Act (Act (IX of 1872) is clear on the point. It declares :—

"In the absence of any contract to the contrary, the bailee is bound to deliver to the bailor, or according to his directions, any increase or profit which may have accrued from the goods bailed."

These shares are clearly accessions to the shares expressly pledged or hypothe-cated, and the pledgor or his representative, the present Plaintiff, is entitled to recover the same.

Mr. Justice Shah, one of the Judges in the Appellate Court, in a well balanced judgment has held as follows :—

"It is clear that the old shares carried with them the right to the allotment of the new shares. For instance, it is difficult to hold that if the shares had not been mortgaged and transferred to Achratlal and had continued in the name of Girdharlal, the new shares could have been or should have been issued to Achratlal as part of the profits of the old shares, and it is not suggested on behalf of the Defendants that in respect of the remaining 19 shares or such of them as continued in the name of Girdharlal, the trustees of Achratlal have or could have claimed the shares of the new capital 'B' issued to Girdharlal as part of the dividends which were claimable by them under the settlement. The right to be allotted the new shares went with the old shares; and I find nothing on the record to support the view that the new shares formed part of the dividends in respect of the old shares. The evidence as to how the calls were received is not clear; but it seems to me to be a fair inference under the circumstances that the profits of the Company were capitalised and that the new shares were allotted to the holders of the old shares as part of the capital and did not represent the dividends on the old shares. At any rate the trustees have produced no evidence to show that that is not the correct inference. On the contrary their own statement of the profits received shows that the new shares were not treated as part of the dividends received on the old shares."

Their Lordships concur generally with the conclusions arrived at by the High Court, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Per BUCKLAND, J.—Sub-r. (4) of Or. 21, r. 50 is intended to apply to persons against whose property execution is sought under sub-r. (2).

Per CURLIAM.—Lunacy of a partner does not ipso facto dissolve a partnership. It provides a ground for dissolution and if there has been no dissolution in fact by reason of the lunacy of a partner, the partnership must be deemed to continue.

Sec. 264 of the Contract Act preserves, as against persons known to have been partners, the rights of persons who have dealt with the firm subsequently to the dissolution of the partnership or change of partners without notice of such dissolution or change. The application of the section is not confined to persons who had dealings with the partnership before the dissolution.

This was an appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, dated the 24th August 1924, passed in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear in the judgment.

Sir B. C. Mitter, Messrs. S. N. Banerjee and N. C. Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. K. Ghose and P. C. Ghose for the added Respondent.

Sir B. C. Mitter for the Appellants.—The decree was against a firm. Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was not served with the writ of summons nor did he enter appearance in his own name, nor was there any adjudication in the suit as to whether he was a partner. Such a decree can be executed only against the property of the partnership and not against any personal property in the hands of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, or his sons and legal representatives.

Or. 21, r. 50 (4) specifies what properties are available in execution of a decree against a firm and that is only partnership property, unless a summons to appear and answer was served upon a partner. No summons to appear and answer was served upon Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya. Therefore the decree cannot be executed against premises No. 90, Raja Nobo Kissen Street.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If a decree against the firm cannot be executed against the personal property of a partner, then the object of a trial of issue under Or. 21, r. 50 (2) is rendered nugatory.]

Sir B. C. Mitter.—Circumstances may happen in which property may be in the hands of a person who was connected with a firm, but denies partnership. In such a case a trial of issue under Or. 21, r. 50 (2) is necessary and on such a person being adjudicated a partner, that property would be available in execution as partnership property.

No leave was taken under Or. 21, r. 50 (2). Even if it was applied for, it ought not to have been granted as the liability of Kush Chandra is disputed in this case. In any case the Appellants ought to have been served with summons and given an opportunity to meet an application for leave under r. 50 (2).

"Summons to appear and answer" in Or. 21, r. 50 (4) means the writ of summons and in the absence of such a writ being served upon Kush Chandra, the present application for execution should have been dismissed. Sub-r. (4) controls the rest of Or. 21, r. 50.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—How are you prejudiced? What additional advantage could you have derived in case of being served with a writ of summons in this suit?]

Sir B. C. Mitter.—If I had been served with a writ of summons in this suit, I could have contested the Plaintiff's claim, and could have urged that the suit was bad, e.g., on the ground of limitation or insufficient stamp on the promissory note. I cannot do that at a trial of issue under Or. 21, r. 50 (2). Cites Davis v. Hyman (2).

The suit was bad ab initio. Under Or. 30, r. 1, a firm can be sued, if it was subsisting at the time of the accruing of the cause of action. In this case the cause of action arose at the earliest in March 1921. The partnership was dissolved on Kush Chandra becoming a lunatic in 1914, or, at the latest, in March 1919 when Kush Chandra's wife dissolved the partnership by notice to the other partner. A decree has been passed on the 19th June 1924 in a suit for dissolution of the partnership on the basis of the aforesaid notice of March 1919.

Lunacy of Kush Chandra in 1914 ipso facto dissolved the partnership. The law is different in India. Contract by a lunatic is voidable under the English law, but is void under the Indian law. Cited Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (3) and sec. 11, Contract Act. The implied agency of a partner is revoked on the lunacy of the co-partner (sec. 251 and sec. 201 of the Contract Act). In any event the lunatic's personal estate should not be liable for the debts of the partnership on the analogy of an infant (see sec. 247, Contract Act).

Mr. B. K. Ghose for the added Respondent Mahomed Fateh Mahomed, the assignee of the decree-holder Gunny, Hajee Ahmed, argued that Or. 21, r. 50, is in its genesis, a crude and careless adaptation of Or. 48, r. 8. R. S. C. Taking the rule as it stands, however, it has to be construed, if possible, so as to give a reasonable meaning to it. The construction suggested by the learned Counsel for the Appellants would make the rule utterly meaningless. It would moreover serve to defeat the beneficial provisions in regard to suits by or against firms in the name of the firm. It would be absurd to suggest that the Plaintiff in such a case must, at the initial stage of the suit, finally make up his mind as to how he would proceed in executing the decree in the suit if and when he succeeds in getting it. Or. 21, r. 50 (2) clearly contemplates a case where the decree-holder wants to proceed against a person, other than a partner who has been individually served with the summons and against property other than the partnership assets. Davis v. Hyman (2) does not help the Appellants' case. The word summons in Or. 21, r. 50 (4) can be interpreted only as referring to a summons or notice to appear and answer the application under Or. 21, r. 50 (2). It cannot refer to the writ of summons at the time of instituting the suit. The practice with regard to applications under Or. 21, r. 50 (2) is not quite settled. I must admit that in the present case there has been an irregularity. The application ought properly to have been made on summons to the Respondents under Or. 21, r. 50 (4) to appear and answer the application for execution against the personal property of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, as being a partner of the Defendant firm. However, a notice was in fact served on them although as under Or. 21, r. 22 (1) (a) (b), which specified all the particulars.

There has not been the slightest prejudice to the Appellants. In point of fact they appeared and contested the issue whether Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was liable as a partner of the firm. They never took any objection as to any irregularity in the notice. [Referred to sec. 99 of the Civil Procedure Code.]

Lunacy ipso facto does not dissolve a partnership whether in this country or in England. It can only afford a ground for dissolution. [Cited sec. 254, Indian Contract Act; sec. 35, English Partnership Act; Jones v. Noy (4).] Whether a lunatic's contract in this country is void or voidable is immaterial for the purposes of this case. The analogy of an infant however does not seem to be quite applicable in the case of a lunatic. The question is one as to the liability of a principal who subsequently becomes a lunatic, as regards third persons contracting through the agent of such principal without having any knowledge of the lunacy. The law of partnership is in its essence only an application of the law of agency. [Cited Drew v. Nunn (5); secs. 201, 208, Indian Contract Act.] The minutes show that Counsel has admitted before the trial Court that the Plaintiff knew that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner of the firm before lunacy. Assuming even that there has been a dissolution whether in 1914 or in 1919, there is no suggestion that any public notice has been given or that the Plaintiff had in fact any knowledge of such dissolution. The matter is quite concluded by sec. 264 of the Indian Contract Act and the Plaintiff cannot be affected by such dissolution at all. Therefore there is no question remaining which requires to be tried on evidence.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee.—I shall rely on Giovani Gorio v. Vallabhdas Kalianji (6). The Plaintiff does not come within the sec. 264 of the Contract Act as there is nothing to show that he used to deal with the firm prior to its dissolution.

Mr. B. K. Ghose (continuing).—The observations of Beaman, J., in Gorio v. Vallabhdas (6) are merely obiter dicta, which moreover are entirely unwarranted by the language of the sections. Notice is required even in the case of a new customer, that is, one dealing with the firm for the first time after the dissolution. In the case of an old customer, however, mere public notice is not sufficient and an express notice will be necessary. [Cited Chundee Churn Dutt v. Eduljee Cowasjee (1).]

JAGAT CHANDRA BHATTACHARYYA v. GUNNY HAJEE AHMED.

Lindley on Partnership, 9th Ed. (1924), pp. 281, 291.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee in reply.—Sec. 264 refers to a person dealing habitually with a firm prior to dissolution. Observations to the contrary in Chundee Churn Dutt's case (1) are obiter dicta.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Jagat Chandra Bhattacharyya, Jogesh Chandra Bhattacharyya and Jyotish Chandra Bhattacharyya, who were sued as representatives of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya : and, the appeal is against an order of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, which was delivered on the 24th of August 1924.

The suit was based on a Hundi for Rs. 2,009 drawn by the firm of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, carrying on business in Calcutta, in favour of the Plaintiff and dated the 24th of February 1921.

The facts which it is necessary for me to state for the purpose of my judgment are as follows :—

Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya started a firm of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co. in 1907—the other partners were Sukul Chandra Bhattacharyya, Atul Krishna Bhattacharyya and one Raj Krishna Sinha : and the firm carried on business in Calcutta.

In 1914, Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya became a lunatic, and the business, as far as I know, was managed by the other partners.

It was alleged that the wife of Kush Chandra sometime in March 1919 caused a letter to be sent to the partners, referring to the lunacy of her husband and claiming a dissolution. That letter, however, was not produced at the hearing of this case.

The suit was brought on the 16th of July 1921. Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was not personally served, but the writ of summons was served upon the firm in the way provided by the Code of Civil Procedure.

The decree was made on the 8th of August 1921 for the amount of the Hundi and interest, and was ex parte. After the decree was made it was assigned to Hajee Gunny Ahmed, who was joined as a party to this appeal.

In September 1921, the partners of the firm other than Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya petitioned the Court and, on their petition the firm was adjudicated insolvent. Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya died on the 27th of August 1923.

On the 7th of April 1924, the Plaintiff made an application ex parte to the learned Judge for an order that he should be at liberty to execute the decree against the three Appellants describing them as the sons, heirs and legal representatives of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, deceased, who was a partner of the Defendant firm, by attachment of the house and premises No. 90, Raja Nobo Krishna Street in Calcutta. This house was not partnership property, but was the private property of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya.

The learned Judge upon this application made the order as prayed, ex parte.

On the 8th of April 1924, the Plaintiff caused a notice to be served upon the three Appellants describing them as the sons, heirs and legal representatives of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, a partner of the Defendant firm. This notice purported to be given in the suit, Gunny Hajee Ahmed v. Messrs. Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co., and to be under r. 22 (1) (a) (b) of Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code and called upon them to appear on the day mentioned, to show cause why the decree passed against them on the 8th of August 1921 in the said suit should not be executed against them: and, on the same day the Plaintiff filed a tabular statement setting out the Plaintiff's claim against the Defendant firm and praying that the decree might be realized by the attachment and sale of the premises in question, which belonged to Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, a partner of the Defendant firm, which, since his death, passed into the hands of his sons and legal representatives, the Appellants. The tabular statement concluded as follows: "Leave was granted on the 7th day of April 1924 to execute the decree against the legal representatives of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, who was one of the partners of the Defendant firm."

The matter came before the learned Judge on the 21st of May 1924 and on the 29th of May 1924 when the issue between the parties was tried. I do not find that the issue was specifically stated, but I assume for the purpose of my judgment that the issue raised was whether Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner in the firm at the time the Hundi was executed by the firm, namely, the 24th of February 1921.

The learned Judge after hearing the parties made an order granting the Plaintiff leave to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the house and premises No. 90, Raja Nobo Krishna Street.

The matter was determined upon statements contained in the affidavits which were filed and upon certain admissions which were made at the hearing on the 21st and on the 29th of May 1924.

It appears that Mr. Bannerjee, who appeared for the Appellants, examined a witness on the 21st May and then Mr. Sircar, who appeared for the Plaintiff, stated that it was not necessary to cross-examine the witness, as for the purposes of the case he was willing to proceed on the footing that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a lunatic. Then Mr. Bannerjee, apparently, having regard to what Mr. Sircar said, withdrew the witness.

On the 29th of May, there was a further admission made, as appears from the minutes. Mr. Bannerjee, who appeared for the Appellants, admitted that Mr. Sircar's client knew that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner of the firm prior to the lunacy, and Mr. Sircar said that he was willing to proceed on the footing that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a lunatic from 1914 onwards and Mr. Bannerjee said that he was willing to proceed on that footing.

There is one other fact which I ought to mention and that is that on the 11th of July 1921 the wife of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya instituted a suit on the Original Side of this Court for dissolution of the partnership. That was before Kush's death, who, as I have said, died in August 1923.

After Kush's death, the Appellants were substituted as Defendants in the partnership suit: and, on the 19th July 1924, a decree dissolving the partnership was made: and, it was directed that the dissolution should take effect as from the 19th of March 1919.

The application upon which the learned Judge's decision was given was alleged to have been made in pursuance of the provisions of Or. 21, r. 50 (2). It was based upon the fact that the Plaintiff's decree was against the firm, and upon the allegation that the Plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree against Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, as being a partner in the firm, and inasmuch as Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was dead, against the Appellants as his representatives:

JAGAT CHANDRA BHATTACHARYYA v. GUNNY HAJEE AHMED.

There is no doubt that the procedure adopted by the Plaintiff was irregular.

The application to execute the decree against the Appellants should not have been made ex parte, and the order of the 7th of April giving the Plaintiff leave to attach the premises should not have been made ex parte, as it was in this case.

That order was made upon the assumption that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner in the firm—but the question whether he was a partner had not been decided, either at the trial of the suit or at any other time.

It was admitted by the learned Advocate for the Respondent that a summons should have been issued under the provisions of Or. 21, r. 50 (4) reciting the decree against the firm, and calling upon the Appellants to appear and answer the allegation made by the Plaintiff that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner in the firm and to meet the claim that execution should issue against the Appellants as Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya's representatives.

This irregularity, however, in my opinion should not be allowed to vitiate the proceedings, and it is not by itself sufficient to justify a reversal of the learned Judge's order because notice was subsequently given to the Appellants. They appeared before the learned Judge and contested the question whether Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner in the firm and whether the Plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree against the Appellants and the property in question, and the irregularity in my opinion did not in any way affect the merits of the case.

The first point raised by the learned Advocate for the Appellants was that the Plaintiff was not entitled to execute the decree against Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya or his representatives or their private property, because Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya had not been served with the writ of summons by which the suit was instituted.

He based his argument on Or. 21, r. 50 (4), which provides as follows: "Save as against any property of the partnership, a decree against a firm shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect any partner therein unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer." His argument was to the effect that unless a person who was a partner in a firm, against which a decree had been obtained, had been served with the writ of summons by which the suit was instituted, he or his private property could not be made liable under the decree, and the Plaintiff's right to execute the decree was limited to proceedings against the property of the partnership.

I am not able to accept that argument.

If it were held that in no event could a decree, obtained against a firm, be executed against a partner personally or his personal property unless he had been served with the writ of summons in the suit, the object of Or. 21, r. 50 (2) would be rendered nugatory.

The result would be that in any case when a Plaintiff sued a firm, he would have to determine at the outset and before he issued the writ of summons who were the persons against whom he would execute the decree when it was obtained.

In many cases it might be difficult and in some cases impossible for a Plaintiff, who had been dealing with a firm and who has been obliged to sue the firm, to ascertain before he brought his suit against the firm, who were the partners against whom he must eventually execute the decree.

The Code enables the Plaintiff to bring the suit against the firm, and if after the decree has been obtained against the firm the decree-holder claims to execute it against any person other than those mentioned in Or. 21, r. 50, sub-r. (1), cls. (b) and (c) as being a partner, he is enabled by sub-r. (2) to apply for leave : and that rule provides what procedure is then to be adopted.

In my judgment the intention of the rule is that when an application under the rule is made it should be on notice to the person, who is alleged to be liable as a partner; he is to be served with a summons and called upon to answer the application. Then if the Court finds that the liability is not disputed, the Court may grant leave to execute the decree against the person who does not dispute the liability.

If the person who is sought to be made liable as a partner having been served with the summons and having appeared to answer, disputes his liability, then the issue is to be tried in any manner in which any issue in a suit may be tried and determined.

There is a further reason which militates against the argument of the learned Advocate for the Appellants. If it were adopted, it seems to me that it would render the provisions of sub-r. (2) meaningless.

Sub-r. (2) applies to the case of persons, against whom the decree-holder seeks to execute the decree, other than the persons mentioned in sub-r. (1), cls. (b) and (c).

Cls. (b) and (c) refer to persons who have appeared or who have been individually served as partners and who have failed to appear.

A person therefore who has been served with the writ of summons is not one of those contemplated by sub-r. (2) : and, if the learned Advocate's argument be accepted and the decree-holder's remedy under his decree against a firm is limited to partnership property, unless the person sought to be made liable as a partner has been served with the writ of summons in the suit, sub-r. (2) would be unnecessary, for the decree against the firm can be executed against partnership property under the provisions of Or. 21, r. 50, sub-r. 1 (a).

In my judgment the meaning of Or. 21, r. 50, sub-rr. (2) and (4), is that a decree, obtained against the firm, cannot be enforced, except as to partnership property, against a person alleged to be a partner, and against whom an application has been made under sub-r. (2) unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer the application specified in sub-r. (2) and he has had an opportunity of disputing his liability as a partner, if he desires so to do.

It was argued by the learned Advocate for the Appellants that this could not be the meaning, for it might be that the person sought to be made liable as a partner might desire to contest the validity of the decree, and if he had not been served with the writ of summons he would not have had any opportunity of so doing.

In my opinion, there is no substance in that argument. If on the trial of the issue contemplated by Or. 21, r. 50 (2) it is decided that the person, alleged by the decree-holder to be a partner, was a partner in the Defendant firm, then it seems to me he has no cause for complaint.

Or. 30, r. 3 provides for the service of the summons in a case where persons are sued as partners in the name of the firm. Assuming that the summons has been served in one of the ways specified in Or. 30, r. 3 and that the person, sought to be made liable as a partner, was found in fact to be a partner, he would have had an opportunity to defend the suit either by himself or through his other partners who were his agents.

JAGAT CHANDRA BHATTACHARYYA v. GUNNY HAJEE AHMED.

In my judgment therefore the first point, on which the learned Advocate for the Appellants relied, must fail.

The second point upon which the learned Advocate for the Appellants relied was, that the lunacy of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, which occurred in 1914, dissolved the partnership between him and the other members of the firm as from that time. He based his argument on the allegation that in India a lunatic cannot have a contractual relationship with any one. There is however no doubt that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was of sound mind when he entered into the partnership in 1907; and it remains to be considered whether the partnership came to an end as far as he was concerned by reason of his becoming a lunatic.

The learned Counsel argued that it was a partnership at will, and that as soon as Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya became lunatic, he became incapable of exercising his will and making a contract and consequently the contract of partnership came to an end.

I find some difficulty in following this argument.

Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner from 1907; if he became incapable of exercising his will-power when he became a lunatic in 1914, as alleged, it seems to me that it would follow that he was incapable of expressing his will and determination to put an end to the contract of partnership and that in the absence of an order of the Court dissolving the partnership or any action by a person duly appointed to represent the interests of the lunatic, the partnership would continue. A man, who has been of sound mind, and who becomes of unsound mind, may recover his sanity; and, in my judgment the lunacy of a partner does not of itself dissolve a partnership, but confirmed lunacy is a ground for dissolution if the other partners apply to the Court for a decree of dissolution on that ground.

Sec. 254 of the Contract Act provides that "at the suit of a partner the Court may dissolve the partnership in the following cases:—

"(I) When a partner becomes of unsound mind"

This contemplates that an order of the Court is necessary to dissolve a partnership on the ground of the unsoundness of mind of one of the partners—such an order would not be necessary if the unsoundness of mind by itself dissolved the partnership.

It was then argued that by the decree of the Court, dated the 19th of June 1924, the partnership was in fact dissolved as from the 19th of March 1919.

It was alleged on behalf of the Respondent that the suit, in which this decree was made, was a collusive suit: having regard to the parties to it and the date when the suit was instituted, viz., the 11th of July 1921, and the date of the decree, viz., the 19th of June 1924 and the date when the suit on the Hundi against the firm was instituted, viz., the 16th of July 1921, there seems some ground for that allegation.

The decree of the Court for dissolution however was made and still remains, and I assume, therefore, for the purpose of my judgment, that the partnership as between Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya and the other partners was dissolved as from 19th March 1919.

The question still remains whether that fact is sufficient to relieve Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya and his estate from liability to the Plaintiff in this suit.

Sec. 264 of the Contract Act provides as follows:—

"Persons dealing with a firm will not be affected by a dissolution of which no public notice has been given, unless they themselves had notice of such dissolution."

The learned Advocate for the Appellants argued that this section applies only to persons who dealt with the firm before the dissolution and therefore the Plaintiff, who, he alleged, had not dealt with the firm before the dissolution, was not entitled to notice, and he could only make liable those who were in fact partners, at the time the Hundis were executed.

There is no express decision by the learned Judge on the question whether the Plaintiff had dealings with the firm before the dissolution, although the learned Judge held that the Plaintiff had many dealings with the Defendant firm before the execution of the Hundis. If the Appellants' contention on the above-mentioned point were correct, I should be of opinion that it would be necessary to remand the case for a further hearing in order to have a decision on the question whether the Plaintiff had dealings with the firm before the dissolution in March 1919.

I am of opinion however that no remand is necessary for I do not think the Appellants' contention in this respect is correct.

In the first place the section says: "persons dealing with a firm." It does not say "persons dealing with a firm before its dissolution;" and I see no reason why the words "before its dissolution" should be interpolated in the section.

In the second place the Appellants' contention is in my opinion, contrary to the decision in Chundee Churn Dutt v. Eduljee Cowasjee Bijnee (1), which is a decision of a Bench of this Court, consisting of Garth, C. J. and White, J.

In that case the learned Chief Justice said that he felt a difficulty as to the meaning of sec. 264 of the Contract Act especially as regards old customers who like the Plaintiff in that case had dealt with the firm before its change or dissolution.

He proceeded as follows (p. 683):—"I suppose the section means, that all persons dealing with a firm, whether old customers or new, will be affected by any dissolution of the firm or any change of its members if they have actual notice of the fact. This would be quite in conformity with the law of England. But supposing they have no actual knowledge of the fact, is it intended that all persons dealing with the firm, whether old or new customers, are to be bound by public notice of such dissolution or change, whatever the words 'public notice' may mean?" Again at p. 684 the learned Chief Justice is reported to have said: "The law which regulates the liability of partners for the acts of their co-partners is a branch of the law of agency; and in the absence of any specific rule upon the subject under the head of partnership, we must look to the law of agency for the solution of our present question. Each partner is the agent of his co-partners for the purpose of conducting debts and obligations in the usual course of partnership (see secs. 249 and 251 of the Contract Act, Lindley on Partnership, 3rd Edition, p. 248). And when this agency has once been established, it does not cease as regards third persons, until its termination has become known to them (see sec. 208 of the Contract Act)."

[Sec. 208 of the Contract Act provides—"The termination of the authority of an agent does not, so far as regards the agent, take effect before it becomes known to him, or, so far as regards third persons, before it becomes known to them."]

In the case, therefore, of a dissolution of the partnership or of the retirement of one of its members, the agency as between the partners themselves would cease from the time of such dissolution or retirement; but as regards third persons the agency would continue until it had been duly notified. And the mode of notification which the law requires is different in the case of old and new customers of the firm from what it is in the case of other persons."

In my judgment it is clear that the above-mentioned case is an authority for the proposition that the section applies not only to persons who dealt with the firm before the dissolution but also to persons dealing with the firm after the dissolution or change of partners.

This, as already stated, is the natural construction of the section giving the ordinary meaning to the words used in the section.

In this case it was admitted that the Plaintiff knew that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner of the firm prior to the lunacy: and it has not been suggested that any public notice of the dissolution or change of partners was given, or that the Plaintiff himself had notice of the dissolution.

In my judgment, therefore, the Plaintiff dealing with the Defendant firm, of which he knew Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a partner, and having had no notice of the alleged dissolution was not affected by the dissolution.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—On the 8th of August 1921 Gunny Hajee Ahmed obtained a decree against the firm of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co., for Rs. 2,009 and costs upon a Hundi, dated the 24th February 1921, and executed on behalf of the Defendant firm. Subsequently an application was made under Or. 21, r. 50 (2) for an order for leave to execute the decree against the present Appellants as the sons and legal representatives of their deceased father Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya by attachment of the house and premises No. 90, Raja Nobo Krishna Street which is a part of the personal estate of their deceased father.

The applicant has since assigned his decree, but that does not affect the points which now arise for decision.

On the 8th of April notice was issued to the Appellants under r. 22 (1) (a) (b) of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure to show cause why the decree in question should not be executed against them. To that notice I shall have to refer later in more detail.

The Appellants, as observed, are the sons of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya who is admitted to have been a member of the firm of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co., from the year 1907 onwards. It is also admitted that in the year 1914 he became of unsound mind.

In the year 1923 he died. It is also alleged and not denied that in March 1919 the wife of the deceased wrote through her Solicitors on behalf of her husband to his partners giving notice of dissolution of the firm carried on under the name of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co.

The applicant Gunny Hajee Ahmed alleged that he dealt with the firm knowing Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was partner and that no notice of dissolution was given to him or by public advertisement.

The learned Judge made an order granting leave to the Plaintiff to execute the decree in the manner desired. There is no finding as to dissolution, though the learned Judge appears to have dealt with the matter upon the basis of a dissolution in March 1919.

The first point argued is that under Or. 21, r. 50 of the Code of Civil Procedure no execution can issue against property other than the partnership property unless the alleged partner has been served with the writ of summons in the suit. This is based on Or. 21, r. 50 (4) which is said to extend to the whole rule.

Under Or. 30, r. 3 the summons in a suit against partners in the name of their firm may be served either upon any one or more of the partners, or at the principal place at which the business is carried on upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the partnership business there, as the Court may direct. Or. 30, r. 6 provides : " Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, they shall appear individually in their own names, but all subsequent proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm ; " and r. 7 provides : " Where a summons is served in the manner provided by r. 3 upon a person having the control or management of the partnership business, no appearance by him shall be necessary unless he is a partner of the firm sued. "

Execution in a suit decreed against a firm is provided for by Or. 21, r. 50. As regards the partnership property no difficulty arises. Execution may issue in every case. As regards private property of individual partners rr. 50 (1) (b) (c) limit it to cases of persons who have appeared under Or. 30, rr. 6 or 7 or who have admitted that they are or have been adjudged to be partners or who have been individually served as partners and failed to appear. The persons so classified comprise all who prior to execution against their private estate for one reason or another may be held to be aware of their personal liability to satisfy the decree against the firm.

Sub-r. (2) deals with cases of persons said to be partners who are not within the foregoing categories and who therefore may be held not to be aware of their personal liability. Hence the need for sub-r. (4).

The principle underlying this rule is that as regards the firm and the partnership property there has been a complete adjudication prior to decree. Service in the manner prescribed by Or. 30 ensures that due notice shall be given to the firm as such. Then, as regards the liability of individual partners, the object of the rule is to ensure that no partner shall be held personally liable unless he shall have had individual notice or may be held to be aware of his liability.

It has been argued that sub-r. (4) is generally applicable and that its effect is to limit execution against individual partners to execution against those who have been served with a writ of summons under Or. 30. Such a construction cannot be reconciled with sub-r. (1). It would involve both repetition and inconsistency and be so meaningless as to be inconceivable. If " summons to appear and answer " means the writ of summons, as argued, this leads to the anomalous conclusion, that service on partners is twice ensured, by sub-r. (1) (c) and by sub-r. (4), while sub-r. (2) is ineffective and cannot be utilised.

The only sensible interpretation is that sub-r. (4) is intended to apply to persons against whose property execution is sought under sub-r. (2).

This rule is adapted from the English Or. 48A, r. 8, reference to which makes it clear that the provision as regards service in sub-r. (4) was intended to be applicable to persons against whom execution was asked for other than those against whom the decree-holder was entitled to execution by reason of sub-r. (1). The sub-division of the English rule into Or.

JAGAT CHANDRA BHATTACHARYYA v. GUNNY HAJER AHMED.

21, rr. 50 (2) and (4) has led to the elaborate argument which we have heard. The two would more appropriately have been combined in one sub-rule which would have made the intention clear.

The English rule of course is in no way binding as an authoritative guide to interpretation, but I am fully satisfied both as to the genesis and the meaning of the rule which we have to construe.

The form of summons is challenged and it is argued that by reason of the form there has been no proper service. Reference has been made to the words in sub-r. (4) "summons to appear and answer" and it is rightly contended that in relation to sub-r. (2) they mean that proper notice of what is intended shall be given. The summons should recite the decree, that it is against the firm, and that the decree-holder claims to be entitled to execute it against the individual to be charged on the ground of his liability as a partner in such firm.

In this particular case the summons was issued by the master under Or. 21, r. 22 (1) of which sub-rr. (a) and (b) are both applicable. Where necessary the summons should issue under both rules of Or. 21 and the requirements of each should be complied with.

Applications for execution are ordinarily made ex parte on a tabular statement. In cases to which Or. 21, r. 22 applies it appears to be the practice, to file the tabular statement and at the same time to take out a summons under that rule. This practice appears to be convenient, and it might well be followed where Or. 21, r. 50 (2) applies, whether in conjunction with Or. 21, r. 22 or not, but the summons should be served before any order is made against the persons to be held liable.

To conclude these observations on the practice under Or. 21, r. 50 (2) which does not seem to be well settled it also appears to me that the effect of the language of the sub-rule as to granting leave or trying the liability of the person to be charged, where disputed, is that upon the parties being before the Court or properly served, as the case may be, if liability is not disputed, the Court may grant leave forthwith, but if liability is disputed, leave may only be given after such liability has been tried and determined in favour of the decree-holder.

In this particular case, the summons does not conform strictly to what in my opinion is required by the Code. But I am not prepared to say that on that ground the appeal must succeed.

Though no reference is made in the summons to Or. 21, r. 50 (2) nevertheless it contains the title to the suit indicating that the firm was the Defendant against whom the decree referred to later was made. It is addressed to the Appellants as legal representatives of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, "a partner of the Defendant firm above-named," and calls upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed against them, which must mean in the capacity in which they are summoned. They appeared and they took no objection. They met the case made against them on its merits, though it was not open to them at that stage to challenge the decree, for the liability of the firm and of its partners, whoever they might be, had been thereby established. How can they now complain? In my opinion, there is no substance in this objection. Sec. 99 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been referred to and it provides: "No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied . . . on account of any . . . error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court." If necessary I should be prepared to say that this section applied.

The next point argued is that Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya's lunacy in 1914 ipso facto dissolved the partnership. This argument is based upon an alleged analogy to infancy which, however, in my opinion, does not exist. An infant is under a continuing contractual disability which is finally removed when he attains majority. The disability of a person of unsound mind may begin and end at any time; it may be continuous or it may be intermittent. Sec. 12 of the Indian Contract Act is consistent with this for the second paragraph provides that, "a person who is usually of unsound mind, but occasionally of sound mind, may make a contract when he is of sound mind" and the third paragraph of the section provides for the converse case. Sec. 254 provides that "at the suit of a partner the Court may dissolve the partnership when a partner becomes of unsound mind." This provision of the law is wholly inconsistent with the proposition that the lunacy of a partner ipso facto dissolves the partnership. It shows that lunacy provides a ground for dissolution and whether or not it affords a ground for dissolution and whether or not it is open to another partner to dissolve a partnership without an order of the Court, in the circumstances it is not necessary to consider. It may be necessary, therefore, in cases where a partner has become of unsound mind, to consider whether there has been a dissolution in fact, otherwise the partnership must be deemed as continuing. In these circumstances, I find that the partnership continued after 1914.

In this case no dissolution in 1919 as is alleged to have taken place was actually proved before the learned Judge, nor is there any finding by him to that effect, for the judgment of the Court declaring the partnership to have been dissolved at that date was delivered between the time when the learned Judge heard the application and the date when he made the order which has been appealed against. He assumed, however, that there had been a dissolution in 1919 and seems to have dealt with this matter upon that basis.

I may digress at this point to draw attention to the fact that under Or. 21, r. 50 (2) the question of liability should be tried and determined like an issue in a suit. That means on evidence which may be oral or documentary. This ordinarily should be the course pursued. A form of issue which would probably be appropriate to most cases was considered and approved in Davis v. Hyman (2).

In this particular instance the admission by learned Counsel on the one hand of the lunacy in 1914 of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya, of partnership and of the Plaintiff's knowledge of the partnership before that date on the other, made this unnecessary. Assuming, therefore, that there was no dissolution in 1919, the Appellants are clearly liable.

The only remaining question is whether upon the materials before the learned Judge he was able to decide the case having regard to the state of the law, seeing that the transaction upon which the decree was founded did not occur till 1921.

It is not alleged that any notice of dissolution was given to Gunny Hajee Ahmed or that the alleged dissolution was publicly advertised. It may, therefore, reasonably be assumed that neither of these things was done.

It is put on issue upon the affidavits whether Gunny Hajee Ahmed ever dealt with Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co., prior to 1921 when the Hundi on which the decree was made was executed. I will, therefor, assume that Gunny Hajee Ahmed was a new customer of the firm in the sense that he had not dealt with the firm before 1921.

The position, therefore, may be summarised as follows:—That prior and up to 1914 Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya was a member of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya & Co., that he then became a lunatic, that his widow on his behalf gave notice of dissolution to his co-partners in March 1919, that no further notice of dissolution was given nor notice to Gunny Hajee Ahmed, that Gunny Hajee Ahmed knew prior to 1914 of the constitution of the firm and was a new customer in August 1921. On these facts is the estate of Kush Chandra Bhattacharyya liable to satisfy the decree against the firm?

The matter appears to be governed in part by sec. 264 of the Contract Act, Gunny Hajee Ahmed was a person dealing with a firm. Prima facie, he was not affected by the alleged dissolution.

It has been argued that as a new customer he is not within that section. The law of partnership depends on the law of agency. Sec. 201 of the Contract Act provides that an agency is terminated by the principal becoming of unsound mind, but sec. 208 provides, that the "termination of the authority of an agent does not take effect . . . so far as regards third persons, before it becomes known to them." Apart from authority sees. 201, 208 and 264 appear to conclude the matter. But we have the authority of this Court in Chundee Churn Dutt v. Eduljee Cowasjee Bijnee (1) in which the effect of sec. 264 was fully considered by Garth, C. J., who was clearly of the opinion that as regards persons who had not dealt with the firm the implied agency of partners would continue until its termination had been publicly notified.

It has been submitted that inasmuch as the question in that case was one of liability to an old customer the learned Chief Justice's observations were but obiter. With this I cannot agree. It does not seem to me that an interpretation of a statute directly necessitated in order to apply its provisions to the facts of a case should be described as obiter dictum because it involves reference to facts other than those before the Court.

I had some doubt at one time whether it would not be necessary to remand the case for trial upon the points last discussed, but in view of the admissions and the law as I conceive it to be, that course now seems to me to be unnecessary.

The directions contained in Or. 21, r. 50 (2) as to the trial of an issue should however not be overlooked, and it is very desirable that the issue to be tried should be framed and recorded. The same applies to any admissions which may be held to render oral evidence unnecessary either in whole or in part.

I have no doubt that the learned Judge who tried this case was fully cognizant of the position, but the absence of any full and accurate record of what occurred before him, resulting in the prescribed procedure not being strictly followed has added considerably to the difficulties in dealing with this matter on appeal.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Judgment,

28, April.

Hindu law—Religious endowment—Family idol, if capable of disposal of property—Legal position of founder and his heirs when no separate Shebait appointed—Founder's heir, whether can determine the location of the Thakur—Power to remove—Division of worship into turns—Contest between co-Shebaites regarding worship—Thakur to be represented by independent next friend appointed by Court—Members of family entitled to worship but not Shebaites should be made parties—Scheme of worship to be framed on hearing all interested parties and guardian of Thakur.

A Hindu idol is a juristic entity and has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. The person who has the deity in his charge is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir.

The person founding a deity and becoming responsible for the duties of the manager of the idol is de facto Shebait. This responsibility is maintained either by the personal performance of the religious rites or, as in the case of Sudras, by the employment of a Brahmin priest to do so on his behalf. The founder, at any time before his death, or his successor likewise may confer the office of Shebait on another.

Family idols are not mere moveable chattels and their destruction, degradation or injury are not within the power of the founder or other custodian for the time being.

Where the founder of the idol continued till his death to be the de facto Shebait, his heir stood vested with the custody of, and management of the trust for, the family idol which belonged to the founder.

Where the founder's heir conveyed and dedicated to his family idol certain premises for its location and directed that the idol was on no account to be removed therefrom except upon dedication to it of another Thakurbari of the same or of larger value, and the office of Shebait having devolved by inheritance on several persons, there was a division of the worship into palas or turns, and the question was whether one of them during his turn of worship was entitled to take the Thakur to his own residence for such purpose:

Held—That, if in the course of a proper and unassailable administration of the worship of the idol by the Shebait, it be thought that a family idol should change its location, the will of the idol itself, expressed through its guardian must be given effect to. A fortiori it is open to an idol acting through its guardian, the Shebait, to conduct its worship in its own way at its own place, always on the assumption that the acts of the Shebait expressing its will are not inconsistent with the reverent and proper conduct of its worship by those members of the family who render service and pay homage to it.

The question having arisen in a suit between contesting co-Shebaites, the Judicial Committee held that the idol should be represented in the suit by a disinterested next friend appointed by Court, and that the female members of the family who are entitled to participate in the worship without obstruction or inconvenience should also be joined, and a scheme framed for the regulation of the worship of the idol.

PRAMATHA NATH MULLICK v. PRADYUMNA KUMAR MULLICK.

This was an appeal (No. 59 of 1924) from a decree, dated the 10th April 1923, of the High Court at Bengal, which reversed a decree of the same Court, dated the 1st June 1922, in its Original Jurisdiction.

The Appellant and Respondents are descendants of a wealthy Hindu named Mutty Lal Mullick who died in 1846.

During his life-time Mutty Lal Mullick established and consecrated three family deities which were located in his family dwelling-house in Pathuriaghatta Street, Calcutta, and by his Will he provided for the maintenance of the worship of the deities. He was succeeded by his adopted son Jadulal Mullick who pulled down and re-built the family house in Pathuriaghatta Street and erected a Thakurbari on an adjoining plot of land at No. 1, Prosonno Kumar Tagore Street. In 1888 Jadulal executed a deed of trust whereby he dedicated the Thakurbari to one of the three family deities and provided that the Thakur should not be removed therefrom unless another suitable Thakurbari of equal value were provided.

On the death of Jadulal disputes arose among his three sons (represented by the Appellant and Respondents) and a partition was effected and provision made for carrying on the worship.

Further quarrels took place and a scheme was framed and agreed to under which each of the contesting parties was to take it in turns to conduct the Sheba and worship of the deities for a year.

When the Appellant's turn came to conduct the worship he desired to remove the deities to his private residence, a course which was opposed by the Respondents.

The Appellant thereupon filed a suit praying for a declaration of his right to remove the deities and for an injunction to restrain the Respondents from interfering. The trial Judge (Greaves, J.) made the declaration as prayed for on the ground that Jadulal was not the founder of the worship, and was not entitled to place restrictions on the location of the Thakur which would bind Shebaites who came after him.

An appeal from this decision was heard by Sanderson, C. J., and Richardson, J., who allowed the appeal and set aside the decree of the trial Judge. (See 27 C. W. N. 684).

Mr. Justice Richardson regarded the question of Jadulal's right to impose the restriction while making the gift to the Thakur in the deed of trust as being the only question of substance in the case, and he held that the restriction was for the benefit of the Thakur. He stated in his judgment as follows:—"I cannot therefore accede to the contention that the terms of Mutty Lal's Will conferred on Jadulal an unlimited discretion to deal with the deities according to his pleasure. I will assume on the principle stated in *Girijanand v. Sailajanand that Jadulal could not bind his successors by any act which was not for the benefit of the deities. No one suggests that the dedication of a Thakurbari was not the act of a pious Hindu . . . In his secular capacity he had a perfect right to make the gift and to impose the conditions which he did impose. The only question of substance in the case is whether in his capacity as Shebait he exceeded his authority in accepting the gift on the Thakur's behalf subject to the conditions. The test to be applied is whether the condition with which we are immediately concerned in the present case was or was not for the benefit of the Thakur," and he held that the restriction as interpreted as aforesaid was for the benefit of the Thakur on the ground that "the Thakur is at least secured from undignified journeys from one place to another." The learned Judge continued:—"As the worship of the deities was made by Mutty Lal a charge on his estate, now converted into a trust fund, Jadulal has no right, I think, to the title of a founder of the endowment. His liberality, however, should dispose his successors and the Court to respect his wishes as far as possible . . . and in my opinion the condition cannot be said to be unreasonable."

PRAMATHA NATH MULLICK v. PRADYUMNA KUMAR MULLICK.

Sanderson, C. J., in a short judgment, in effect concurred with the judgment of Richardson, J.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellant.—The position of a Shebait is laid down in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (8), Greedhareejee v. Rumanlolljee (3) and Rajeshwar Mullick v. Gopeswar Mullick (9).

He has power to deal with the dedicated property only for the benefit of the idol and in cases of necessity. He has no power to deal with the location of the idol.

The idols were founded by Mutty Lal who made a valuable foundation in their favour.

Jadulal succeeded his adoptive father and was Shebait of a hereditary Thakur even before he executed the deed of 1888. He was not entitled as Shebait to add restrictions to the foundation to which he had succeeded.

There is nothing intrinsic in Hindu law to prevent a Shebait from taking an idol to his own house during his turn of duty.

Dwarka Nath Roy v. Jannobee Choudhrai (10) and Ram Soondur Thakoor v. Taruck Ch. Turkoruttun (11).

There was nothing in the original foundation to restrict the removal of the deities and the evidence shows that they were actually removed both by Mutty Lal and Jadulal from the Thakurbari to the Puja Dalan on the occasion of the Durga and other pujas.

From this it is clear that the prohibition in the deed of 1888 was not imperative so as to apply to temporary removal for the purpose of worship.

The restriction in any case does not apply to the two Thakurs who are not mentioned in the deed.

They referred also to Rambrahama Chatterji v. Kedar Nath Banerji (1).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondents.—If the Appellant's contention is upheld it would follow that each Shebait during his turn could remove the idol to his own house, with the result that it would never be in the Thakurbari: moreover it is quite probable that other Thakurs will be consecrated and in another generation they may be numerous.

The idol was the absolute property of Mutty Lal, it was in fact his chattel, with which he could deal as he pleased and as such it passed to Jadulal, who became sole proprietor. On dedication of the Thakurbari he had full power to impose any condition he pleased.

The Appellant is not a Shebait of the Thakurbari except under the terms of the deed of 1888 and under the terms of that deed he is not entitled to remove the idol.

PRAMATHA NATH MULLICK v. PRADYUMNA KUMAR MULLICK.

Apart from agreement a Shebait is not entitled under Hindu law to remove an idol to his private house.

Similarly apart from agreement family worship would have to take place in the Thakurbari.

Had there been an intestacy the idols and Thakurbari would have descended to Jadulal's heirs as joint property.

If each member of the family has a right to take them to his own house the idea of joint property is lost, and if there is a right to remove them, one member of the family may take them to the other end of India and prevent the other members from performing their pujas.

The passage in Narada cited by the Appellant states that when the family is joint the worship is joint, when the family is separate the worship is separate, but that does not give a right to one of the separated parties to remove the object of worship.

There is abundant authority for the proposition that although all the Shebait—because they are co-sharers—can remove an idol from the Thakurbari, yet one of them has not that power.

Thakurani, a female idol referred to in some of the papers as the consort of the Thakur, and there was also a third, a sacred or deified stone called the Salgram Sila. These three idols became the objects of the pious worship of the family of the founder, Mutty Lal Mullick, who originally installed them. But the points in the case can be more simply treated by referring to the one, namely, the principal idol the Thakur.

The appeal is from a decree, dated the 10th April 1923, made by the High Court in Calcutta in its Civil Appellate Jurisdiction reversing a decree, dated the 1st June 1922, made by the same Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The case was argued at great length, and a large mass of authorities was cited.

Before entering upon the legal questions which were debated, their Lordships think it not inadvisable to state the family history, in so far as it concerns the installation of this idol. It was established and consecrated many years ago by a wealthy Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta, Babu Mutty Lal Mullick, in his family dwelling-house, in a Thakur Ghar, or room therein, set apart for worship.

Mutty Lal Mullick died in 1846 leaving a widow, Ranganmoni, and an adopted son, Jadulal, then two years of age. He left a Will, dated 17th August 1846 (shortly before his death). He had for some time prior to his death set up and established and consecrated the idol, and no doubt is thrown upon the fact that the idol so installed became unquestionably the object of worship by himself and the family. The Will provided that his widow should be the malik or proprietor and attorney, for the protection and care of the whole of his estate until his adopted son Jadulal attained the age of 20, and the enumeration included the Sri Iswar

Upon the adopted son attaining 20 the property was to be made over to the son as his heir. There was a power to the widow in case the adopted son died without issue to adopt another. A gift was made to the widow of one lac of rupees, together with various jewels and silver with right of residence in the family residence. With regard to the maintenance and worship of the idol certain funds, amounting to Rs. 600 a month, were to be drawn by the widow and therewith she was to defray the expenses of the idol's Sheba (or worship) and for religious festivals and ceremonies, 'in the method that I have paid and defrayed the same hitherto.' Upon the adopted son attaining 20 the widow was to 'make over the whole of the property to him fully and he will in a like manner protect the whole of the property and effectuate the Kream Karmas, or religious acts and ceremonies.'

It seems accordingly clear that in Mutty Lal Mullick's life-time the idol was, as already stated, established as a household god; and the pious founder, narrating his own upkeep and maintenance of the deity, gave funds in order that those should be continued; and he prescribed the duty of continuance to the widow during the adopted son's minority and upon the son thereafter during his life.

One of the questions emerging at this point, is as to the nature of such an idol, and the services due thereto. A Hindu idol is, according to long established authority, founded upon the religious customs of the Hindus, and the recognition thereof by Courts of Law, a "juristic entity." It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. It is unnecessary to quote the authorities; for this doctrine, thus simply stated, is firmly established.

A useful narrative of the concrete realities of the position is to be found in the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in Rambrahama Chatterji v. Kedar Nath Banerji (1) :—

"We need not describe here in detail the normal type of continued worship of a consecrated image—the sweeping of the temple, the process of smearing, the removal of the previous day's offerings of flowers, the presentation of fresh flowers, the respectful oblation of rice with flowers and water, and other like practices. It is sufficient to state that the deity is, in short, conceived as a living being and is treated in the same way as the master of the house would be treated by his humble servant. The daily routine of life is gone through with minute accuracy; the divinified image is regaled with the necessities and luxuries of life in due succession, even to the changing of clothes, the offering of cooked and uncooked food, and the retirement to rest."

The person founding a deity and becoming responsible for these duties is de facto and in common parlance called Shebait. This responsibility is, of course, maintained by a pious Hindu, either by the personal performance of the religious rites or—as in the case of Sudras, to which caste the parties belonged—by the employment of a Brahmin priest to do so on his behalf. Or the founder, any time before his death or his successor likewise, may confer the office of Shebait on another.

Under the Will of Mutty Lal Mullick he did not adopt the latter course, but he acted as Shebait with the Brahmin assistance referred to. After his death his widow officiated similarly as the ministrant of the worship, and she used, as directed, the endowed funds specially destined for the upkeep and worship of the deity. After the adopted son Jadulal reached the age of 20 he then became de facto the person, charged with the same duties, to be performed as fully as his adoptive father and mother had performed them.

It must be remembered in regard to this branch of the law that the duties of piety from the time of the consecration of the idol are duties to something existing which, though symbolising the Divinity, has in the eye of the law a status as a separate persona. The position and rights of the deity must, in order to work this out both in regard to its preservation, its maintenance and the services to be performed, be in the charge of a human being. Accordingly he is the Shebait custodian of the idol and manager of its estate. And so, paying proper respect to the religious proprieties of the case, the father, mother and adopted son were successively and de facto ministrants and custodians of this idol.

The period during which this state of matters existed was in the narrative from anterior to 1846 till the year 1864. The widow's charge of the affairs of the idol had come to an end; and Jadulal the son's period of administration, he having reached the age of 20, had begun. Jadulal died in the year 1894. What had happened during his period of administration was this: that in 1881 he enlarged the old family dwelling-house containing the Thakurbari in which the household gods had hitherto resided and were worshipped. He had erected a puja dalan for the worship of all the family Thakurs, including the three referred to, that is to say, instead of one house with its Thakurbari for the family, two houses were erected on adjoining plots of ground and between these the puja dalan was erected, having a private entrance from each of the private dwellings so that the family worship was conducted with due decorum and propriety in what was practically an annexe to either house.

Two other events occurred which are important during this period of Jadulal's regime. In 1888 he executed a deed of trust providing particular premises for the location and worship of the deities in the puja dalan aforesaid. The terms of this deed are the centre of the contentions raised by the parties in the appeal and will be more particularly hereinafter referred to. The other fact affecting this period was that in the year 1891 Ranganmoni, the widow of Mutty Lal Mullick, died. She made a very large endowment in favour of the family idol, amounting to about one lac of rupees. By her Will she appointed Jadulal her executor and trustee and she made a disposition of her property in these terms :—

"I give and devise my tenanted land, No. 129, Bowbazar Street in Calcutta, to my said trustee, his heirs and representatives to be held by him and them upon trust, to apply the rents and income thereof, after providing for the payment of taxes and other outgoings, in the performance of the daily and periodical worship of the idol, consecrated by my late husband, called Radha-Shamsunder, such worship to be performed by my said son and his descendants."

Jadulal died in 1894, leaving issue three sons and four daughters. The estates were large, and a suit for partition among the three sons ensued. Questions of importance were raised as to :—

- (1) The provisions of Jadulal's Will; and
- (2) The endowment by Ranganmoni.

On the former head the disputes and differences were submitted to the arbitration of the late Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, who delivered an award in 1899. That award was made a rule of Court. In the partition proceedings, Mr. Bonnerjee declared that the three sons, as Jadulal's heirs, were entitled to the residue of the father's estate in three equal shares. He allotted one of the two houses to the first son, another to the third son, and, in regard to the second son, the present Appellant, he was, so to speak, paid out in money in order that he might erect a desirable residence for himself. Among other trusts declared in Jadulal's Will was the following, namely :—

The trust for the worship of the said Jadulal Mullick's hereditary Goddess Sri Sri Singhabahini Debi and other family deities during his turn or pala of worship.

It is to be observed that, although the turn or pala of worship as amongst the three sons was recognised in that part of the award the idols in question in this case were not named.

In a subsequent part of the award various turns of worship were given to the sons in order. As to the Thakurbari, or puja dalan, plans were referred to, and it was declared to be the joint property of the three sons. Prohibition was made against the two sons vested in the adjoining properties raising any structure or building of any kind which might interfere with the joint property. The situation created by this deed accordingly was that, while the deities were not named, the joint property of the three sons in the house dedicated to the idol was declared and the system of worship by turn or pala was established.

With regard to Ranganmoni's estate and endowment, a suit was brought in 1904, and in June 1905, it was decreed that a scheme should be framed for carrying on the varied trusts of the lady's Will and, subject to provision being made therefor, her estate should be divided into three equal shares among the Plaintiff and Defendants in this suit. A commission was accordingly issued to Babu Bhupendra Nath Basu to frame a scheme of worship and to partition the residue. This was done by return to the commission, which appointed the worship of Thakur Sri Sri Radha Shamsunderji, the idols in question in this suit, in the following terms :—

"I direct that the sheba and worship of the Thakur Sri Sri Radha-Shamsunderji and of the Thakur located at Mahesh and Brindaban and the Ekodistha sadh will be performed by the parties and their heirs by turns of one year each, the first turn commencing from the 1st day of Baisakh in the Bengali year 1317 and such first turn shall devolve on the said Pradyumna Kumar Mullick and his heirs, the second turn commencing from first day of the month of Baisakh 1318 shall devolve on the said Pramatha Nath Mullick and his heirs, and the third turn commencing from the first day of the month of Baisakh 1319 shall devolve on the said Manmatha Nath Mullick and his heirs, and so on by rotation. On the demise of any one of the parties, his heirs will become entitled to his turn of worship, and the party having the turn of worship will perform such worship without any interference by any of the other parties."

The family very sensibly acted in accordance with the rules set down in these proceedings. The practical result was that the parties, now judicially separated, continued the worship of the idols. The idol was, of course, not removed by the parties during their period of worship or pala because in the building as constructed the idols were located as mentioned in a building adjoining their respective houses.

In the year 1910-11 the second son's establishment was set up. The idol was removed to his house in connection with certain festivals considered suitable for the occasion and, after these were concluded in February 1911, was brought back to the puja dalan. In May 1911, the second son's year of pala, or turn of worship, came round and the family idol was removed to the Thakurbari of his house and family worship continued there for one year. In 1914 the same thing occurred, the first Respondent being still an infant. It is not suggested in any part of the case that these temporary transfers of the location of the family idol (such temporary transfers on occasions of festivals are familiar in the community) were not conducted with complete reverence and propriety and without interruption of the ordinary daily services tendered to the idol or any of the rights connected with its worship. In short, the results of the partition suit, the interpretation of the Wills of Jadulal and Ranganmoni, and the awards made therein, were so far worked out without defect or friction.

When the Appellant's pala, however, again came round, namely, in 1917, the transfer of the idol by him as before to his Thakurbari was objected to by the first Respondent, who had now attained majority (with whose objection the third son concurs); and the broad question in this appeal is whether that objection is well founded in law.

In substance the objection is founded upon the deed executed in 1888 by Jadulal.

The argument in the Appellate Court is thus recorded by Richardson, J. :—

The learned Standing Counsel, Mr. B. L. Mitter, founding on Mutty Lal's Will, argued that the testator treated the idols or images which he had set up as his personal property and left them absolutely to Jadulal. When pushed, Mr. Mitter said that Jadulal might, if he had so pleased, have thrown them into the river.

The Appellate Court rejected that proposition. And this Board can give no countenance to it. As is added in the judgment referred to :—

The inclusion of the idols, however, among items of property, movable and immovable, does not show that the testator regarded his interest in them in the same light as his interest in his secular property. The careful directions given later in the Will show that the testator intended the worship of the ancestral deities and the deities he had established to be a charge upon his estate.

PRAMATHA NATH MULLICK v. PRADYUMNA KUMAR MULLICK.

There may be, in the nature of things, difficulties in adjusting the legal status of the idol to the circumstances and requirements of its protection and location and there may no doubt also be a variety of other contacts of such a persona with mundane ideas. But an argument which would reduce a family idol to the position of a mere moveable chattel is one to which the Board can give no support. They think that such an argument is neither in accord with a true conception of the authorities, nor with principle. The Board does not find itself at variance with the views upon this subject taken in the Appellate Court or with the analysis of the authorities there contained.

The Appellate Court, it is true, felt itself constrained by the terms of the deed of 1888 to arrive at a conclusion adverse to the case of the Appellant; but upon the main points in argument, both as to the contention that the household god was mere property, and as to Jadulal's right being absolute therein, this appeal was argued before the Board by the Counsel for the Respondents here on the footing that if the Appellate Court's decree depended on the reasons given, it could not be defended. The Board is, on the contrary, of the opinion that, upon the two points they discussed, the reasoning and view of the High Court are sound.

Their Lordships would only add, on the subject of property, that the argument is said to be supported by the judgment of Banerjee, J., in Khetter Chunder Ghose v. Hari Das Bundopadhyaya (2). In that case the facts were that the household idol was made over to relatives, owing to the family, whose idol it was, being unable to carry on the worship on account of the paucity of profits of the endowed lands, and it was held that the transfer was justified in the interests of the idol. It was a proper and a pious act. The Shebait, being charged fundamentally with the duty of seeing to the worship being carried off, and, having the concurrence of the entire family to the transaction, did have power to carry through the transaction "for the purpose of performing its worship regularly through generation to generation." The members of the family were thereby deprived of no right of worship. The interests of worshippers and idol were conserved. Their Lordships do not think that such cases form any ground for the proposition that Hindu family idols are property in the crude sense maintained, or that their destruction, degradation or injury are within the power of their custodian for the time being. Such ideas appear to be in violation of the sanctity attached to the idol, whose legal entity and rights as such the law of India has long recognised.

The argument as to property being thus displaced, their Lordships have now to consider the position of Jadulal, the grantor of the deed of 1888.

Was he Shebait of this idol in the narrower sense as the Appellant contends or did he succeed by virtue of Mutty Lal's Will to the rights and privileges possessed by the testator? In the deed of 1888, Jadulal declares as follows:—"Whereas the said Babu Mutty Lal Mullick, the father of the said Jadulal Mullick, established and consecrated the Thakur called Radha Shamsunderji." As has been seen, during his life Mutty Lal Mullick had de facto performed piously and regularly all the duties which the law would charge upon the custodians of the idol. It stands without question that Jadulal himself was fully performing similar duties and functions. As was said by

Lord Hobhouse in Gossamsee Sree Greshharreejee v. Rumanlolljee Gossamsee (3),

"According to Hindu law, when the worship of a Thakur has been founded the Shebaitship is held to be invested in the heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, or there has been some usage, course of dealing, or some circumstances to show a different mode of devolution."

A similar principle appears also to have been implied in the judgments of Jaganath Prasad Gupta v. Runjit Singh (4), Sheoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (5) and Musammat Jai Bansi Kunwar v. Chatter Dhari Singh (6).

To apply this law to the present case, Jadulal was the sole heir of his father and, by the general law of India, he thus stood vested with the right of custody of, and management of the trust for, the family idol which his father had consecrated and set up. So far as the legal status and rights of Jadulal as grantor of the deed of 1888, the deed proceeds to narrate :—

"Whereas the said Jadulal Mullick is now desirous of dedicating the said premises to the said Thakur in the manner hereinafter expressed."

This is perfectly correct language in acknowledgment of the fact that the Thakur existed and was the capable recipient in law of the property dedicated to it. The deed then proceeds to declare that certain premises, described in the schedule,

"shall be for ever held by the said Jadulal Mullick his heirs executors administrators and representatives to and for the use of the said Thakur Radha Shamsunderji to the intent that the said Thakur may be located and worshipped in the said premises and to and for no other use or intent whatsoever Provided always that if at any time hereafter it shall appear expedient to the said Jadulal Mullick his heirs executors administrators or representatives so to do it shall be lawful for him or them upon his or the's providing and dedicating for the location and worship of the said Thakur another suitable Thakur Bari of the same or greater value than the premises hereby dedicated to revoke the trusts hereinbefore contained and it is hereby declared that unless and until another Thakur Bari is provided and dedicated as aforesaid the said Thakur shall not on any account be removed from the said premises and in the event of another Thakur Bari being provided and dedicated as aforesaid the said Thakur shall be located therein but shall not similarly be removed therefrom on any account whatsoever."

This passage has been quoted in full so as to make clear the three propositions which seem to follow, namely, First, the recognition as mentioned of the idol as the dedicatee : Second, the conveyance in no respect whatever appears to be a conveyance of the idol, but is a conveyance of the premises described in the schedule to and for the use of the idol and for no other use : Third, this use is not to be interfered with by Jadulal's heirs, executors, administrator or representatives except upon providing for the dedicatee another Thakurbhari of the same or a larger value. When that is done Jadulal's heirs, etc., could revoke the trusts of the premises affecting the present puja dalan, and unless and until that is done the idol is not to be removed therefrom.

It is this last proposition which raises the real difficulty in the case and their Lordships express no surprise that the High Court should have felt it. Upon a full consideration their Lordships have come to the conclusion that this was not a dedication, in any sense of the word, of the idol as property, nor of the idol at all. It was a dedication of real estate in trust for the idol, recognised as a legal entity, to which such dedication might be made.

The true view of this is that the Will of the idol in regard to location must be respected. If, in the course of a proper and unassailable administration of the worship of the idol by the Shebait, it be thought that a family idol should change its location the Will of the idol itself, expressed through his guardian, must be given effect to. This is in accordance with what would appear to be the sound principle of the position and it is further in accord with the authority on the subject. In the case already referred to so far did the decision go that it was expressly said by Lord Hobhouse in Gossammee Sree Greedharreejee v. Rumanlolljee Gossammee (3), "The Thakur Dowjee. or those who speak for him on earth, need not take advantage of this gift."

A fortiori it is open to an idol acting through his guardian the Shebait to conduct its worship in its own way at its own place always on the assumption that the acts of the Shebait expressing its will are not inconsistent with the reverent and proper conduct of its worship by those members of the family who render service and pay homage to it.

A question was raised whether the right of worship of an idol can be made the subject of partition. Their Lordships have already referred to this point when dealing with the arbitration proceedings.

In 14 Bengal L. R., page 166, the point arose especially in the case of Mitta Kunth Audhicarry v. Neerunjun Audhicarry (7). The head-note is as follows:—

"The reasons for which one of several joint owners is entitled to a partition of the joint property, apply also to the case of a joint right of performing the worship of an idol. The joint owners of such a right are entitled to perform their worship by turns."

And, in Sir Richard Couch's judgment, the following rule of law is referred to:—

"The suit is founded upon the right of the Plaintiff, as property, to a partition. No doubt the Plaintiff is entitled to that; and the decree of the First Court was right in awarding it. But that decree has not made provision for the turn that each of the three persons, the Plaintiff and the two Defendants, should have, and does not state whether the Plaintiff is to have his turn first, or second, or third. We must therefore direct the Extra Assistant Commissioner to determine by lot in what order the Plaintiff and the two Defendants shall exercise the right to worship the idol. And having determined that, he should insert in his decree, so that it will be settled in what order they are to exercise the right of worship."

The sole objection made in these proceedings to the removal by one of the Shebait during his pala or turn of worship to his residence is founded upon the deed of 1888 already analysed. In para. 13 of the defence "this Defendant admits that the Plaintiff's turn of worship commenced on and from . . . the 14th April 1917. On the 2nd April 1917, this Defendant, who had attained majority on or about 20th November 1914, . . . objected." In the evidence of the first Respondent, he deposed as follows:—

"Babu Bhuendra Nath Basu divided the turn of worship of 6 Thakurs, and each of us have one year . . . my only objection is based on the deed of dedication; apart from the deed there would be objection to the removal because the Thakur has its own house where arrangements are made for sheba. I have said that my only objection is on the deed of dedication."

While, however, this is the only objection actually made by the objecting Defendant, it has to be pointed out that the idol is not otherwise represented in the proceedings, though the result might conceivably vitally affect its interests. In that sense the contest has related to the establishment of individual rights as between contesting Shebait. The interests of the female members of the family, especially in view of the fact that they are excluded from the managership of the idols, might need special protection. They are entitled to participate in the worship established by Mutty Lal Mullick without obstruction or inconvenience.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that it would be in the interests of all concerned that the idol should appear by a disinterested next friend appointed by the Court. The female members of the family should also be joined, and a scheme should be framed, for the regulation of the worship of the idols.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the case should be remitted to the High Court to be dealt with in accordance with this report. It will be necessary in these circumstances to set aside the decrees of both the Courts below. The parties must bear their own costs in the Courts of India and before this Board; any costs paid under either of the decrees of the Courts below will be repaid.

Public Demands Recovery Act (III, B O, of 1913), s. 37—Questions relating to irregularities in execution of certificate, must be determined by certificate officer—Bar to suit in Civil Court—Maintainability of suit on the ground of fraud—Sec. 38 (b), scope and effect of.

After an auction sale held in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act, the certificate-debtors first made an application to the certificate officer for setting aside the sale and then brought a suit for a declaration that the sale was void as being obtained by fraud and also on the ground of irregularities in relation to the execution proceedings. It was found that the Plaintiffs failed to substantiate the allegation of fraud:

Held—That the allegation of fraud being negatived the Plaintiffs' suit failed under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act.

It is not open to a certificate-debtor to evade the provisions of secs. 36 and 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act by making a fictitious allegation of fraud.

Under sec. 37 of the Act any question relating to the confirmation or setting aside of a sale held in execution of a certificate granted under the Act and arising between the certificate-holder and the certificate-debtors or their representatives shall be determined not by suit but by order of the certificate officer before whom such question arises or of such other certificate officer as he may determine.

The procedure laid down by sec. 37 must be adopted notwithstanding that the purchasers under the auction sale may be impleaded as being interested in the result.

BASANTA KUMAR PAL v. HARENDRA NATH MUKHOPADHYA.

No. 122 of 1922.

PAGE, J.—The Plaintiffs, who are the Respondents in this appeal, in the suit out of which the appeal arises claimed a declaration that a sale by auction pursuant to a certificate granted under the Public Demands Recovery Act, III (B. C.) of 1913, was void as being obtained by fraud and also on the ground of certain irregularities in relation to the execution proceedings. The suit was decreed and the 4th and 5th Defendants prefer this appeal and contend that the suit was incompetent and was not maintainable having regard to the provisions of sec. 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act. At the auction sale, the property in question was purchased by the second Defendant who subsequently assigned his interest therein for value to the 4th and 5th Defendants.

Now, certain irregularities which were material and, therefore, would have justified an application to the certificate officer to set aside the sale were canvassed before us, the two main irregularities being that no notice was served upon the certificate-debtors as provided by sec. 7 of the Act and that no sale-proclamation was published. Originally, an application was made on behalf of the Plaintiffs inter alia to set aside the sale under sec. 23 and the Appellants contend that the suit was incompetent by reason of the provisions of sec. 36 (b) of the Act which provides that "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, a sale of immoveable property in execution of a certificate shall not be held to be void on the ground that the notice required by sec. 7 has not been served; but a suit may be brought in the Civil Court to recover possession of such property or to set aside such sale on the ground that such notice has not been served and that the Plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity: provided that no such suit shall be entertained if the certificate-debtor has made appearance in the certificate proceeding or has applied to the certificate officer under sec. 22 or sec. 23 to set aside the sale." The answer of the Respondents is that their complaint was not merely that the notice required by sec. 7 had not been served but that there were other material irregularities in the execution proceedings and that, therefore, sec. 36 would not render their suit incompetent. The Appellants further contend that the irregularities complained of were irregularities which involved the decision of questions between the certificate-holder and the certificate-debtors or their representatives relating to the confirmation or setting aside by an order of the Court under the Public Demands Recovery Act of a sale held in execution in such certificate and that, pursuant to sec. 37 of the Act, the suit was not maintainable because that section provides that "any such question shall be determined not by suit but by order of the certificate officer before whom such question arises or of such other certificate officer as he may determine." Now, it is, in my opinion, clear that the questions which arose with respect to the irregular process of execution were questions which arose between the certificate-holder, that is, the Secretary of State, and the certificate-debtors, because, if the questions in issue were determined in a manner favourable to the certificate-debtors (who are the Respondents in this appeal), the effect would be that the execution levied pursuant to the certificate on behalf of the Secretary of State would be rendered nugatory. It is settled law that, where a question arises between the certificate-holder and the certificate-debtors or their representatives, the procedure laid down by sec. 37 must be adopted, notwithstanding that the purchasers under the auction sale may be impleaded as being interested parties in the suit. See Prosanna Kumar Sanyal v. Kalidas Sanyal (1). But that case is an authority for another proposition, namely, that it was the policy of the legislature in enacting the Public Demands Recovery Act to provide that such questions as would arise in the course of execution proceedings should be settled in the manner provided by sec. 37. Lord Macnaghten in delivering the judgment of the Board in the case to which I have referred observed as follows:—"It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of sec. 244 and that when a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser who is no party to the suit is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section." In my opinion, those observations are apposite in a consideration of the provisions of sec. 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act: and, in relation to any question which comes within the ambit of that section, recourse must be had to the procedure therein specified. I, therefore, think that, if the present suit was a suit based merely on the irregularities in the execution proceedings to which our attention has been adverted, it was not maintainable. A fortiori it was not maintainable when, in point of fact, an application in that behalf had been made to the certificate officer pursuant to the Act and in this suit it was sought to canvass anew the same question.

The Respondents, however, take one further point in opposition to the objection raised by the Appellants to the maintainability of the suit. The learned Advocate on behalf of the Plaintiffs has strenuously urged that sec. 37 in any event has no application, because in the suit it was sought to set aside the sale and to recover possession of the premises, the subject-matter thereof, on the ground that the execution proceedings were brought about by the fraud of the Defendant: and he argues that the terms of the first paragraph of that section are to take effect subject to the proviso that "a suit may be brought in a Civil Court in respect of any such question upon the ground of fraud." Now, it is abundantly clear from a perusal of the record in this case that the main contest in the trial Court ranged on the question as to whether the sale had been brought about through the fraud of the Defendants. Evidence was led for the purpose of proving that the Plaintiffs' Gomastha Najimuddin, the auction-purchaser, (the Defendant No. 2) and Krishna Behari Ray, a co-sharer with the Plaintiffs in the property in question, had combined to defraud the Plaintiffs of a valuable property by so acting in the matter of the execution proceedings that the sale should take place without the Plaintiffs having knowledge of, or, being privy to, such proceedings. My learned brother and I invited the Advocate for the Respondents to draw our attention to the evidence in support of this charge of fraud; but the evidence to which he referred us, in my opinion, was wholly inadequate to found a charge of fraud. With respect to the allegation of fraud, the learned trial Judge has arrived at a clear finding adverse to the Plaintiffs. So far am I from disturbing that finding that I find myself, after a perusal of the evidence, in full accord with it. The matter, therefore, stands thus: The Plaintiffs, after taking steps to have the sale set aside by making application to the certificate officer pursuant to the provisions of the Act, seek in this suit to re-open the same questions and, in addition, have added a claim to the same relief upon an allegation of fraud which proves to be groundless. If it were open to a certificate-debtor to adopt such a procedure, the provisions of secs. 36 and 37 would to a large extent become nugatory; for, a certificate-debtor, if minded to evade the provisions of the 37th section, could always bring a suit by making a fictitious allegation of fraud in respect of matters which under the section and in the absence of fraud, must be determined by means of the procedure therein specified. In my opinion, in the circumstances obtaining in this case, the allegation of fraud having been negatived, there is no other alternative but to hold under the terms of the Act that the Plaintiffs should fail in their suit unless they satisfy the Court that they are entitled to a decree based upon some ground other than those to which sec. 37 is made applicable. To my mind, the Plaintiffs have wholly failed to make out their claim on any such ground, and this suit must be held to be not maintainable. The decree passed therein must, therefore, be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs both here and below. The transferee Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and the Secretary of State for India are entitled to separate sets of costs in both the Courts.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

No. 123 of 1922.

The judgment that has just been delivered in appeal No. 122 will apply equally to this case also. This appeal is also decreed and the Plaintiffs' suit dismissed with separate sets of costs to the transferee Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and the Secretary of State for India in Council.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 1262 AND 1263 OF 1923.

GREAVES, J.
B. B. GHOSH, J.
1925,

GOUR CHANDRA DAS,
Defendant No. 1, Appelant,
v.
SUBASHINI DAS,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Hindu law—Gift to two persons—Interest of donees, whether joint—Survivorship—Joint tenancy or tenancy in common—Death of Defendant during pendency of proceedings—Decree passed without the legal representatives being brought on the record—Effect of such decree.

In a suit by a member of a Hindu family for recovery of possession of two jamas a compromise was arrived at and it was stipulated in the solenama that the Defendant would possess the properties during her life-time and after her death her two granddaughters would get them. Subsequently rent suits were brought by the landlord against the Defendant in the aforesaid suit and after her death which took place when the suits were pending decrees were passed without bringing her legal representatives on the record. In execution of these decrees the properties were sold and purchased by a stranger who took possession through Court. One of the granddaughters then died and after her death the other granddaughter brought a suit for possession of the entire properties:

Held—That the rent decrees were void and infructuous as having been passed against a dead person but the Plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of eight annas share only of the properties inasmuch as the two sisters took not as joint tenants but as tenants in common.

The principle of joint tenancy is unknown to Hindu law except in the case of coparcenary between the members of an undivided Mitakshara family.

These were appeals against the decrees of R. F. Lodge, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Murshidabad, dated the 15th of December 1922, modifying the decrees of Babu Rabindra Kumar Bosu, Munsif, Additional Court at Jangipur, dated the 27th of September 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Urukramdas Chakravarti for the Appellant.

Mr. Mahendra Nath Roy (Advocate) (with Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee) for the Respondent.

B. B. GHOSE, J.—These two appeals are against the judgment and decrees of the District Judge of Murshidabad modifying those of the Munsif of Jangipur. There were two suits for declaration of title and khas possession of two jamas. The lands originally belonged to Gagan Chandra Majhi and Uday Chandra Majhi and were mortgaged by them to one Keshab Choudhury.

Keshab Choudhury died sometime in 1889 and left a widow, a grandson and two granddaughters by his predeceased son. The widow was named Rukmini. The grandson Asutosh died in the year 1899 leaving a widow Rajabala.

The two granddaughters of Keshab were named Subashini and Bindubashini. Rukmini, as guardian of Keshab's grandson Asutosh, enforced the mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the mortgage decree on the 16th June 1892. Thereafter, Rajabala brought a suit against her for possession of the properties left by her husband Asutosh. This suit was compromised by a solenama, dated the 22nd January 1902. Under that solenama it was stipulated that certain properties, including the properties in suit, would be possessed by Rukmini during her life-time and after her death her granddaughters Subashini and Bindubashini would get them and they being entitled to them would possess them (Satvabati and Dakhal Karini). Then in 1914 and 1915, two rent suits were brought by the landlord against Rukmini with regard to the lands in dispute.

Rukmini died on the 14th January 1915 and decrees in the rent suits were passed after her death without bringing on the record the legal representatives of Rukmini. The rent decrees were then put into execution and the Defendant purchased the properties and took possession through Court in August 1917. Bindubashini died sometime in 1920. The present suits were brought by Subashini alone for possession of the entire lands in dispute. The Munsif passed a decree in favour of Subashini with regard to eight annas share on the ground that the rent decrees in execution of which the Defendant No. 1 had purchased the property were void and infructuous as having been passed against a dead person. After the death of Rukmini, Subashini and Bindubashini were entitled to eight annas share each of the properties in dispute and as the heirs of Bindubashini did not bring any suit, Plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for joint possession of eight annas share of the lands in each of the suits. There were appeals by both parties against the decree of the Munsif. The District

Judge held that by the terms of the solenama, the plaint lands went to Rukmini and after her death to her two granddaughters for their lives and he further held that after the death of Rukmini her two granddaughters Subashini and Bindubashini succeeded to the properties in dispute as joint tenants, and that after the death of Bindubashini, Subashini was entitled to the whole of the lands as the survivor of the two joint tenants. In that view he passed a decree for the entire lands in-favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendant No. 1 appeals, and the ground urged on his behalf is that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that Subashini and Bindubashini took as joint tenants. It ought to have been held that they were tenants in common. It was further contended that the two sisters were entitled to absolute interest in the properties and not only for their lives. It is not disputed before us that Subashini is not the legal heir of Bindubashini and the decree of the learned Judge can only be supported if his decision that the two sisters took as joint tenants and not as tenants in common is correct. There is nothing in the solenama which would show that the two ladies were to take as joint tenants. As was observed by the Privy Council in the case of Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (1). "The principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to Hindu law, except in the case of co-parcenary between the members of an undivided family." The District Judge, therefore, was in error in holding that the two sisters took as joint tenants. The contention on behalf of the Appellant that the ladies took an absolute interest was not persisted in, but it was argued that even if they took as life-tenants the share which belonged to Bindubashini would revert to the true owner; and in this case it would be Rajabala. The mere fact that Rajabala's representatives do not dispute the interpretation of the solenama could not confer any right on the Plaintiff to eject the Defendant from the entire land. The Defendant is entitled in a suit for ejectment to plead the title of a third party and to show that the Plaintiff is not entitled to the whole of the interest she claims. The Plaintiff's share is only eight annas.

It must, therefore, be held that the Plaintiff is entitled to recover possession of eight annas share only in the lands in dispute. The judgment and decree of the District Judge must, therefore, be set aside and those of the Munsif restored with costs in both appeals in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER

NO. 118 OF 1923.

PEARSON, J.

GRAHAM, J.

Heard, 20 and 21, May.

Judgment,

2, June.

KAYEM BISWAS,
Defendant, Appellant,
v.

BAHADUR KHAN and ors., Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec 47, Or 41, r. 23, Or. 43 (1) (n) Decree as drawn up alleged to include more land than claimed in the suit—Matter, if for executing Court or for fresh suit—Remand order—Appeal.

The Appellant sued the Respondents for recovery of possession of 5 bighas of land alleged to be within specified boundaries and got an ex parte decree. In a suit by the latter against the former to set aside the decree on the grounds, first, that the decree had been obtained by fraud, and secondly, that it was beyond the Court's jurisdiction in that it gave the Plaintiffs in that suit more land than he had claimed, the trial Court held that no fraud had been made out and that there was no substance in the other objection. On appeal, the Appellate Court without displacing the finding of the trial Court on the question of fraud remanded the suit for trial on the merits, being of opinion that the decree made in the previous suit was in excess of the Court's jurisdiction, having included land outside the subject-matter of the claim :

Held, on further appeal to the High Court—That an appeal lay to the High Court as the order though irregular was in form and substance one made under Or. 41, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code.

BASUMATI DEBI v. TARIT BASINI DAS (1) and PRASANNA CHANDRA CHATTOPADHYA v. BAIDYA NATH MISTRY (2) followed.

That the Court in the previous suit had territorial jurisdiction over the land in suit, and if the area specified in the decree in that suit which in terms gave them the 5 bighas claimed included any land which did not form the subject of the suit, that was a matter for determination under sec. 47 of the Code and not by a suit.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th February 1923, against the order of K. N. Chowdhury, Esq., Additional District Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 1st of December 1922, reversing the order of Babu Jogendra Kumar Dey, Munsif, Additional Court at that place, dated the 20th of June 1921.

The Appellant Kayem Biswas had obtained an ex parte decree against the Respondents Bahadur Khan and others in 1915 for recovery of possession of lands on establishment of his title. The latter then brought the present action for setting aside the said ex parte decree of 1915 as fraudulent and without jurisdiction. The trial Court, holding that no fraud had been established and that there was no substance in the objection as to jurisdiction, dismissed the suit. The Appellate Court without displacing the finding of the trial Court on the question of fraud, was of opinion that the decision of the Court in the previous suit was without jurisdiction, because it included land in excess of what was claimed in the plaint and set aside the decree and remanded the case for fresh trial. Against this order Kayem Biswas preferred the present appeal.

A preliminary objection was raised that no appeal lay as the order of remand was not under Or. 41, r. 23. The questions on the merits raised were, (1) whether the decree in the former suit, which is sought to be set aside in the present suit, having comprised land in excess of that which formed the subject-matter of the said former suit can be impugned by a fresh suit, or its validity could be determined only by an execution Court in an execution proceeding under sec. 47, Civil Procedure Code; and (2) whether in the absence of any finding of the lower Appellate Court as to fraud the trial Court having found no fraud the suit was competent.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal for the Appellant.
Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is against the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge of Khulna reversing a decision of the Munsif of the Additional Court at Khulna and re-

(1) 31 C. L. J. 854 (1918).

(2) 31 C. L. J. 300 (1920).

KAYEM BISWAS v. BAHADUR KHAN.

manding the case for fresh decision in accordance with certain instructions given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.

The Defendant No. 1 Kayem Biswas, now Appellant, brought a suit in the year 1915 against the Plaintiffs-Respondents for recovery of possession of certain lands on establishment of title, and obtained an ex parte decree. The Plaintiffs then filed the present suit to set aside the said decree as fraudulent and without jurisdiction, and for confirmation of their title to the land, and for other consequential reliefs.

A number of issues were framed upon the pleadings, one of which No. 8 was in the following terms :—

“ Is the decree in Title Suit No. 343 of 1915 fraudulent and without jurisdiction as alleged? Is it liable to be set aside? ”

The Munsif found upon this issue that no fraud had been established and that there was no substance in the objection as to jurisdiction. He accordingly in view of his findings on this issue and on issues Nos. 9 and 11 dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge without going into the question of fraud, or coming to any finding thereon, held that the decree was without jurisdiction inasmuch as the claim was for 5 bighas odd, whereas the decree was for 12 bighas 15 cottas. He therefore set aside the decree and remanded the case for fresh decision in the manner indicated above. The Defendants thereon filed this second appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the Respondents to the hearing of the appeal, the argument being that there are only two provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to remand, viz., rr. 23 and 25 of Or. 41, and that, as the present case does not come under either, no appeal lies. It is clear that the order was not made under Or. 41, r. 25. It is urged, however, on behalf of the Appellant that in form and substance the order, though it may have been irregular, must be held to have been made under r. 23 of Or. 41, and that, that being so, an appeal lies. This view is supported by authority, see Basumati Debi v. Tarit Basini Dasi (1) and Prasanna Chandra Chattopadhyaya v. Baidya Nath Mistry (2) and we think following those decisions that we must hold that the appeal is competent.

On the merits two points have been urged before us on behalf of the Appellants. Firstly, it is argued that having regard to the findings of the lower Appellate Court and the admitted facts in the Court of first instance the question which arises being, as to whether the decree in the former suit comprises excess land which did not form the subject-matter of the suit, is a question which can only be gone into by the execution Court under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and a fresh suit did not lie. Secondly, it was contended that, inasmuch as the Plaintiffs sought to set aside the former decree on the ground of fraud, they could only succeed on proving fraud, and in the absence of such finding the merits of the case could not be gone into in the second suit.

In regard to the first point objection is taken on behalf of the Respondents that this question was not raised in the Court of Appeal below, and that it ought therefore not to be allowed to be argued here for the first time. We think, however, that we are bound to take notice of the argument. It appears to us too to be well-founded. Sec. 47, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, on their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.

(2) 81 C. L. J. 360 (1920).

KAYEM BISWAS v. BAHADUR KHAN.

The main object underlying this section is to prevent multiplicity of suits and to secure that all matters, which can be decided in the suit, shall be so decided. The question which then arises is whether the matter arising in this particular instance was one which ought to be determined by the executing Court and not by separate suit. Now the kernel of the matter according to the lower Appellate Court was that the decree was for land in excess of that which formed the subject of the suit, and that it included land which ought not to have been included. It seems to us that these are matters for determination by the Court executing the decree, and that looked at from that point of view the subsequent suit was bad.

Coming to the second point it is to be observed that the main contention in the present suit was that the decree had been obtained by fraud. The trial Court came to a definite finding that fraud had not been established. That finding has not been displaced in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. Indeed the learned Judge has not gone into the question of fraud at all. The finding of the first Court upon this point must therefore stand, and in the absence of any such finding in the Court of Appeal below we do not think it was open to the learned Judge to go into the merits of the case. The learned Judge without entering into the question of fraud held that the decree had been passed without jurisdiction and upon this ground held that it should be treated as a nullity and set it aside. We do not see how the decree can be regarded as having been made without jurisdiction.

The word jurisdiction may be used in two senses, viz., in the sense of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation, or in the sense of power to make the order. Jurisdiction certainly does not fail here in the former sense, as the Court clearly had territorial jurisdiction over the land in suit, nor has this apparently ever been disputed. It seems to follow therefore that jurisdiction must have been held by the learned Judge to be defective in the other sense, viz., that the trial Court had no power to make the decree as drawn up. In this connection the learned Additional District Judge has observed as follows :—

“ Now jurisdiction of a Court in a particular suit is confined to the subject-matter of litigation as specified or set forth in the plaint. No Court can by its decree go beyond that subject-matter so as to affect matters outside, or matters not included therein, nor has any Court power to give a Plaintiff more than what he claims, or to give him one thing when he claims a different thing altogether in his suit.”

The question is, were the Plaintiffs in the original suit given a decree for something different from what they asked for? What they asked for was for about 5 bighas of land within certain defined limits. The decree apparently gave them about 5 bighas (vide opening sentences of the judgment of the trial Court), and if the area so decreed included any land which did not form the subject of the suit, that was a matter for the determination of the Court executing the decree, and could not form the subject-matter of a separate suit.

For the reasons stated we think that the decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported. The appeal must accordingly be allowed with costs of both Courts, the decree of the Court of Appeal below set aside, and the judgment and decree of the Munsif restored.

[NANDI, Defendant No. 1,

Appellant,

v.

BHAGABATI DEVI

CHAUDHURANI and ors.,

Respondents.

SUBRAWARDY, J.
DUVAL, J.

Appeal, competency of—Parties, defect of—Decree for joint possession of land—Appeal by Defendant—Death of one Plaintiff-Respondent pending appeal—Dismissal of application for setting aside abatement—Effect of abatement of appeal as against one Plaintiff-Respondent, if renders whole appeal incompetent—Application in such circumstances for adding legal representative of deceased Respondent as party, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 22, r. 4, cl. (3), Or. 41, rr. 4, 20 and 33—Or. 41, r. 20, s. ops of, if overrides provisions of Or. 22—Addition of party—Court's inherent power

The Plaintiffs jointly sued for recovery of possession of certain lands on declaration of title thereto and obtained a decree for joint possession. The Defendant appealed to the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents died. The Appellant applied after the period of limitation to have the abatement of the appeal as against that Respondent set aside and for substitution of his legal representative. A Rule was issued but it was discharged. Thereupon the Appellant filed an application to have the legal representative of the deceased Respondent added as a party. At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of the appeal:

Held—That the appeal was incompetent and could not proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents.

KALI DAYAL BHATTACHARJA v. NAGENDRA NATH PAKRASHI (2) followed.

DHARANJIT NARAIN SINGH v. CHANDRESWAR PRASAD NARAIN SINGH (1) referred to.

CHANDERSANGH v. KHMABHAI (3) and UPENDRA KUMAR CHAKRAVARTI v. SHAM LAL MANDAL (4) dissented from.

That the provisions of Or. 41, rr. 4, 20 and 33 of the Civil Procedure Code, were not applicable, and the Appellant's application to add the legal representative of the deceased Respondent as a party was incompetent.

Or. 41, r. 4 is limited to the case of Appellants, and does not entitle a person against whom the decree is passed to have it varied in the absence of a person in whose favour it was made.

Or. 41, r. 20 is not intended to override the provisions of Or. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code.

PULIN BEHARI ROY v. MAHENDRA CHANDRA GHOSAL (5) referred to.

The right obtained by a Respondent when the appeal abates is a valuable right and should not be lightly treated.

Held, further—That whatever view might be taken with regard to the inherent power of the Court as contained in Or. 41 of the Civil Procedure Code or outside the Code, the present case was not one in which such power should be exercised.

This was an appeal against the decree of H. Comyn Maitland, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Rangpur, dated the 19th of April 1921, modifying the decree of Babu Manmatha Nath Basu, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 22nd of September 1919.

The facts of the case material to this report are as follows :—

The Plaintiffs jointly sued the Defendants for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of the lands in suit. The suit was decreed, and the Plaintiffs obtained a decree for khas possession. Defendant No. 1 preferred this second appeal. During the pendency of this appeal, the Plaintiff-Respondent No. 3 Gopal Das Roy Chaudhury died on the 26th November 1923. More than three months after the death of the said Respondent, the Appellant obtained a Rule [Civil Rule No. 574 (s) of 1924] on the 9th May 1924 to have the abatement of the appeal as against that Respondent set aside and for substitution of his legal representative in his place. The Rule was opposed and a counter affidavit was filed to prove that the Appellant knew of the death of the deceased Respondent just after his death. Their Lordships (Suhrawardy and Duval, JJ.) discharged the Rule with costs on the 18th February 1925.

The present appeal came on for hearing on the 11th March 1925. Before the hearing the Appellant filed an application praying to have the legal representative of the deceased Respondent added as a party to the appeal, and this application was heard along with the appeal.

Mr. Ram Chandra Majumdar, Babus Sarat Kumar Mitter and Kali Kinkar Chakravarty for the Appellant.

Babus Hemendra Chandra Sen, Pro-motha Nath Mitter and Jatindra Mohan Chaudhury for the Respondents.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar for the Minor Respondents.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Respondents took a preliminary objection to the competency of the appeal. The appeal had abated as against the Plaintiff-Respondent No. 3, and his legal representative had not been brought on the record. The Rule for setting aside the abatement of the appeal as against the deceased Respondent and for substitution of his heir had been discharged. The whole appeal became incompetent in consequence and could not proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents. The decree obtained by the Plaintiffs was for joint possession. The effect of the abatement of the appeal as against one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents was that the appeal could not proceed as against the other Plaintiffs-Respondents. The appeal had become imperfectly constituted and the Appellant could not invite the Court to hear the appeal.

Referred to Bijoy Gopal v. Umcs Chandra (6), Tarif v. Khatijannessa (7), Dharanjit v. Chandreswar (1), Baser v. Fazel (8), Azimuddin v. Tara Sankar (9), Sriram v. Hridoy (10) and Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (2). The point has been fully considered by Mookerjee J., in the decision in Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (2) in which all the cases have been reviewed. Even in the case where the Plaintiffs' shares are specified it has been held that the abatement of the appeal as against one Plaintiff-Respondent renders the whole appeal incompetent. MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI v. BHAGABATI DEVI CHAUDHURANI.

Mr. Ram Chandra Majumdar for the Appellant.—The appeal was not imperfectly constituted and can proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents. Relied on Chandersangh v. Khimabhai (8) and Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandal (4) and Or. 41, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appeal was not incompetent though one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents is not a party to the appeal. In any case, the Court was competent, under Or. 41, rr. 20 and 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, to add the legal representative of the deceased Respondent as a party to the appeal. An application for that purpose had been put in and the prayer ought to be granted. The order should finally be made in the exercise of the Court's inherent powers to have the legal representative of the deceased Respondent added as a party. Referred to Pulin Behari Roy v. Mahendra Chandra Ghosal (5).

SUHWARDY, J.—The present suit was brought by several persons for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, the disputed land which is said to be on the boundary between the Plaintiffs' and the Defendant's Mouzahs. The real issue in the case that was tried was whether the disputed land forms part of the Plaintiffs' Mouzah Kadamtola or of the Defendant's Mouzah Sitaijhar. The trial Court decreed the suit in part holding that a portion of the land in suit belonged to the Plaintiffs' Mouzah. On appeal by the Plaintiffs, the learned District Judge found that the entire land in suit belonged to the Plaintiffs' Mouzah and decreed the suit.

Against this decree the present appeal has been preferred by Defendant No. 1 making all the Plaintiffs and some of the Defendants Respondents to the appeal. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court the Plaintiff-Respondent No. 3 Gopal Das Roy Chaudhury died and an application was made by the Appellant after the period of limitation fixed for that purpose to have the abatement of the appeal as against that Respondent set aside and for substitution of his heirs in his place. A Rule was issued by this Court, but it was finally discharged on the 18th February last. The result of the decision in the Rule is that the appeal as against the Plaintiff-Respondent No. 3 has abated.

At the hearing of this appeal a preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the Respondent that the appeal is incompetent and cannot proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents against whom it must be taken to have been dismissed. I am of opinion that this objection must prevail. The suit was brought jointly by a number of persons for recovery of possession of a certain property. The suit was decreed and the Plaintiffs without specification of their interest in the property were declared to be entitled to possession on a certain right claimed by them. Any person who is dissatisfied with the decree must have a declaration in the presence of the entire body of the Plaintiffs that they are not entitled to the right claimed by them which is based upon a common ground of title alleged by them. In a case like the present the real test to be applied is what is suggested in the case of Dharanjit Narain Singh v. Chandreswar Prasad Narain Singh (1), namely, whether the suit as framed could proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs. There is yet another test—whether, if the Plaintiffs were Appellants, the appeal could proceed in the absence of one of the Plaintiffs either as Appellant or Respondent. If the Defendant succeeds in this appeal and it is declared that the property in suit belongs to his Mouzah then there will be two decrees, one against all the Respondents on the record in whose presence it is decreed that the property belongs to the Defendant's Mouzah and another decree of the lower Court in favour of Plaintiff No. 3 who is no party to this appeal to the effect that the property in suit belongs to the Plaintiffs' Mouzah of which he was a part proprietor. In view of this anomalous result it has been held that an appeal arising out of a suit for possession of land to which one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents is not a party cannot proceed in his absence. The point was fully considered in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharji v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (2), where all the cases on the point have been referred to and commented upon. Most of these cases were placed before us by the Appellant and the question re-argued. I have given my best considerations to this point and decided to follow the decision in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharja v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (2). Reliance is placed on behalf of the Appellant on the decisions in the cases of Chandersangh v. Khimabhai (3) and Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandal (4) which follows the Bombay case. These cases have been considered in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharja v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (2) and have been justly distinguished and are not of much authority because no reasons were assigned in support of the view there taken. In the Bombay case the real point was as to the competency of the appeal in the absence of one of the Appellants. In considering the case of one of the Respondents who had also died and whose heirs were not brought on the record, the learned Judges observed that the Court could proceed under sec. 544 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to Or. 41, r. 20 of the present Code) against the rest of the Respondents. In the case of Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandal (4) the Bombay case was referred to and accepted without any argument. I do not find myself prepared to follow these cases. It is argued further on behalf of the Appellant that we should proceed in this case under Or. 41, r. 4, C. P. C., though one of the Plaintiffs-Respondents is not a party to this appeal. I do not think that we should follow the course suggested. That rule is limited to the case of Appellants. An analogous provision is to be found in the proviso to Or. 9, r. 13, C. P. C. Where a number of persons are adversely affected by a common decree any one of them may move the Court to have the decree varied and the Court may vary it not only in respect of such person but also in favour of other parties against whom it was passed. But it does not entitle a person against whom the decree is passed to have it varied in the absence of a person in whose favour it was made.

It is next prayed that we may proceed under the provisions of Or. 41, r. 20, C. P. C., and bring in the heirs of the deceased Plaintiff-Respondent No. 3 on the record and hear the appeal in their presence. An application for that purpose has been formally made. I do not think that we should accede to this request. Or. 41, r. 20 is ordinarily intended to apply to cases where the Court finds that it cannot proceed with the suit without the presence of a party who was not made a party to the appeal. It is not intended to override the provisions of Or. 22, C. P. C. The right obtained by a Respondent when the appeal abates as against him is a valuable right and should not be lightly treated. Reference in this connection has been made to the case of Pulin Behari Roy v. Mahendra Chandra Ghosal (5), where the procedure suggested by the Appellant was adopted. Without examining the ratio of that case we are not prepared to follow the procedure adopted therein.

We are again asked to exercise our powers under Or. 41, r. 33. That provision of the law is also not applicable to this case. It is intended to cover cases where the Court may vary the decree in such a way or pass such an order as to make the party in whose favour the order of the lower Court was passed liable under the order passed by the Appellate Court. Whatever view may be taken with regard to the inherent power of this Court as contained in Or. 41, C. P. C., or outside the Code, the present is not one in which such power should be exercised.

In the result, this appeal must be held to be incompetent and dismissed with costs.

The application filed by the Appellant is rejected.

Judgment, 3, April.

A. H. FORBES,
Appellant,

v.

SIR L. E. RALLI and ors., Respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 115—Landlord permitting tenant to build, representing that written lease conferred permanency of tenure but at a variable rent—Landlord, if may eject tenant—Estoppel.

A tenant desiring to erect pucca structures on the leased land asked the permission of the landlord whose agent in reply wrote to say that the lease was a permanent lease and gave the tenant right to erect buildings, but it did not entitle him to hold at fixed rate and that the rent was liable to enhancement after proper legal notice and that pending consideration of a proposal to fix the rent permanently, the tenant might commence the house if he liked:

Held—That the statement in the letter was a statement of fact and not an expression of opinion, and the house having been erected, the landlord was estopped from ejecting the tenant by sec. 115 of the Evidence Act.

This was an appeal (No. 5 of 1924) from a decree of the High Court at Patna made in a Letters Patent appeal on the 17th May 1922.

That appeal reversed a decree, dated the 19th July 1921, of a single Judge of the said Court which had reversed decrees by the District Judge of Purnea, dated the 8th September 1919, and the Munsif of Araria, dated the 16th September 1918, who had dismissed the Appellant's claim.

The Appellant, as lessor, sued to eject

the Respondents from certain lands in Pargana Sultanpur which had been leased to them by a kabuliyat and patta, dated the 22nd June 1894 and registered shortly afterwards. Certain buildings for trading purposes were contemplated by the lease and were erected by the Respondents, and in 1903 the latter applied for a licence to build a pucca house.

Permission was granted by the Appellant whose manager wrote to the Respondent's agent a letter, informing him that the lease was a permanent one but that the rent was liable to enhancement.

The house was erected and a "nazarana" or bonus paid to the Appellant. On the 23rd August 1916 the Appellant desiring to raise the rent on the land gave the Respondent firm notice to quit but offered them at the same time a new tenancy at Rs. 80 per bigha.

The Respondent firm refused to quit the premises and at the expiry of the notice the Appellant instituted this suit for possession.

The facts and the relevant documents are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

The suit was dismissed by the Munsif and his decision was upheld on appeal by the District Judge. A second appeal was preferred to the High Court and was heard by Ross, J., who was of opinion that the terms of the lease were plain and constituted a lease from year to year.

He rejected the plea of estoppel put forward by the defence and made a decree for ejectment.

A further appeal under the Letters Patent was heard by Dawson-Miller, C. J., and Mullick, J., who reversed the decision of Ross, J., and dismissed the suit. The learned Judges were of opinion that the lease in its inception did not create a permanent tenure but they held that the statements made on behalf of the Appellant by the letter of the 31st December 1903 were statements of fact which constituted an estoppel under sec. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, which operated to prevent the Appellant from evicting the Respondent firm.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.—On the construction of the document the lease was not a permanent one. From its terms it was clearly a lease from year to year. That such was the intention is clear from the evidence, which is undisputed, that the Appellant was an executor and had no power to grant a permanent lease.

The Appellant does not raise that contention but the fact is relevant in construing the lease.

Further no permanent buildings were contemplated by the lease and when a permanent building was required both parties realised that a licence should be given for its erection.

There is no estoppel under sec. 115 of the Evidence Act. The letter of the 31st December 1903 did not in fact make any representation, but if it is construed as a representation, that representation was never acted on by the Respondents.

The letter was written without the Appellant's authority and at most it can only be construed as an unauthorised statement by the Appellant's manager on a question of law. The words in sec. 115 of the Evidence Act "to believe a thing to be true" make it abundantly clear that the representation to create an estoppel must be a representation of fact.

They referred to Ramsden v. Dyson (1), Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (5), Rashdall v.

Sir John Simon, K. C., Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and S. Hyam for the Respondent firm.—The Respondents were under the impression that their lease was a permanent one and that construction is fortified by the fact that there was no fixity of rent and the lease was for building purposes.

Promoda Nath v. Sri Govindo (14).

In order that there should be no misunderstanding the Respondents obtained from the Appellant a written assurance confirming them in their view of the construction and on the faith of such assurance they erected a permanent building. There is no question of equitable estoppel outside the provisions of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act. That section which is probably based on the decision in Freeman v. Cooke (15) sets out the mode in which estoppel shall operate, and the facts proved in this case bring it within the section.

Sarat Ch. Dey v. Gopal Ch. Laha (4) shows that it is incorrect to say that a representation of law cannot operate as an estoppel.

But the representation here, even if it is a representation as to a right of ownership, is a matter of fact. Cooper v. Phibbs (12).

The principle of English law laid down in that case and in Earl Beauchamp v. Winn (13) has been applied in India.

Narsingh Dyal v. Ram Narain (11), Sarat Ch. Dey v. Gopal Ch. Laha (4) and Ahmad Yar Khan v. Secretary of State (3).

Reference was also made to Ismail Khan v. Joygoon (16) and Ewart on Estoppel, pp. 74 and 75.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff-Appellant in the Court of the Munsif at Araria in the District of Purnea to evict the Defendants from certain lands he had leased to them in the year 1894.

The suit was dismissed by the Munsif, as will be more particularly mentioned later in the course of this judgment. The Munsif's order was affirmed by the District Judge. The Plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court, which was heard by a single Judge, Mr. Justice Ross, who reversed the judgment of the District Judge, and decreed the Plaintiff's claim. On the Defendants' appeal under the Letters Patent, a Division Bench, consisting of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mullick, reversed the decision of Mr. Justice Ross, and agreeing with the District Judge, dismissed the suit of the Plaintiff. He now appeals to His Majesty in Council on the grounds that the High Court misconstrued the terms of the lease under which the Defendants were let into possession, and have wrongly applied, under the circumstances of the case, the doctrine of estoppel in respect of his claim.

A brief narration of the facts which have led to this unfortunate litigation will explain the position of the parties.

Mr. Forbes, the Plaintiff, owns considerable landed property in the District of Purnea. The Defendants are Greek merchants trading largely in country produce in India under the name and designation of Ralli Brothers. On the 22nd June 1894, the Defendants' agent, one Acatos, obtained from the Plaintiff a lease of four bighas of land "for the purpose of erecting buildings, putting up presses, etc., for trading." The lease (Ex. 5) is in English. Acatos executed a kabuliyat which is identical in terms with the lease. As the question for determination turns, in a great measure, on the words of this lease, their Lordships think it desirable to give, so far as is necessary, the actual language of Ex. 5. It is as follows :—

"That whereas land is required by Mr. C. Acatos, Agent of Messrs. Ralli Brothers, Merchants, of Calcutta, for the purpose of erecting buildings, putting up presses, etc., for trading, I, A. T. Ricketts, Manager for A. H. Forbes, Executor to the Estate of the late A. J. Forbes, agree to give a lease of four bighas of land to the aforesaid Mr. C. Acatos for the above purpose from year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha or total annual rental of Rs. 180."

Admittedly the Defendants took possession of the leased lands for the purposes stated in Ex. 5. In 1903 a gentleman of the name of Carras took the place of Mr. Acatos as the local agent of Ralli Brothers at Purnea. So far as appears from the record, he resided at a place called Forbesganj, which had been established by the Plaintiff or his father as the centre of his estate. A railway station had been opened close by, and Forbesganj acquired a certain importance.

About this time circumstances appear to have arisen which necessitated the erection of a pucca or masonry building for the residence of Mr. Carras. As the lease, to use the language of the District Judge, was somewhat vaguely phrased, the Defendants, Ralli Brothers, considered it expedient to obtain the Plaintiff's express permission for the purpose of erecting the structure they proposed for their agent. At this time a Mr. Duff was acting as Mr. Forbes' manager or agent.

After going carefully through the evidence, their Lordships have no doubt that both the Munsif and the District Judge have correctly held that at the interview which took place in consequence of the Defendants' applications for permission to raise the structure they proposed, and at which the terms of the lease of 1894 were discussed, Mr. Forbes was personally present. In his evidence in the Munsif's Court the Plaintiff states that he does not remember whether he was present or not. Mr. Carras positively swears that he was present and, in fact, took part in the discussion. Mr. Duff, for some reason or other, has not been examined on behalf of the Plaintiff. If, as it is said, he was ill at the time and unable to attend, he could have been examined, as the lower Courts point out, on commission.

Their Lordships are thus left face to face with two statements, one by Mr. Forbes saying that he does not remember, the other by Mr. Carras, who positively swears that Mr. Forbes was present.

In their Lordships' opinion, the Courts which were by law vested with the jurisdiction to deal with the facts have properly come to the conclusion that Carras' statement should be accepted. The letter of the 31st December 1903 (Ex. A), which

A. H. FORBES v. SIR L. E. RALLI.

Duff wrote to Carras, is clear and precise on this point. Mr. Duff, writing as manager of the Sultanpur Estate, namely, the Plaintiff's estate, says as follows:—

"My dear Carras,

"Referring to your conversation of this morning with Mr. Forbes and myself, I write (?) at your request to say that the lease executed by Mr. C. Acates, dated the 22nd June 1894, is a permanent lease and gives you the right to erect buildings, but it does not entitle you to hold at fixed rate, and the rent is liable to enhancement after proper legal notice. If your firm desires to have a permanent lease at a fixed rate of (torn) will be glad to see the proposed draft of lease and to show it to Mr. Forbes. In the meantime, you can commence the house if you like to do so."

With reference to this letter the Plaintiff has raised a number of objections which appear to their Lordships to be feeble and untenable. In the first place, he says that it was a private letter. The District Judge held, as their Lordships think rightly, that it is an official letter written by Duff in his capacity as manager. It is precise in its language and tells the Defendants that the lease of June 1894 is "a permanent lease and gives you the right to erect buildings, but it does not entitle you to hold at fixed rate and the rent is liable to enhancement."

The Defendants appear to have paid a bonus or nazarana for the permission to raise the structure they proposed, and on the 10th January 1904, a "parwangi" was issued from the Plaintiff's zimidari cutchary in the Hindi language, the vernacular of the Province, giving the sanction for the erection of the building. The parwangi, as it is called, requires some attention. Its translation is as follows:—

"To the Manager,

"Permission granted to Messrs. Ralli Brothers, Gole-dar of Gola at station Forbesganj, Pargana Sultanpur.

"Whereas you prayed through the agent of the said Gola for permission to erect a Pucca house in your Bandobasti (settled) Gola. As on enquiry and measurement you wish to erect a house on 2 C. 15 Dhurkis of land on payment of Rs. 21 as Nazarana per mensem, and the said sum has under a Chalan been deposited through your agent in the estate. Therefore permission is granted to you to erect a masonry house on 2 C. 15 Dhurkis of land in your Bandobasti (settled) Gola. A Nazarana (bonus) of rupees twenty per Cottah will be taken in case more land is occupied in constructing the Pucca house. All rights which you possess in your Bandobasti (settled) Gola land under the Patta and Kabuliat will remain intact. No other right will be created under this permit. This Parwangi (sanction) or permission is intended for the said house only. Dated the 10th January 1904. Sultanpur."

Considerable stress was laid by Plaintiff's Counsel on the words which appear towards the end of this document—"No other right will be created under this permit;" and it was urged that the intention of the Plaintiff was to restrict the rights of the lessee within the limits imposed by the original lease of 1894. Mr. Carras deposes that he does not know the Hindi language and did not, therefore, know of the terms of this document until some time after, and that he took it to be an acknowledgment of the bonus that he had paid. This statement has been accepted by both the Munsif and the District Judge. In their Lordships' opinion, in whatever way this document may be understood, it does not affect in any degree the effect of what took place at the interview with Mr. Forbes and Mr. Duff, the result of which is embodied in (Ex. A) the letter of the 31st December 1903.

Acting on the suggestion contained in the letter of Mr. Duff of the 31st December 1903 (Ex. A), viz., that if the Defendants desired to have a permanent lease at a fixed rate (of rent), he would be glad to see a proposed draft of lease and to show it to Mr. Forbes, the Defendants appear to have instructed their solicitors, Messrs. Sanderson and Co., to prepare the necessary draft.

From the document, to which reference will be made presently, it appears that 'Sandersons' applied to Mr. Forbes for the production of a number of papers which they wished to inspect before preparing the draft.

The Defendants have put in the reply of Mr. Duff to this application of Messrs. Sanderson and Co., but not the letter Sanderson and Co. wrote to Mr. Forbes.

The Plaintiff's advisers appear to have produced in the Munsif's Court a certain paper which, for purposes of identification, appears to have been marked "X." It was alleged that that was the communication in question, but they failed to prove the signature and naturally it was not admitted in evidence.

Another effort was made in the first Court to introduce the paper in question among the exhibits. They again failed to prove it. No question regarding the non-admission of this paper was raised before the District Judge or in the High Court. Although in the appeal to the High Court twenty-three grounds were taken, not one relates to it; nor is there any reference to this rejected letter in the grounds for leave to appeal to His Majesty's Council in the case lodged by the Plaintiff before the Registrar.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no substance in the present contention relative to what is called "X."

Coming to the letter addressed by Duff to Messrs. Sanderson (Ex. A1), it bears date the 23rd January 1904, and is in these terms:—

"Sirs,

"With reference to your No. 302 of 13th instant to the address of Mr. A. H. Forbes, I am desired by him to inform you that matters of greater importance than the lease of a few bighas of land are constantly transacted in this estate without the production of such papers as you wish to inspect. There are no special title deeds for the plot of land which Messrs. Ralli Brothers have held for the last nine years, and if Mr. Forbes had no title, it follows that Messrs. Ralli Brothers have also had no title for the past. Mr. Forbes, therefore, declines to produce such valuable papers as he holds, and considers that the existing lease, with the addition of the sanction recently given to erect the building is sufficient for all requirements."

This being the position of the parties, the point for determination resolves itself into a simple question of fact. There can be no question that upon the letter (Ex. A) of the 31st December 1903, the Defendants commenced the building for the residence of their agent and completed it at considerable expense. Mr. Forbes knew of it and frequently visited the place. No question was raised until 1916. In that year the Plaintiff's zemindari cutchary (estate office) was burnt down. He demanded contributions from his tenants to rebuild the cutchary. They all agreed to pay except the Defendants, who stood on their rights. It was then that the question of their eviction was first mooted. His evidence, long and involved as it seems to their Lordships, appears thoroughly consistent with the view taken by the District Judge.

Both the Munsif and the District Judge, in view of the purpose for which the lease was granted and the surrounding circumstances to which they refer in their judgments, were of opinion that the demise in its inception was of a permanent character, save and except as to the rate of rent; and that the words "from year to year" did not affect the permanent character of the lease, but only gave expression to the provision that the rent was variable from year to year upon proper notice. They also held that the Plaintiff was estopped by his acts and representations from questioning the permanency of the tenure.

In the view their Lordships take of the case, they do not think it necessary to determine whether in its inception the lease created a permanent tenure, for they fully agree with the Courts in India that the Plaintiff is estopped from interfering with the Defendants' right to hold the land.

The doctrine of estoppel which the Courts in India, save and except Mr. Justice Ross, have applied to the claim of the Plaintiff is embodied in sec. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872. It is as follows :—

“When one person has by his declaration, act or omission intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative to deny the truth of that thing.”

The Munsif and District Judge have rightly held, in their Lordships' opinion, that the statement in Ex. A is a statement of fact and not an expression of opinion, as is contended by the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff distinctly represented to the Defendants' agent, Carras, that the lease granted in 1894 was a permanent lease, and that under it he was entitled to erect buildings, as the lease distinctly stated; but that there was no fixity of rent. It has been urged on behalf of the Plaintiff that it was a yearly tenancy, and to hold that the Plaintiff was estopped by his conduct as evinced by the letter of the 31st December 1903, from enforcing eviction, would be tantamount to creating a new contract. It is said also that the contract of 1894 was a registered document, and no variation or alteration or change can be made in it except by a registered contract. The Defendants did not contend that it was a new contract or ask for a new contract; nor have the Courts in India held that estoppel creates a new contract. Estoppel prevents the Plaintiff from evicting from their holding the Defendants, whom he, the Plaintiff, induced by his representation and conduct to believe that they had a fixity of tenure, although not of rent, in the lands that had been leased to them. It gives effect to the representation that induced them to act as they did.

In the case of Ramsden v. Dyson (1), the principle which governs this class of case is stated by Lord Kingsdown in the following terms :—

“The rule of law applicable to the case appears to me to be this: If a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or, what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord, that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land, with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation. This was the principle of the decision in Gregory v. Mitchell (2), and, as I conceive, is open to no doubt.”

This principle has been accepted by this Board in the case of Ahmad Yar Khan v. The Secretary of State for India (3).

The exposition by Lord Shand in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (4) of the rule of equitable estoppel embodied in sec. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act has been quoted in extenso in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the present case, and does not need repetition. Their Lordships desire to record their full concurrence with the principle there laid down.

They do not consider it necessary to refer to all the authorities that have been cited on both sides, as they think that the views expressed by Lord Kingsdown and Lord Shand completely answer the contentions of the Appellant. Upon a re-

Parties—Persons added as co-Plaintiffs under alleged assignment of share in subject of suit—Decree, whether can be made jointly in favour of all Plaintiffs without the consent of Defendants or without production of deed of assignment by original Plaintiff—Proper decree in such a case, safeguarding rights of added Plaintiffs.

Persons who assert that they have a derivative interest in the stake of a suit cannot, by getting added as Plaintiffs, be associated in a decree in favour of the person who has the only real title. The Defendants have an interest in this as well as the Plaintiff, and it is at least safe to say that no decree would be granted to the real Plaintiff and the added Plaintiffs jointly unless there had either been a consent signified by the Defendants or a legal conveyance or assignment produced by the real Plaintiff of a share of the subject of the suit.

Judgment was given in favour of the real Plaintiff but with the addition that this was to be without prejudice to the added

Plaintiffs to recover in respect of any conveyance or assignment made or of any contract to convey or assign such share of the property recovered under the judgment as might appertain to them in respect of such conveyance, assignment or contract.

This was an application by the Appellant and Plaintiff Musammat Lajwanti for the rescission of an order in Council made in appeal No. 60 of 1922, and a fresh order made in conformity with the words of the judgment.

The appeal was heard on the 10th and 11th of December 1923 and the judgment of the Judicial Committee was delivered on the 29th January 1924 and was reported in 28 C. W. N. 960.

In the concluding paragraph of the judgment of the Board (28 C. W. N. at p. 962) the following words appeared: "The result is that the appeal must be allowed and judgment pronounced in favour of the Plaintiff"—the word being used in the singular. The order in Council pronounced judgment in favour of the "Appellants," in the plural, and the present application was by Lajwanti who contended that the order should be amended so as to conform to the judgment pronounced and that the relief granted should be in her favour alone.

Mr. W. Wallach for the Petitioner.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the other Appellants.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—This petition is presented under somewhat peculiar and unsatisfactory circumstances. In the recent appeal of Musammat Lajwanti and others, judgment was pronounced in which their Lordships said that they would humbly advise His Majesty to allow the appeal and pronounce judgment in favour of the Plaintiff. That by the expression "Plaintiff," their Lordships designated Musammat Lajwanti alone without the addition of the other Appellants, is made perfectly clear not only by the use of the singular and not the plural, but also by a sentence in the judgment in which their Lordships, after narrating the claim and suit of the Musammat, added, "Certain persons who might have been Respondents backed up the Plaintiff and were added as Plaintiffs, a very unnecessary proceeding, as no decree could pass in their favour." No representation was made to their Lordships as to there being any error in this.

On the judgment being presented to His Majesty in Council for embodiment in the formal order, the word "Appellants" in the plural was used. The Plaintiff and Appellant, Musammat Lajwanti, now presents this petition to have the order made rescinded and an order pronounced in favour of herself alone. Now in ordinary circumstances this petition would be granted as a matter of course. It is the duty of their Lordships to see that the order which His Majesty makes in Council faithfully represents the advice which in the judgment they have said they would humbly tender to him.

But the petition is opposed by the other Appellants. The Counsel who at the hearing pleaded the case of the Musammat now appears for these other Appellants and points out that the Musammat herself in her original pleading had set forth that by arrangement between her and three other Appellants she was to take only three-fifths of all she recovered, the other two-fifths going to them; and it is further alleged that the Musammat herself has not authorised this petition.

An affidavit is presented to that effect. It is met by counter-affidavits.

Their Lordships disregard the affidavits on both sides. They are quite contradictory and it is impossible to determine what the truth is.

Their Lordships have no doubt that the prayer of the petition must be granted in so far as it prays to have the Order in Council made to conform to the judgment pronounced. Even had the facts now brought forward been clearly set before their Lordships, it would not follow that the judgment would have been altered. It is out of the question that persons who assert that they have a derivative interest in the stake of a suit can, by getting added as Plaintiffs, be associated in a decree in favour of the person who has the only real title. The Respondents have an interest in this as well as the Plaintiff. At least it is safe to say that no decree would have been granted in favour of all the Appellants jointly unless there had either been a consent signified by the Respondents or a legal conveyance or assignment, produced by the real Plaintiff of a share of the subjects of the suit.

At the same time their Lordships wish to do justice and not to allow anyone to take advantage of a slip in order to appropriate to himself property that is not fairly his. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty to rescind the order complained of and to pronounce judgment in favour of the Plaintiff Musammat Lajwanti alone, but with the addition that this judgment is to be without prejudice to the Appellants other than Lajwanti to recover in respect of any conveyance or assignment made or of any contract to convey or assign, such share of the property recovered under the judgment as may appertain to them in respect of such conveyance, assignment or contract.

As their Lordships think that both parties were in fault, there will be no costs of the petition.

--------------------------------------	---	--

Merger, a question of intention—Pre-existing debt on an original hatchitta, whether merges in a subsequent mortgage for the same debt.

Where for money lent on a hatchitta, a subsequent mortgage was executed for the same debt, but in which there was no express covenant to pay :

Held, construing the mortgage deed—That the original debt had not merged in the mortgage. Merger is a question of intention. Such intention is to be gathered from the deed itself and surrounding circumstances.

ETHEL GEORGINA KERR v. CLARA B. RUXTON (1) referred to and approved.

The facts of the case are as follows :—On the 14th November 1920, the Plaintiff firm lent on a hatchitta Rs. 25,000 to the Defendants at interest 10½ per cent. On the 4th May and 23rd May 1921, the Defendants paid Rs. 619-12 as. for interest. On 3rd May 1921, by way of further security the Defendants executed a mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff firm on certain colliery properties, in which there was no personal covenant to pay.

The suit was instituted to recover the money on the hatchitta, the defence was that no suit lay as the cause of action on the hatchitta had merged in the subsequent mortgage executed for the same sum.

Mr. S. C. Mitter for the Plaintiff.—Merger is always a question of intention. Refers Goluk Nath v. Premlal (2), Palmer v. Bramley (3) and Lachanbati Kumri v. Bodhnath Tewari (4).

Ghose on Mortgage (Fifth Edition), at p. 516. Jones on Mortgage, 374.

If there is a recital that the deed was executed merely for the purpose of a security for the re-payment of the old debt, Courts in England have held that it would not amount to merger.

Twopenny v. Young (5).

Remedies available in respect of the old debt are not co-extensive with that on the mortgage as there is no personal covenant to pay.

Ram Gopal v. Blaquiere (6).

Hence there is no merger.

Kerr v. Ruxton (1).

Mr. S. C. Bose for the Defendant.—The old debt is merged in the subsequent security. Personal covenant may be implied. On an analogy with Illus. (b), sec. 62 of Indian Contract Act, it may be argued that the mortgage is a novation of the old debt. There is merger.

hatchitta with further interest in default. The principal sum was advanced on the 14th November 1920. The Defendants on the same day signed a hatchitta. The hatchitta is admitted and also payments of interest subsequently made.

It appears that on the 3rd May 1921 the Defendants by way of security executed a mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff and other creditors charging certain property for the purpose of securing their pre-existing debts.

The only point taken on behalf of the Defendant is that the debt on the hatchitta is merged in the mortgage and that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to recover on the hatchitta exclusively.

No oral evidence has been adduced on either side, and I have been referred to the terms of the mortgage itself. It is argued under sec. 62 of the Indian Contract Act that the parties agreed to substitute one contract for the other. But this is a question of fact and intention, viz., whether the mortgage was intended to be collateral or in substitution.

I have been referred, on behalf of the Plaintiffs, to Ethel Georgina Kerr v. Clara B. Ruxton (1), where it was held that where there is an existing debt, and the payment of it is secured by a deed intended to operate as a mortgage, the pre-existing personal liability of the debtor is not superseded. Upon the deed itself, it does not, in my opinion, appear that it was the intention of the parties to substitute it for pre-existing debt, and in consequence the liability of the debtor was not thereby superseded.

The mortgage, in my opinion, was merely intended as a collateral security. As regards this, the Plaintiff asked for leave under Or. 2, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, to reserve his rights under the mortgage. Such leave has been granted; If necessary, I grant it now and there will be a decree for the amount claimed with costs on scale No. 2, interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

Decree tainted with fraud, voidable or void—Suit for declaration that mortgage decree and sale thereon were fraudulent and void, in effect a suit for setting aside decree on ground of fraud—Such suit brought after three years from knowledge of fraud, if barred by limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 95.

The Plaintiffs sued to have their possession confirmed after declaration of their alleged title to the lands in suit or in the alternative for recovery of possession of the disputed lands after declaration that an ex parte mortgage decree passed against them and the auction sale in execution thereof were fraudulent and void, and if necessary, after setting aside the decree. It was found that the suit was brought more than three years after the Plaintiffs came to know of the decree and the sale:

These were appeals against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zillah Midnapur (Babu Gopal Das-Ghosh), dated the 28th February 1922, modifying the decree of the Munsif, 1st Court at Contai (Babu Raman Ch. Banerjee), dated the 28th February 1921.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

SUBHAWARDY, J.—The facts of this case are that Defendant No. 3 brought a suit (being mortgage suit No. 79 of 1914) against the Plaintiffs and obtained an ex parte decree against them in execution of which the property in suit were sold and purchased by Defendant No. 1 who obtained symbolical possession of the properties on the 20th February 1916. The present suit was brought on the 28th February 1920 in which the Plaintiffs prayed "to have their possession confirmed after declaration of their alleged title to the lands in suit or in the alternative for recovery of possession of the disputed lands, after declaration that the decree in the mortgage suit No. 79 of 1914 and the auction sale in execution thereof were fraudulent and void, and if necessary, after setting aside the decree." One of the pleas raised by the Defendants was that of limitation and that is the only point pressed before us on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants. The Plaintiff in his plaint alleged that he came to know of this decree on the 10th December 1918. The first Court accepted that statement and finding that the decree and sale were fraudulent gave the Plaintiffs a decree for all the properties in suit which were described in two schedules being Schs. (ka) and (kha). The Defendant No. 3 appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge found that in the mortgage bond the property described in Sch. (ka) was fraudulently interpolated and therefore the decree obtained by the Defendant on the strength of the bond so far as it related to that property was void as also the sale held under that decree. Regarding the properties described in Sch. (kha) he found that the properties were mortgaged to the Defendant under the bond and therefore so far as the properties of that schedule were concerned the suit should be dismissed.

As regards Sch. (kha) the learned Subordinate Judge observes that the auction-purchaser is a third party and he was not a party to the fraud by which the decree was obtained nor did he collude with the other Defendants; so the Plaintiff cannot recover possession of the land described in Sch. (kha) unless he gets the sale and the decree set aside; and he thought that Art. 95 of the Limitation Act applied to the case. After making these observations the learned Judge raises the issue :—So the question is if the Plaintiffs are within three years of the date of their knowledge of the fraud, i.e., the forgery in the bond. On this issue he records his finding in these words : "In fact I am convinced that they (the Plaintiffs) knew of the same (the decree and the sale) on the 20th February 1916 when the symbolical possession was delivered and the Defendants wanted them to vacate the bastu. This suit is brought on the 28th February 1920. Therefore the suit is evidently after three years from the date when the Plaintiffs knew of that fraud." As to Sch. (ka) the learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that as the land described in that schedule was interpolated in the mortgage bond after its execution, "the decree and sale have not affected the lands of Sch. (ka)." The learned Judge seems to think that different legal considerations should apply to different portions of the decree obtained by the Appellant. If this is the view taken by the learned Judge it must be held to be wrong. A transaction tainted with fraud is voidable and not void. A decree obtained by fraud, collusion or any other unlawful means is a pronouncement of a Court of Justice and it cannot be treated as a waste paper. The only objection that can be made to a decree as being void or a nullity must be on ground that it was passed without jurisdiction or that the Court which passed it had no territorial or pecuniary jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. It is conceded that the Court which passed the mortgage decree had jurisdiction over the properties in suit and was pecuniarily competent to try it. That decree therefore is a decree which is binding upon all the parties to the suit unless set aside in a properly constituted proceeding. The view that a decree passed with jurisdiction, however tainted it may be with fraud, is not void, hardly needs any support from authorities; for it has been repeatedly held that a Plaintiff will not succeed in obtaining any relief before he, if the decree passed against him was by a competent Court, gets it vacated. Reference may be made to the case of Ram Sona Chaudhurani v. Sona Mala Chaudhurani (1), where it is observed "that a judgment rendered by a Court having jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter, unless reversed and annulled in some appropriate proceeding, is not open to contradiction or impeachment in respect of its validity or binding effect by parties or privies in any collateral action or proceeding. The position is different when a judgment shows on its face that it is void for want of jurisdiction either of the person or the subject-matter. Such a judgment is treated as a nullity, collaterally impeachable by any person interested wherever it is brought in question." The same view has been expressed in the case of Raj Kumar Sarkel v. Raj Kumar Mali (2), where it was held that a sale in execution of a fraudulent decree is not a void but a voidable sale; till vacated by an appropriate proceeding, the rights created thereby are effective. In that case which covers a greater part of the points raised in this case, the sale was sought to be set aside on failure to set aside the decree; and the learned Judges held "that it was essential that the Plaintiffs should seek, as they did in their plaint, to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud before they could have the sale vacated. Consequently where the right to have the decree set aside as fraudulent has become barred by limitation, no decree can be made setting aside the sale only as made in execution of a fraudulent decree and as the Plaintiffs have lost their right to attack the decree, they cannot consequently attack the sale." This view has been adopted in many rulings, one of which may be referred to, viz., the case of Bejoy Chand Mahtab v. Asutosh Chukraborty (3). The result of all these authorities is that the Plaintiffs cannot get the relief which they seek to obtain in this case before they get rid of the decree which stands in the way. According to the findings of the learned Judge the Plaintiffs came to know of the existence of the decree and the sale more than three years before the date of the institution of the suit which is a suit to all intents and purposes for setting aside the decree and the sale. The decree and the sale being only voidable, they must be avoided within the period of limitation fixed by statute. But it is argued on behalf of the Respondent that the suit was only one for a declaration that the decree and the sale were not binding on the Plaintiffs and therefore it may be treated as a declaratory suit. This is an attempt to evade the clear provisions of law. To hold that the Plaintiffs are entitled to have a declaration that a certain decree is not binding against them though they were parties to such proceedings would be to make nugatory such provisions of the law which makes it obligatory on a party to set aside the decree and the sale in order to remove an impediment which stands in the way of his obtaining the relief he seeks. For instance, the Plaintiff, to avoid Art. 91 or 92 of the Limitation Act, may not seek to have the instrument which purports to have been executed by him cancelled or set aside but may merely sue for a declaration and possession of property or other ancillary reliefs. This he cannot be allowed to do. It cannot be said that the Plaintiff is entitled to regard the transaction to which he is said to be a party a nullity.

I am conscious of the view taken in some cases that there are cases where the Plaintiff may not be required to remove an apparent obstruction to his right before he seeks possession of the property from which he has been dispossessed.

But the view taken in such cases is based upon a different ground. In the present case the Plaintiffs were parties to the transaction or proceeding; but in a case in which the Plaintiff is not such a party he may not be bound to have the transaction set aside; he may ask for a declaration that it is not binding on him. But where there is a judgment of a Court against him he cannot succeed unless he gets the hindrance removed. In the view I take of this case, the decree and the sale were not absolutely void but were voidable and the Plaintiff not having sought the proper remedy within three years from the date of his knowledge, i.e., 20th February 1916, the present suit for setting aside the decree and the sale thereunder is barred and therefore the Plaintiffs have lost their right.

The result of the above consideration is that these appeals succeed, the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the Plaintiffs' suit dismissed. In S. A. No. 1253 of 1922 the Appellant will get his costs in all the Courts but in S. A. No. 1347 of 1922 the Appellant will not get her costs in any Court.

DUVAL, J.—I agree that these appeals must be allowed. The facts shortly are as follows :—The Respondents are the mortgagors and the Appellant in S. A. No. 1347 of 1922 is the mortgagee. The latter brought a suit in 1916, obtained an ex parte decree on her mortgage, and put the properties to sale which were purchased by the Appellant in S. A. No. 1253 of 1922. Thereafter this latter Appellant as auction-purchaser took symbolical possession on the 20th February 1916 and the present suit was brought on the 28th February 1920. The Plaintiffs-Respondents' case was that as a matter of fact one of the items in the schedule of the mortgage deed was fraudulently interpolated.

after the mortgage was executed. They brought the suit on the 28th February 1920 alleging before the Munsif that they only came to know of the decree and the sale on the 10th December 1918, i.e., within three years of the date of the suit. It is clear therefore that the suit as framed recognises that Art. 95 is the appropriate article. The learned lower Appellate Court, however, has found that as a matter of fact they were aware of the fraudulent decree more than three years before the suit was instituted. The lower Appellate Court also found (disagreeing with the first Court) that the Appellant in S. A. No. 1253 of 1922 (the auction-purchaser) neither had any previous knowledge of any fraud in the decree nor acted in collusion with the Appellant in S. A. No. 1347 of 1922. The only argument addressed to us on behalf of the Appellant is that as Art. 95 is the article applicable and as the learned lower Appellate Court has found that the Plaintiff had knowledge of the decree more than three years before he brought the suit, the suit is barred under that article. In this Court a defence is set up on behalf of the Respondents that as a matter of fact Art. 95 is not applicable but another article, namely, the residuary article, i.e., Art. 120 applies, and the learned vakil for the Respondents has argued that this is not a suit to set aside the decree but a suit for declaration that the decree and the sale under it are not binding on them: it is only a declaratory suit and the Plaintiff is still in possession. The only point therefore that appears to me to be arguable is whether, on the form of the suit as framed, this suit is one to set aside a decree. My learned brother has dealt with that point and I agree with him in his finding that it is a suit to set aside the decree passed in Suit No. 79 of 1914 and that the Plaintiffs cannot get over the limitation of three years by arguing that it is a suit for a mere declaration or that it is a case for declaration with certain reliefs. I therefore agree with my learned brother that both the appeals must be allowed.

of the Subordinate Judge, 5th Court of Zillah Dacca (Moulvie Osman Ali), dated the 13th August 1921, reversing a decree of the Munsif, 5th Court at that place (Babu Mohendra Nath Lahiri), dated the 29th June 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Satish Chandra Choudhury for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Ray and Mon-motha Nath Ray for the Respondent.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was one for rent valued at Rs. 9-11 which the Plaintiff claimed from the Defendant as landlord in respect of 4 as. share of the property. The defence was first that the Plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit in the absence of other persons interested in the 4 annas share claimed by him : and, secondly, because there had been no separate collection of the Plaintiff's share of the rent. The learned Munsif gave effect to both these pleas. He found that there were other brothers or their heirs who were interested in the 4 annas share claimed by the Plaintiff, and that there had been no separate collection of the Plaintiff's share of the rent. He accordingly dismissed the suit. There was an appeal by the Plaintiff and the learned Subordinate Judge reversed that decision. The learned Judge was of opinion that the Plaintiff and the pro formâ Defendants were the only persons interested in the 4 annas share and that the Plaintiff had succeeded in showing by both oral and documentary evidence that the collection in the 4 annas share was separate. As a result of these findings he decreed the Plaintiff's suit. This second appeal has been preferred to this Court mainly on the ground that no appeal lay to the Court of first appeal inasmuch as the officer who tried the suit was specially empowered under sec. 153, Bengal Tenancy Act. This allegation has not been controverted by the Respondent but two preliminary objections have been taken by him with reference to this appeal.

It is contended that as there was no appeal to the lower Appellate Court according to the Appellant's own showing, a second appeal to this Court was incompetent. This point has been before this Court on many occasions and it is now settled that if the Court of Appeal below entertains an appeal which it has no jurisdiction to do, an appeal will lie from the decree of that Court. Kalipada Karmokar v. Sekhar Bashini Dasya (1) and Bandiram Mukerji v. Purna Chandra Ray (2). This view is also consonant with common sense. If a Court assumes jurisdiction (I purposely avoid the expression "usurps jurisdiction") over a matter over which it has no jurisdiction and passes a decree either in the suit or on appeal, and that decree is open to appeal under the ordinary law, no objection can be taken to an appeal from that decree on the ground that the Court below had no jurisdiction to try the matter, because an appeal may lie to a higher Court on the sole question of jurisdiction. To hold otherwise would mean that the judgment of a Court which has no jurisdiction would remain in force and has the same effect as that of a Court of competent jurisdiction. We are therefore of opinion that conceding that no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court in this case, a second appeal to this Court is maintainable on the ground that the order passed by the lower Appellate Court is without jurisdiction.

(2) 27 C. L. J. 115 (1917).

WAJUDDI PRAMANIK v. MD. BALAKI MORAL.

We then come to the more important question in the case, namely, whether an appeal lay from the decree of the Munsif; that is, whether the Munsif decided any question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto or as to the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant. No question of title has been raised in this case by parties with conflicting claims. The point left therefore for consideration is whether the question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant was determined. As we have observed, there is no dispute with regard to the rent payable in respect of the entire holding nor is there any question of the amount of rent payable to the Plaintiff—it being established that the Plaintiff has a right to the 4 annas share of the rent. The only objections to the Plaintiff's right to recover rent were that the Plaintiff had other co-sharers and so the suit was bad for defect of parties and that there was no separate collection. None of these grounds, in our opinion, comes within the exception to the rule that in a suit for rent below a certain value no appeal lies. It is argued on the authority of the decisions in the cases of Narain v. Manofi (3) and Sudhanya Santra v. Basanta Kumar (4) that the present case is covered by the principle laid down in those cases. We think that these cases are distinguishable from the present one. In the Full Bench case of Narain v. Manofi (3), the Plaintiff brought a suit for rent claiming a certain share in the property. The Defendant stated that the Plaintiff's share was not what it was alleged to be, but much less. The effect of the defence was that the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount claimed by him as rent but that he was entitled to recover a sum less than the sum claimed by him. The Full Bench was of opinion that the question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant was in issue. The whole controversy turned upon the meaning of the expression "amount of rent annually payable." On one side, it was argued that the expression meant the amount of rent annually payable in respect of the entire tenancy. It was contended, on the other, that the expression referred to the amount of rent annually payable by the Defendant to the Plaintiff. To the same effect is the decision in the case of Sudhanya v. Basanta (4). In that case the Plaintiff brought a suit for the entire rent on the allegation that he was entitled as landlord to the extent of 6 annas 8 gds. share and in the rest he had acquired an ijara lease from the other co-sharers. The Defendant admitted the extent of the Plaintiff's share as landlord but denied the existence of the ijara lease. It is clear therefore that the question raised in that case was whether the Plaintiff was entitled to recover the entire rent or rent in respect of 6 annas 8 gds. share only. It was held that as it was a case for the determination of the question of the amount of rent annually payable to the Plaintiff, an appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court. These cases therefore are no authority for the proposition urged by the learned vakil for the Respondent. If the decree of the first Court had decided that the Plaintiff is not entitled to the 4 annas share claimed by him but to a smaller share, an appeal would probably have lain on the authority of the cases above cited. We accordingly hold that that appeal to the lower Appellate Court was incompetent.

The second objection taken to the hearing of this appeal is that the pro forma Respondents were not made parties to the appeal. It appears that they were mentioned as parties in the memorandum of appeal but no steps were taken by the Appellant to secure their proper representation. We do not think that in the peculiar circumstances of this case this objection should be allowed to prevail. The suit was brought by the Plaintiff alone impleading certain persons as pro forma Defendants who, it is said, were the heirs of one Uraj who was the only other person interested in the 4 annas share claimed by him. These Defendants applied to be made Plaintiffs but their application was rejected. The suit was dismissed and the Plaintiff alone appealed. The pro forma Defendants did not question the correctness of the order made by the Munsif refusing their application to be made Plaintiffs. The appeal succeeded and the Plaintiff's suit was decreed. The objection taken by the Defendant in this Court is against the maintainability of the Plaintiff's appeal to the lower Appellate Court. This is a question in which the pro forma Defendants are not interested.

We may mention that the Appellant has also filed an application under sec. 115, C. P. C., and obtained a Rule thereon. As we hold that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal we can set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court in the exercise of jurisdiction vested in us under that section. But as we are of opinion that the second appeal lies to this Court from the decree of the lower Appellate Court, it is not necessary to consider this question further.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all the Courts.

v.

THE KING-EMPEROR,

Respondent.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 304 -- Causing death by rash and negligent act - Criminal rashness, criminal negligence, what is - Road closed to traffic for repairs - Coolies sleeping on closed road at night - Driving a motor car into the closed road and running over coolies, if rash and negligent act.

Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury but without intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence.

Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge arises, was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted.

A person driving at night a motor car along a portion of a road which was closed to traffic for repairs cannot be reasonably expected to take precautions against the chance of coolies sleeping on that portion.

Two coolies who were so sleeping with their bodies covered except for their faces having been run over and killed by the accused driving over them in a motor car in the above circumstances, the latter could not be held to have caused their death by a rash and negligent act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th July 1925 against an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 3rd July 1925, convicting the accused under sec. 304A, I. P. C. and sentencing him to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 to be made over in equal proportions to the dependants of the deceased as compensation under sec. 545, Cr. P. C.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Bagram, Counsel and Babu Tarakeswar Pal Choudhuri for the Appellant.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

CUMING, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate Mr. T. Y. Roxburgh convicting the accused, one H. W. Smith, under sec. 304A, I. P. C. and sentencing him to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500.

The fact appears to be these .—

The occurrence took place at about 10-30 or 11-30 P.M. on the night of the 12th May last.

The accused Smith lives in Howrah and had come into Calcutta driving his own car, a Mors car No. 1990, with a friend Mr. Williams. He got as far as the Mayo statue and was then coming from west to east. At the Mayo statue he determined to go home via the Red Road and therefore turned to the right and went along the Dufferin Road. About half way up the road he ran over and killed two coolies who were sleeping on the road.

The case of the prosecution is that the road was under repairs and that there was a barrier right across the road to prevent people driving along the road and that the accused killed these two coolies by doing a rash and negligent act, to wit, driving his motor car rashly or negligently from north to south along the Dufferin Road which was closed to traffic and barricaded and having red light across, the road being in various stages of repair. The defence case is that there was no barrier across part of the road and that the accused entered the road by the open portion. He went over then to the proper side of the road. He did not see the coolies who were lying wrapt up in gamchas on the road, did not even know he had driven over them and knew nothing till he was stopped by the constable at the south end of the road by the Dufferin statue. His car is a very old and noisy one. It cannot travel at more than 10 miles an hour and he was not driving negligently or carelessly. The learned Magistrate found that at the time of the accident the barrier did not reach right up to the tram line on the west of the road. The accused, he holds, must have heard one of the warnings he got, one being from the witness Ramzan that there were coolies sleeping on the road. That he must have heard the shouts after the accident and hence known he had gone over some one. Finally the learned Magistrate holds that the accused entered a road on which there were warning lights and that he was talking to the man at his side. This was itself negligence and that accused must have known from the lights that special caution was necessary and that had he driven with reasonable care the coolies would not have been killed. He finds that excessive speed has nothing to do with the

First as to the fact—

Mr. Bagram contends that even if Ramzan did shout to the accused that there were men sleeping on the road it does not necessarily follow that the accused heard him and with this I agree. The coolies in the hut close by did not hear Ramzan. The accused was driving. The car was old and noisy and there is nothing improbable in the allegation of the accused that he did not hear any one shouting that there were coolies sleeping on the road. The only person who shouted this information was Ramzan. Then there is the evidence of the constable at the north end of the road by the Mayo statue that he shouted to the accused that the road was under repairs. The evidence when considered would shew that he must have been some forty yards from the accused. Again the accused may or may not have heard him and if he did hear him may not have realized what he said or even that he was shouting to him. Even if accused heard him and realized he must not go on the road because it was under repair, it does not affect the case as I shall afterwards show. The prosecution contends that accused must have known he had gone over these coolies and still drove on after doing so. It does not follow that because the accused felt a bump he must have known he had gone over anyone. The road was under repair and he may well have thought he had gone over some road material, though it is his case he noticed nothing. But the accused's conduct after the accident in no way affects his guilt or innocence so far as the present charge is concerned.

The facts which I find proved are that accused entered the road through an opening at the end of the barrier on the west side of the road and then crossed to the east side, the proper side of the road on which to drive, that he was driving at a speed not exceeding 10 miles an hour and he drove over the two deceased who were sleeping on the road killing them. I have now to consider whether the accused caused the death of these two unfortunate men by a rash and negligent act. Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury but without intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. This is the law on the point as laid down by Straight, J., in the case of Reg. v. Idu Beg (1) and with the view of the law I am in entire agreement. Reference may also be made to the case of Reg. v. Nidamarti Naga Bhushanam (2). We have then to consider what is the criminal rashness or negligence which has been attributed to the accused and whether what he did comes within the mischief of criminal rashness and negligence. If I understand the case of the prosecution rightly it is that he drove along a road which was under repair and while doing so was talking to a friend alongside of him. Now there is nothing rash or negligent per se in driving along a road under repair or partly under repair any more than on a road not under repair except perhaps to the person driving. During the day time no doubt there would be men working on the road the avoiding of whom would require caution as the avoiding of anyone on a road does. At night normally it is not to be expected that men would be found working on a road nor is it the allegation of the prosecution that anyone was working on the road the particular night. As a matter of fact one would expect less traffic if any traffic at all at night on a road under repair. Anyone driving on a road under repair would be called on to exercise the same caution as he would on a road in its normal condition, that is to say, to look out to see what persons or vehicles were on the road making the ordinary use of the road. What further caution is called for I fail to see. A driver cannot be expected to look out for what can only be described as a very abnormal condition of things. The normal use of a road is for the purpose of passing or re-passing on it. It certainly cannot be said that one of the normal uses of a road is for the purpose of sleeping. I do not think that it can possibly be held that a driver should anticipate that he will find persons sleeping on a road, even at night, though a road under repair, and that he must look out for persons making such an abnormal use of the road and if he does not do so he is guilty of negligence or rashness.

As I have pointed out there is no special danger per se in driving along a road under repair except perhaps to the driver himself. The accused in this case was not driving recklessly. He was driving at 10 miles per hour. The deceased had wrapt themselves up in gamchas and so in the night even, though there were lamps, would be extremely difficult to distinguish. The accused cannot reasonably be held liable to anticipate that he should find persons sleeping on a road. If therefore he did not look for persons sleeping on a road he cannot be held guilty of rashness or negligence for not doing so. He could not know that his act in driving on the road was dangerous because people were sleeping or might be sleeping on it and yet did the act taking the risk of running over these sleeping people. It is not suggested his speed was excessive. In fact it was very slow for a motor car. The fact that he was talking to a friend does not show he was driving rashly or negligently. Even if he had not been talking it is highly improbable he would have looked out for persons sleeping on the road. There is nothing to prevent a man talking and at the same time taking the ordinary precautions against accident. I do not think that the engaging in conversation whilst driving is necessarily a rash or negligent act. It might be in some circumstances, as for instance, in busy crowded traffic. The decision to which I must come therefore on a consideration of all the facts of the case is that the accused in acting as he did, did not act either rashly or negligently. That these two unfortunate men have lost their lives is to be much deplored but the accused cannot be held criminally responsible for their death. As to the accused's conduct after the accident so far as the present charge is concerned it is immaterial. But in view of the Magistrate's remarks in justice to the accused himself I should deal with this point because clearly if he drove on knowing he had run over these men his conduct would be deserving of the severest censure. It would be the act of a man entirely callous and indifferent to the injury he inflicted on his fellow creatures. I am not however satisfied that he must have known he had driven over someone.

H. W. SMITH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

He may have been aware of the bump although both he and Mr. William state they felt no bumps, but bumps would probably be met with on a road under repair and being expected may not have been noticed. No doubt the other coolies there shouted. But it does not follow that the accused necessarily must have heard the shouting or, if he did, have realised they were shouting at him. The shouting would not begin at once. The car was as has been noted before an old and very noisy one. It is significant that accused when stopped by the police constable on duty at the Dufferin statue said at once, "Why should I stop? I have committed no offence" and at once went back to the place of occurrence when requested to do so. The accused at once stopped when asked to by the constable at the end of the road and made no attempt to go away.

Taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration I do not think that the learned Magistrate was justified in drawing the inference he did that the accused must have known he had run over some one. I think on this point the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The result is, the finding and sentence must be set aside and accused should be acquitted; the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

MUKERJI, J.—I agree that this appeal should be allowed and the accused acquitted and I wish to add a few words.

The difficulty in dealing with a case of this nature is to keep out of one's mind the prejudice that inevitably creeps in by reason of the fact that lives have been lost and the responsibility for the same ultimately rests with none else but the accused. This prejudice is bound more or less to reflect on the question of the culpability of the accused and give rise to false issues which tend to cloud judicial vision.

Sec. 304A has been judicially interpreted in a number of decisions of which two stand out as the most valuable. In the case of Reg. v. Nidamarti (2), Holloway, J., said this: "Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow but with the hope that they will not and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening, the imputability arises from acting despite the consciousness. Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal and mischievous effect will follow, but in circumstances which show that the actor has not exercised the caution incumbent upon him, and that, if he had, he would have the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of the civic duty of circumspection." In the case of Reg. v. Idu Beg (1), Straight, J., observed as follows:—"Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury but without the intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will probably be caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequences. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted." The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has cited before us a number of other decisions in which sec. 304A of the Indian Penal Code or the English law of Manslaughter by negligence has been explained, and also referred to some cases dealing with negligent use of public way, in order to show under what circumstances special care is necessary, want of which will make one liable for the offence. The one principle of universal applicability deducible from all these cases is that which was laid down by Alderson B. in Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (3) and adopted by Brett, J., in Smith v. London and South-Western Ry. Co. (4): "Each case must be judged in reference to the precautions, which, in respect to it, the ordinary experience of men has found to be sufficient, though the use of special or extraordinary precautions might have prevented the particular accident which happened."

The question whether the accused's conduct amounted to culpable rashness or negligence therefore depends directly on the question as to what is the amount of care and circumspection which a prudent and reasonable man would consider to be sufficient upon all the circumstances of the case.

Now as to the circumstances I would prefer to take the findings of the learned Magistrate and rest my judgment on those findings.

The learned Magistrate has found that the barrier at the entrance did not extend right up to the tram lines; in other words that there was a space between the end of the barrier and the tram lines; over this space as also on the space on the other side of the lines there was no barrier. There were also a number of red lights and perhaps also a "road closed" notice. The accused's conduct in entering the road was unquestionably reprehensible, but the real issue is, what did these circumstances indicate. In my judgment they indicated that the road was closed up, perhaps not to the extent of its entire width, certainly also that there was a possibility of men working, walking, or moving about on the road. They would also, in my opinion, suggest that there was every chance of one coming across excavations or obstructions or impassable portions of the road or such portions as were not fit for being used as a road. All these would put one on his guard and call for special care and circumspection on his part, but only to the extent of avoiding or getting round an accident such as would result from the possibilities to which I have referred. The idea, however, would hardly cross the average prudent and reasonable mind that there was chance of people sleeping on the road or rather on a side of the road with their bodies covered up except for the faces, and lying partly on the road and partly on the grass.

Then as to the various warnings and shouts alleged to have been given. As regards the warning given by the constable on duty at the Mayo statue, it conveyed nothing more than what was indicated by the barrier, the lights and the notice. The shouts of Ramzan calling out "Taxi-walla stop, the road is closed, it is forbidden to come" or "Admi Sota, Admi," it is reasonable to believe, were either not heard by the Appellant or were misunderstood by him. The utmost that it means is that the Appellant was not attentive to hear what was being shouted out by people on the road; but it is hardly obligatory on the driver of a car to have his attention directed to shouts so long as he can trust his eyes and sees nothing in front. The question whether the Appellant heard the shouts of the coolies after the car had passed over the men and the question whether the Appellant did or did not feel a bump are hardly relevant in the face of the finding that the Appellant was not driving at an excessive speed. If these shouts were heard and the bump was felt and the Appellant understood what had happened and if the circumstances, as deposed to by the constable at the other end of the road, under which the car was stopped be found to have been established, that touches the question of the Appellant's conduct as a gentleman, but has very little to do with the question of his culpability or otherwise in respect of the offence with which he was charged.

In my opinion though special care was called for on the part of the Appellant, the degree of care which the learned Magistrate has expected of him is not warranted by the circumstances of the case, and it has not been established that the Appellant was so rash or negligent as would render him guilty of an offence under sec. 304A, I. P. C. The Appellant therefore should be acquitted and released from his bail.

In conclusion I should like to observe that though the Appellant escapes a conviction as the law is unable to reach him, if he had not chosen to drive on the road which was not open to traffic, the lives of two poor and innocent men who perhaps were the only supporters of their respective families would not have been lost, and the code of honour and morality demands that he should make adequate amends to the very best of his means to the dependants of these two men for the lamentable error of judgment on his part.

The Police in Calcutta cannot retain custody under sec. 5 of the Calcutta Immoral Traffic Act of a girl removed from a brothel after she has attained the age of sixteen years.

This was a Rule, granted on the 22nd June 1925, issued on the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to show cause why the Petitioner should not be set at liberty or such other order passed as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Dijendra Krishna Dutt for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. L. Mitter and Satindra Nath Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

It appears from the report of the Police Surgeon that the girl Maharani Dassi is over 16 years of age. She was removed from a brothel under the provisions of the Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act 1923, and placed in a girls' school where she was receiving education. When the school closed for the annual vacation, she was placed in charge of a gentleman of the locality in compliance with the request made by a respectable gentleman who is interested in her. The Police took all possible care for the welfare of the girl. It took charge of her under sec. 5 of the Act as she appeared to be below 16 years of age. This Rule was issued under sec. 491, Cr. P. C., for an order of this Court that she might not be further kept in charge of the Police and be set at liberty. Now, it appears that according to her own and her mother's statement as also in the opinion of the Police Surgeon she is over 16. The Police has no further jurisdiction to exercise under the Act of 1923. We therefore direct that she be immediately set at liberty.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL]

LORD SHAW.

LORD CARRON.

LORD BLANESBURGH.

SIR JOHN EDGE

1925,

Heard,

10, February.

Judgment,

27, March

PROBHUDAS,

Appellant,

v.

GANIDADA,

Respondent.

Indian Tariff Act (VII of 1894), sec. 10 (b)—Sale—Buyer's right to deduct decrease in custom duty from price—Tariff valuation and taxation distinguished from levy of duty.

Tariff values and their taxation are totally different from the duties and their levying. A change of duty means a change in the rate of duty, which follows Government and administrative action.

The contention that a change of tariff values of sugar is constructively a change in the sugar duty within the meaning of sec. 10 of the Indian Tariff Act VII of 1894 is untenable.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 18th August 1924, of the High Court at Bengal, which affirmed a decree, dated the 1st August 1924, of the said Court in its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction.

The matter came before the Court in the form of a special case under sec. 90 and Or. 26 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

On the 15th and 18th December 1922 the parties entered into the contracts in question in this appeal. Each contract was for the sale by the Respondent to the Appellant of Java sugar, under the earlier contract "delivery to be taken and given ex Godown S. S. Calcutta to arrive at any time," under the later contract delivery to be "ex Godown between January, February and March."

The contracts were completed and questions outstanding other than the present claim were adjusted between the parties.

The buyer now claimed a refund from the seller of an amount calculated on the difference of the tariff value placed on imported sugar as from the 1st January 1923 compared with that prevailing for the previous year up to the 31st December 1922, a drop to Rs. 16-4 from Rs. 26-4.

The buyer contended that he was entitled to the benefit of the reduction in tariff value as fixed by the Government from 1st January 1923 and he relied on sec. 10 of the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, as amended by Act XIX of 1919.

The tariff value for sugar was fixed by Government on the average of the monthly prices paid for sugar during the preceding 12 months, and it was admitted that in October 1922 a notification had appeared in the Gazette stating that the average net value was Rs. 16-4 and that contracts for the ensuing year should be made on that basis.

PROBHUDAS v. GANIDADA.

The case was heard by Pearson, J., who decided in the Respondent's favour and his decision was upheld by the High Court (Sanderson, C. J. and Walmsley, J.) in its Appellate Jurisdiction.

Both Courts held that there was a distinction in the Tariff Act between duty and tariff value and that an alteration of the latter did not place the parties in any different position to that in which they would have been if no tariff value had been fixed and the value of sugar had fallen after the making of the contract.

Mr. W. Wallach for the Appellant.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. H. B. Raikes for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD SHAW.—The Courts below agreed. The question which arises has reference to the taxation upon sugar and the point involved is represented to be of very great general importance to all mercantile communities in India which deal with that article.

Their Lordships are satisfied that both the Courts below have come to a just conclusion.

From the documents produced with the stated case it is clear that the subject of sugar taxation, and particularly the methods of its imposition, have been for some time a matter of concern to the dealers in the article and of communication with the Government of India.

It is to be noted that in 1911 a letter was addressed by the Under Secretary to the Indian Government Department of Commerce and Industry to the Secretary of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce at Calcutta. The letter noted previous correspondence and in particular that it had been represented by the Karachi Chamber of Commerce supported by the Bengal and Bombay Chambers of Commerce that reconsideration should be given to the then existing system. "It was represented," says Mr. Irwin's letter, "that, in the opinion of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, the present system of fixing the tariff valuation of sugar, under which merchants have to make forward contracts in ignorance of the tariff value, was unsatisfactory, and that there was a strong and unanimous feeling amongst importers that the present system should be changed."

This request was acceded to. It was intimated that the Government of India had decided to fix the tariff valuation of sugar on the average price of one year from 1st October to 30th September. It was added that the necessary instructions would be issued to the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence to publish as early as possible a statement giving the information already available for the current year. In result, accordingly, monthly statements of average value per maund were issued and published in the Gazette and the definite Government value of sugar struck on the average prices calculated on the monthly returns as there described was to be fixed and officially intimated.

On the 21st October 1922, the supplement to the Gazette of India contained the notification, the effect of which is in question in this case. It notified that "returns have been received from October 1921, and the average value of Java 23 Dutch Standard and above for the 12 months October 1921, to September 1922, is notified below." The average nett value per cwt. is stated as Rs. 16 annas 4. There is then added the following:—

"The tariff valuation of sugar for each calendar year is fixed on the average nett market price ruling during the previous 12 months ending September.

From that date forward accordingly merchants were notified of the probable tariff valuation, and the object aimed at by the Chamber of Commerce in providing the convenience to merchants in making forward contracts was thus secured. There had been great variations of prices and the intimated tariff valuation of Rs. 16 annas 4 was a reduction by Rs. 10 from its former figure of Rs. 26 annas 4. By a notification, dated 23rd December 1922, issued by the Government of India the reduction—which had thus been in October anticipated as probable—took place; the tariff valuation of imported sugar was reduced as stated with effect from the 1st January 1923. It was admitted in the High Court by Counsel for the Appellant that the Appellant must have had information of the notification of the previous October, and it seems out of the question to suggest that the contracts for sugar made in the succeeding December were not made by both well-known merchants in view of that published fact..

These contracts were made on the 15th and 18th December 1922, the former for 237½ tons of white Java sugar and the latter for 225 tons of the same article, the goods to be delivered ex Godown S.S. "Calcutta." The goods arrived in January under the first contract, and in January, February and March under the second, and they were settled and paid for between the parties. A question possible in the case was as to whether the transactions were not thereby definitely closed; but the point has not been raised in view of the importance of the other matter now to be alluded to.

The buyer claims, in this litigation, a right to deduct, as against the seller, from the prices paid by him, the equivalent of a decrease of duty. The Government duty as such has not been decreased, but the buyer claims that it has constructively been decreased, because, as the duty was fixed upon the basis of a tariff valuation and that tariff valuation has been reduced, therefore—such is the argument—he must take the same duty applied to a smaller tariff valuation, and so constructively reckon that there is a decreased duty upon the goods sold.

Their Lordships agree with the Courts below in holding that there is no justification for such an operation.

The contention depends upon the provisions of sec. 10 of the Indian Tariff Act VII of 1894. The material part thereof, as amended by subsequent Acts, is as follows :—

"In the event of any duty of customs on any article being decreased after the making of any contract . . . for the sale of such article duty paid where duty was chargeable at that time—

* * * * *

(b) if such decrease so takes effect that the decreased duty only is paid the purchaser may deduct as much from the contract price as will be equivalent to the decrease of duty and he shall not be liable to pay or be sued for or in respect of such deduction."

So far in regard to "duty."

With regard to the other topic as to tariff valuation, that is dealt with by the Indian Tariff Amendment Act IV of 1916 in the following terms :—

"3. (2) The Governor-General in Council may by notification in the Gazette of India fix, for the purpose of levying the said duties, tariff values of any articles enumerated either specifically or under general headings in the said schedules as chargeable with duty ad valorem and may alter any tariff values for the time being in force."

These citations are made in order to show that the tariff values and their taxation are, of course, totally different from the duties and their levying. The former is matter of intelligent anticipation, based upon such knowledge of price variations as was available, and the desire for this knowledge was acquiesced in by the Government of India for the convenience of merchants. Their Lordships do not doubt that that convenience occurred in the present instance. The tariff value basis being thus anticipated, contracts are made; and, when the duty is not changed, these contracts take stock of the position with complete accuracy and there is no occasion in reason for any subsequent re-adjustment as between buyer and seller. But "duties" are in a different position. Their rate remains the subject of Government and administrative action. The parties who make forward contracts are not apprised of such changes, but have to wait for budget announcements. It is in this latter case that the Indian Act comes in to declare (to keep to the case in hand) that a change in the duty by decrease, the duty having been imposed between the making of the contract and the delivery of the goods, may be the ground of a claim by the buyer.

A change of duty means a change in the rate of duty. Their Lordships are of opinion that, there having been no change whatsoever in the rate of duty in the present case, the contention that a change of tariff values of sugar is constructively a change in the sugar duty is without justification. The rate of duty was not reduced. But suppose—to test the matter—suppose that the rate of duty had been reduced, and that the tariff values had also been reduced, the buyer would, then, be claiming two different reductions, one in respect of actual duty and a second in respect of a constructively reckoned duty. The Act could not mean that. To bring in tariff values into the question of increase or reduction of sugar duties, is to introduce an improper and confusing element into the construction of the taxing Act.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be disallowed with costs.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL,
Appellant,

v.

THE GREAT
INDIAN PENIN-SULA RY. CO.,
Respondents.

Indian Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878), sec. 20, proviso to - Great Indian Peninsula Ry. Co., if agents or co-proprietors of the Secretary of State for India in Council—Stores purchased and imported by Company, if liable to duty.

The railway and works and all engines, stock, etc., pertaining thereto formerly belonging to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company vested by statutes 63 and 64 Vic. c. 38 in the Secretary of State for India in Council as from 30th June 1900:

Held, upon a construction of the agreement made between the Secretary of State in Council and the Company—That the Company was thereunder constituted the agent for the maintenance and management and working of the railway and no more than the agent of the Secretary of State in Council. The receipt under the agreement of an one-twentieth share of the profits by the Company did not make it a partner with the Secretary of State in Council in the undertaking, the same being remuneration for services rendered as such agent. Consequently stores purchased by the Company with money supplied by the Secretary of State for India in Council and imported by them into India for the use of the undertaking were, at the time of the importation, goods belonging to Government and exempt from duty under the proviso to sec. 20 of the Sea Customs Act.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court at Bombay (MacLeod, C. J. and Crump, J.), dated the 5th April 1923, on a case stated by the parties for the opinion of the Court under Or. 36, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

The question submitted for the opinion of the Court was whether stores purchased and imported into India by the Defendant Company for the use of their undertaking as mentioned in the case are at the time of importation goods belonging to Government. The object of the proceedings was to determine whether Government were justified in levying customs duty on such stores.

The answer to the question depended on the interpretation of an indenture made between the parties on the 21st December 1900. The High Court held in favour of the Company.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of their Lordships.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant contended that the goods in question were purchased and imported into India by the Railway Company and did not at the time of importation belong to the Government.

The Company are co-adventurers with Government in the undertaking and the goods are not the property of the Secretary of State until they have actually been landed and cleared the customs.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. F. B. Raikes for the Respondents.—The undertaking was the property of the Appellant and the stores purchased therefor were purchased with the moneys of the Appellant and were his property when imported. There was no partnership between the parties but merely a working agency.

Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872, sec. 242.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—This appeal is from a decree, dated the 5th April 1923, of the High Court at Bombay, which followed on a judgment pronounced in a special case under Or. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The parties to the case are the Secretary of State for India in Council as Plaintiff and the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company as Defendant, and the question stated for the opinion of the Court is "Whether stores purchased and imported by the Defendant Company into India for the use of the undertaking as mentioned in the case are, at the time of the importation, goods belonging to Government." On the decision of this question depends the liability of the Defendant Company to pay customs duties under sec. 20 of the Sea Customs Act, VIII of 1878. By this section customs duties are imposed which would attach to the stores unless they come within the proviso to the section that no such duties shall be levied on goods belonging to the Government. The answer to the question propounded depends largely on the legal effect to be attributed to the provisions of the agreement attached to the special case; but that this effect may be rightly understood a brief summary of the facts leading up to it is necessary.

THE SECY. OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RY. CO.

The Defendant Company was incorporated in 1849 by an Act of the Imperial Parliament 12 and 13 Vict. Ch. LXXXIII. On the 18th August 1899, the Secretary of State in Council in exercise of powers vested in him gave notice to the Defendant Company of his intention to purchase the railway and works that had been constructed together with the telegraphs and the engines, carriages, stock, plant and machinery belonging to the railway and works. On the 30th July 1900, an Act of Parliament, 63 and 64 Vict. Ch. CXXXVIII, intituled an Act to provide for the vesting of the railways and other property of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company in the Secretary of State in Council of India and for other purposes was passed. After a preamble stating that notice of intention to purchase had been given and that it was expedient that arrangements should be made for the future working of the railways of the Company it was enacted that as from 30th June 1900, the railways and works should by virtue of the Act be transferred to and vested in the Secretary of State in Council. This then is how matters stand at the date of the agreement attached to the case, and it is to be borne in mind that at its date the Secretary of State in Council had become and was the owner of the railway undertaking and all that pertained to it. The agreement was made on the 21st December 1900, between the Secretary of State in Council of the one part and the Defendant Company of the other part, and in the opening recital it is stated that it had been agreed between the parties that the Defendant Company should maintain, manage and work the Great Indian Peninsula system on the terms thereafter mentioned. This recital is important; it is the key to the meaning and effect of the elaborate provisions that follow; on examination they will be found to be merely ancillary to the recited agreement.

Thus it is for the purpose of the contract that the Plaintiff is to hand over to the Defendant Company the Great Indian Peninsula Railway system together with the rolling stock, plant and machinery belonging thereto (cl. 5); and for the purpose of the undertaking that he is to deliver to the Defendant Company all stores belonging to the Great Indian Peninsula system (cl. 6). There is no derogation here from the property vested in the Secretary of State in Council.

Provisions follow for the maintenance and management of the undertaking which impose on the Defendant Company the obligation to keep the undertaking and the rolling stock, plant and machinery belonging to the undertaking in good repair and good working condition to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State (cls. 10 and 11). Then there are provisions as to the use and working of the undertaking and the conveyance of traffic throughout which the ultimate control is with the Secretary of State (Cls. 15-22).

Capital money required for the purposes of the undertaking is at his option to be provided by the Secretary of State or be raised by debentures or debenture stock on such terms as he should determine (cl. 22a). All money received by the Defendant Company in respect of the undertaking is to be paid into the Treasury of the Government of Bombay or such other Treasury as the Secretary of State should direct or into the Bank of England to the account of the Secretary of State: all money required by the Defendant Company for the purposes of the undertaking is to be supplied by the Secretary of State; and the Secretary of State's sanction is required for all expenditure. (Cls. 23, 24, 25). The accounts are to be kept in accordance with the Secretary of State's requirements. In all matters relating to the undertaking not specially provided for, the Defendant Company is subject to the supervision and control of the Secretary of State (cl. 45).

By Cls. 49-51 a ban is placed (a) on borrowing by the Company, (b) on its engagement in any other business, and (c) on its acquisition of property in India during the continuance of the contract without the sanction of the Secretary of State. And at the determination of the contract on the 30th June 1925, the Company is to give to the Secretary of State possession of the undertaking together with the rolling stock, plant and machinery belonging thereto and all stores and other articles specified in cl. 60.

These provisions (in their Lordships' opinion) are for the purpose of carrying into effect the recited agreement for the maintenance, management and working of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway system, and under them the Defendant Company is the agent and no more than the agent of the Secretary of State. In so saying their Lordships do not overlook the terms of cl. 39 (4) under which the surplus arising from excess of receipts over payments is to belong as to nineteen equal twentieth parts thereof to the Secretary of State and as to one equal twentieth part thereof in the Defendant Company. In their opinion the contention that this points to the Secretary of State and the Defendant Company being co-adventurers or partners is not well founded; the appropriation of one twentieth to the Defendant Company is not to be ascribed to any proprietary interest in it but is a remuneration for services rendered by it as agent for the Secretary of State.

The money for the purchase of the stores to which this case relates was supplied by the Secretary of State and it was as agent for the Secretary of State that the Defendant Company purchased and imported the stores into India, for the use of the undertaking. In the circumstances the High Court rightly held that the stores at the time of importation belonged to the Government and their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

There will be no order as to costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1614 OF 1923.

GREAVES, J.
B. B. GHOSE, J.
21, July.

BIJRAJ BOYED and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
RAJA BIJOY SINHA
DUDHORIA, Plaintiff,
Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 91, 93—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 97—Purchase money, recovery of, owing to the failure of the judgment-debtor's title—Limitation, if runs from the date of the decision declaring that the judgment-debtor had no title at the time of sale or from loss of possession—Rateable distribution.

The judgment-debtor's properties were separately sold in different lots in execution of a money decree and bought by the decree-holder himself (Plaintiff-Respondent). The Defendants' (Appellants') predecessor obtained another decree for money against the same judgment-debtor and a portion of the purchase money in deposit was given to him under Court's order upon his application for rateable distribution. The sale of some lots out of the several lots sold was ultimately set aside and declared to be invalid on 11th December 1916 on the ground that the judgment-debtor possessed no saleable interest therein at the time of sale but that the same belonged to his wife.

The Plaintiff-Respondent brought a suit on 4th September 1920 against the Defendants-Appellants for recovery of a proportionate share of the purchase money paid by him for those lots, and which the predecessor of the Defendants had taken out of Court under the above order :

Held—That the period of limitation in this case commenced to run from the 11th December 1916, the date on which the auction sale was declared to be invalid on account of the judgment-debtor's want of title, and not from the earlier date on which the Plaintiff lost possession.

Quære.—Whether Art. 97 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act applied to the case.

AMRITA LAL BAGCHI v. JOGENDRA LAL CHOWDHURY (4) approved.

JUSCURN BOID v. PIRTHI CHAND PAL (1) and GURSHIDAWA v. GANGAVA (2) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of R. F. Lodge, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Murshidabad, dated the 1st of March 1923, modifying the decree of Babu Ashutosh Pal, Subordinate Judge of Berhampur, dated the 22nd of December 1921.

Plaintiff-Respondent in execution of a decree for money obtained against one Chatrapat Singh purchased at auction the judgment-debtor's properties on 19th November 1907 for Rs. 14,050. The Defendants' predecessor in execution of a decree obtained against the same judgment-debtor Chatrapat, got Rs. 2,800 under order of Court, for rateable distribution, dated 15th February 1908. The judgment-debtor's wife Mina Kumari brought an action for declaration of her title to and recovery of possession of some of those properties and her suit was ultimately decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in her favour on 11th December 1916 declaring the sale of those properties invalid and she obtained possession thereof on 29th September 1917. The present action the Plaintiff brought against the Defendants on 4th September 1920 for recovery of the money paid to them under rateable distribution.

The trial Court gave the Plaintiff a decree for Rs. 2,605-11 without interest.

The Defendants appealed and their appeal was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court who on the Plaintiff's cross-objection awarded him interest also.

The Defendants appealed to High Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Murshidabad modifying the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge. The Plaintiff had obtained a decree against one Chatrapat Singh in 1907 in execution of which he put up for sale certain properties as belonging to his judgment-debtor. The properties were sold in different lots and they were all purchased at the auction sale by the Plaintiff on the 19th of November 1907, the total value of the properties being Rs. 14,050. The predecessor of the Defendants had also obtained a decree for money against the same judgment-debtor, and he applied for rateable distribution of the sale proceeds under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and obtained Rs. 2,800 and odd out of the money in deposit under an order of the Court on the 15th February 1908. The wife of the judgment-debtor Mina Kumari Bibi commenced a suit in 1907 against the Plaintiff, in which the judgment-debtor was also made a party, for declaration of her title to and for possession of some of the properties which were sold in execution of the Plaintiff's decree. She eventually succeeded in establishing her claim to those properties on appeal to the Privy Council and the order in Council was dated the 11th December 1916. Mina Kumari took possession of the properties on the 29th September 1917. The Plaintiff commenced the present suit on 4th September 1920 against the Defendants for recovery from them of a proportionate share of the price paid by the Plaintiff for those properties which the predecessor of the Defendants had taken out of Court under the order for rateable distribution. The Subordinate Judge allowed the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 2,605-11 ans., but did not give him any interest. The appeal of the Defendants was dismissed by the District Judge, who allowed the cross-objections of the Plaintiff with regard to interest which he allowed from the date of dispossession of the Plaintiff of the properties. The Defendants appeal to this Court against that decree. Several questions were raised on behalf of the Appellants, but the principal question which requires consideration is that of limitation. It was assumed by both parties before us that Art.

97 of the Limitation Act applies to the present case and it was so held by the Court of Appeal below. It may be a question whether this is a suit for money paid upon an existing consideration, as it can hardly be said that the Plaintiff paid money for any consideration from the Defendant. As however the question was not argued before us, I do not think it necessary to pursue the matter beyond stating that we do not decide that such a case as this falls within Art. 97. The controversy before us turned upon the point as to the time from which the period of limitation began to run. It is contended by the Appellants that it runs from the date of the decision of the Privy Council that the properties belonged to Mina Kumari and not to the judgment-debtor, while the Respondent contends that the consideration failed only from the date when the Plaintiff was deprived of possession of the properties and limitation should commence to run from that date. Several cases were cited before us in support of the contention of each party but most of them do not require consideration in detail as they arose out of suits by purchasers at voluntary sales against their vendors for the purchase money, as the vendors failed to secure them in possession of the properties sold on account of defect of their title. The cases proceeded either on the basis of the covenant for quiet enjoyment or on the ground that the sale was only voidable at the instance of third parties. Those cases do not appear to me to be of any assistance in the present case. The case principally relied on by the Appellants is Juscurn Boid v. Pirthi Chand Pal (1). In that case a purchaser of a patni under Reg. VIII of 1819 brought his suit for recovery of the purchase money from the zemindar as the sale of the patni had been set aside on the suit of a darpatnidar. The date of the decree of the Court of first instance setting aside the sale and not of the Appellate decree affirming the first decree was held to be the time from which limitation began to run. But it was contended before the Judicial Committee that the period of limitation began to run when possession was lost. With reference to this contention their Lordships observed:—"There may be circumstances in which a failure to get or retain possession may justly be regarded as the time from which the limitation period should run, but that is not the case here. The quality of the possession acquired by the present purchaser excludes the idea that the starting point is to be sought in a disturbance of possession or in any event other than the challenge to the sale and the negation of the purchaser's title to the entirety of what he brought involved in the decree of 24th August 1905. If further support of this view be required it may be found in the express provision of sec. 14 of the Regulation which directs that in the suit for reversal itself the purchaser is to be indemnified against all loss." The learned Judge below held that the decision of the Privy Council was based on the special provisions of sec. 14 of the Regulation and does not apply to the present case. He relied on the case of Gurshidawa v. Gangava (2), where it was held with reference to the provisions of sec. 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 that the cause of action did not accrue till the purchaser was deprived of the property sold. It is sufficient to say with regard to the last point that the present suit is not one under the provisions of sec. 315 of the Code of 1882. The law relating to this matter has been altered, and the words on which the decision in the Bombay case was based do not occur in the corresponding r. 93 of Or. 21 of the present Code. With regard to the main question it seems to us that the present case falls within the rule in Juscurn Boid's case (1), apart from consideration arising out of the provisions of sec. 14 of the Patni Regulation. In the present case there was a rateable distribution of the assets held by the Court under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. There was no undertaking by any person about the purchaser being put into possession of the properties sold. When the title to the properties was found by the Privy Council to be in Mina Kumari and not in the judgment-debtor there was a negation of the title of the judgment-debtor as well as that of the Plaintiff. The result of the decision was that the money which passed into the hands of the Defendants was finally declared not to be assets of the judgment-debtor which the Defendants were entitled to claim or retain. It was Plaintiff's money and he could recover it at once. I think therefore that the time from which the period of limitation began to run is the date of the decision and not the date of disturbance of possession with regard to which the Defendants had no concern. It is argued on behalf of the Respondent citing the case of Hanuman Kamut v. Hanuman Mandar (3), that the result of that case and the case of Juscurn Boid v. Pirthi Chand Pal (1) is that in such a case as this time would begin to run either from the date of the decree or from the disturbance of possession whichever is later. But the case of Hanuman Kamut v. Hanuman Mandar (3) hardly lends support to such a contention, where the disturbance of possession, when time was held to commence to run, was earlier than the decree dismissing the Plaintiff's suit for possession. Only one other case need be mentioned, that of Amrita Lal Bagchi v. Jogendra Lal (4), where under circumstances similar to this the learned Judges computed limitation from the date the sale was declared invalid, although they held that Art. 120 of the limitation Act was applicable. The period of limitation in this case therefore commenced to run from 11th December 1916.

The other contentions of the Appellants need only be stated for being rejected. It is urged that the Plaintiff could not get the sale set aside if his judgment-debtor had any interest in the property sold and as the sale of all the properties has not been set aside, he cannot bring this suit for recovery of a part of the purchase money. But the fact found is that the properties were separately sold for separate sums of money, and there is no reason why the Plaintiff should not recover the purchase money for those properties the sale with regard to which was set aside or declared void. It was next contended that the Plaintiff had presented an application in insolvency proceedings against his judgment-debtor that all his debts had been satisfied, and the Plaintiff cannot therefore recover the money claimed. It does not appear why he cannot do so, as the money claimed is the Plaintiff's own money which has got into the Defendant's hands. The last plea was that the Plaintiff was not at any rate entitled to interest. This also has no substance as the Defendant had the use of the money and he was rightly held liable for interest.

As however the Appellants succeed on the question of limitation, as the suit was brought more than 3 years after the date of the decree of the Privy Council, this appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Res judicata.—Decision in previous rent suit on rate of interest, if res judicata in subsequent rent suit when law altered by judicial decisions after passing of previous decision—Stipulation in kabuliyat about interest at 75 per cent., if penal.

The Plaintiffs sued for rent on a kabuliyat in which interest for arrears of rent was stipulated at 75 per cent. per annum. It appeared that in a previous suit for rent between the same parties it was held that the stipulation as to interest was of a penal nature and interest was allowed at 12 per cent. per annum:

Held—That the mere fact that 75 per cent. is the rate stipulated in a kabuliyat does not show that the rate was a penal one.

ASUTOSH DHAR v. JOYLAL SARDAR (6) referred to.

That the law on the subject having been altered by judicial decisions since the judgment in the previous suit it could not operate as res judicata.

Cases must be decided upon the law as it stands when the judgment is pronounced and not upon what the law was at the date of a previous suit and if the said law has been altered in the meantime and the effect of the law has been differently interpreted by judicial decisions or altered by statute, the decision on the question of interest in an earlier suit for rent would not operate as res judicata with regard to the same question in a suit for rent for subsequent years.

ALIMUNNISSA CHAUDHURANI v. SHAMA CHARAN ROY (2) followed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th July 1922 against the decree of Babu Rajendra Lal Sadhu, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Bakerganj, dated the 22nd of February 1922, modifying the decree of Babu Protap Chandra Sen Gupta, Munsif, 2nd Court at Bhola, dated the 27th of May 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Ray and Bhuban Mohan Saha for the Appellants.

Babu Sures Chandra Taluqdar for the Respondents.

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent instituted by the Plaintiffs for the years 1923 to 1926, the allegation being that the Defendants were holding under a kabuliyat executed by their predecessor-in-interest for dwelling purposes in the year 1281. The Court of first instance decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. The lower Appellate Court gave the Plaintiffs a decree for the amount of rent claimed for the years in suit together with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, the rate of interest stipulated in the kabuliyat being 75 per cent. per annum at which the suit had been decreed by the Court of first instance. The Plaintiffs appeal to this Court, and their contention is that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of interest is wrong. It appears that the ground upon which the rate of interest was objected to in the Court of first instance on behalf of the Defendants was that it was penal and unconscionable. The learned Munsif held that according to the present trend of judicial decisions the stipulation as to interest cannot be held to be either penal or unconscionable. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal was of opinion that the question as to the rate of interest was res judicata as between the parties by reason of a previous decision in a suit for rent as between the parties, which had been marked as Ex. 7 in the case; and inasmuch as in that decision it was held that the stipulation was of a penal nature it disallowed the interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and gave the Plaintiffs a decree, as I have said, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that the decision in the previous suit on the question of interest cannot in law operate as res judicata. On behalf of the Respondents it is urged that the said decision does operate as res judicata, and it is further contended that in any event inasmuch as the Defendants were holding over, the Plaintiffs are not entitled to interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat but are entitled only to such interest as in the opinion of the Court is fair and reasonable. So far as the question of res judicata is concerned it is necessary to refer to the decision, Ex. 7, upon which the Court of Appeal below has relied. It appears that in the previous suit the issue as to interest was as to whether the Plaintiffs were entitled to get interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and it was decided that the interest claimed was high and was therefore penal. This decision was passed on the 30th of April 1917. Since then there have been a number of decisions on the question of penal character or otherwise of interest stipulated in contracts, of which it is necessary to mention only one case, namely, the case of Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (1), a decision of the Judicial Committee, in which it has been laid down that in the absence of anything to prove undue influence or to show that there was an unconscionable bargain the mere high rate of interest is not to be treated either as penal or unconscionable. The law having thus been altered the question is whether the decision in the earlier suit should operate as res judicata in the present one. On behalf of the Appellants reliance has been placed with regard to this matter on the case of Alimunnissa Chaudhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (2). In that case it was laid down that cases must be decided upon the law as it stands when the judgment is pronounced and not upon what the law was at the date of a previous suit and if the said law has been altered in the meantime and the effect of the law has been differently interpreted by the judicial decisions or altered by statute the decision on the question of interest in an earlier suit for rent would not operate as res judicata with regard to the same question in a suit for rent for subsequent years. The decision, upon which the earlier decision was based in that case, had in the meantime been overruled by a Full Bench decision. That case seems to me very much the same as the present case. On behalf of the Respondents reliance has been placed upon a number of decisions, especially upon the decisions in the cases of Rai Charan Ghose v. Kumud Mohon Dutta (3), Rambhari

Sarkar v. Surendra Nath Ghosh (4) and Waman Hari v. Hari Vithal (5) for the purpose of contending that the decision upon a pure question of law, even though erroneous, may under certain circumstances operate as res judicata. There can be no dispute as to the proposition of law which is contended for on behalf of the Respondents. But, as I have said, the facts appearing in the present case are distinguishable from the facts appearing in the cases cited on behalf of the Respondents and I can see nothing upon which I can distinguish the case of Alimunnissa Chaudhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (2), upon which reliance has been placed on behalf of the Appellants. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decision in the earlier suit for rent does not operate as res judicata. The mere fact that 75 per cent. per annum is a rate stipulated in the kabuliyat does not show that the rate was a penal one nor is there anything to show nor any finding has been arrived at to the effect that the bargain was penal and unconscionable and this is not the first instance in which interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum has been allowed on the basis of a stipulation in a kabuliyat. I may refer for instance to the case of Asutosh Dhar v. Joylal Sardar (6), where in awarding interest in a suit for rent at the contract rate which was 75 per cent. per annum this Court observed as follows:— "The rate no doubt is very high, 75 per cent. per annum, but the tenants have the remedy in their own hands. They have only to pay their rent regularly and no interest will be chargeable." I can therefore see no reason for not awarding a de-

So far as the second ground is concerned a reference to the kabuliyat shows that on the face of it, it is not a kabuliyat for a period of nine years as contended for on behalf of the Respondents and there is nothing to show that as a matter of fact the Respondents were holding over after the expiry of the kabuliyat. On this ground it is not possible for us to say that the Defendants are liable to pay interest at any rate other than that mentioned in the kabuliyat. I, accordingly, think that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is not correct and I set it aside and restore the decision of the learned Munsif with costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

MATEUR RASUL,
Judgment-debtor No. 2, Appellant,
v.
ABDUL SOID, Decree-holder, Auction-purchaser, and ors.,
Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47—Mortgage decrees—Execution—Objection by judgment-debtor's son that property belonged to his mother and not father, and want of legal necessity—Objection regarding substitution of heirs out of time in the suit, if tenable in such application—Limitation for an application under Or. 21, r. 90, if can be saved by purporting to make it under sec. 47—Non-service of notice of execution on minor's guardian, if vitiates the execution sale.

An application purporting to be under sec. 47 and Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. Code, was made for setting aside a sale in execution of a mortgage decrees. The objections that were put forward to bring the application under sec. 47 were that the properties were not liable for the decree inasmuch as they belonged to the mother of the applicant and the decree had been passed not for the debts of the mother but for those of her husband and that the latter had no legal necessity to mortgage the properties and consequently the properties of the applicant were not liable for the mortgage:

Held—That these objections which had been raised and overruled in the suit could hardly be considered as falling under sec. 47, C. P. C.

Where an application really came under Or. 21, r. 90, the mere fact that in the application sec. 47 was mentioned would not enable the applicant to save limitation if the application was not filed within 30 days of the sale.

Where it was contended in an application under sec. 47 and Or. 21, r. 90 that a final mortgage decree was bad, inasmuch as the judgment-debtor's heirs were not brought on the record within the time allowed by law:

Held—That this was not an objection which could be taken either on an application under sec. 47 or in an application under Or. 21, r. 90, C. P. Code. The executing Court was not competent to go behind the decree and enquire into any question challenging the validity of the decree itself.

Where no guardian ad litem for a minor judgment-debtor was appointed in the execution proceedings and notice of execution in connection with the issuing of sale proclamation was served upon the minor judgment-debtor:

Held—That this only amounted to an irregularity, and this irregularity could not be taken to have vitiated the sale, for non-representation of an infant by a guardian in execution proceedings is not itself a sufficient ground for avoiding an execution sale.

MALKARJAN v. NARHARI (1) and FANI BHUSAN v. SURENDRA NATH (2) relied on.

This was an appeal against the order of Bahu Aswini Kumar Das Gupta, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 23rd of September 1924.

The facts material to this report will appear from the judgment.

M. Md. Nurul Huq Choudhury for the Appellant.

Mr. Fazlul Huq and Babu Radhicanjan Guha for the Respondents.

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree. The Appellant was one of the judgment-debtors against whom the said decree was passed. A preliminary decree was passed on the 27th December 1922 and the final decree on the 23rd January 1923. The sale took place on the 15th March 1924, the decree-holder being the auction-purchaser at the sale. The application on which the order which forms the subject-matter of this appeal was passed was made by the Appellant on the 15th April 1924. The application purported to be one under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and also under Or. 21, r. 90 of the same Code. The objections that were put forward on behalf of the Appellant in the said application in order to bring it under sec. 47 were mainly to the effect that the properties were not liable for the decree inasmuch as they belonged to the mother of the Appellant and the decree had been passed not for the debts of the mother but for those of her husband; and that the father had no legal necessity to mortgage the properties and consequently the properties of the applicant were not liable for the mortgage. The same objection is also to be found in another application which was filed on behalf of the Appellant previously on the 7th January 1924 and which was dismissed for non-prosecution on the 8th February 1924. It appears also that this objection was raised in the suit itself and the decree was passed on deciding the same against the applicant. This objection is really one which can hardly be considered as falling under sec. 47, C. P. C., and the order that has been passed by the Subordinate Judge against which the present appeal has been preferred really comes under Or. 21, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That being so, the mere fact that in the application sec. 47 was mentioned would not enable the Appellant to save limitation if as a matter of fact the application was not filed within 30 days of the sale. The Respondent put forward a contention before us to the effect that the application was filed beyond 30 days from the date of the sale and that no reasons have been given by the Appellant such as would enable him to get an order extending the period of limitation provided for an application under that rule. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment states that the application for setting aside the sale was made on the last date of limitation. But looking at the dates on which the sale took place and the application was filed it will appear that it was filed a day too late. It should have been filed on the 14th April 1924, on which date, it appears, the Court was not closed and therefore as a matter of fact it was filed a day too late, and the application, therefore, should have been dismissed as not having been filed within time. As however it was not so dismissed but was dealt with on the merits and as the learned vakil appearing on behalf of the Appellant has argued the appeal before us on the merits, I propose to deal with the case on its merits as well.

The objections put forward on behalf of the Appellant are mainly three. The first is that before the preliminary decree was passed on the 27th December 1922 one of the judgment-debtors, namely, Masturi Khatun had died and that no substitution had been made of her heirs in her place before the said decree was passed and that it was only when the final decree was about to be passed on the 27th January 1923, that is to say, about sixteen months after the date of her death that her heirs were brought on the record. It is contended that the decree that was passed was ex parte having regard to the fact that the judgment-debtor's heirs were not brought on the record within the time allowed by law. In our opinion, this is not an objection which can be taken either on an application under sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure or in an application made under Or. 21, r. 90 of that Code. The executing Court is not competent to go behind the decree and enquire into the question, thereby in effect challenging the validity of the decree itself. The final decree that was passed was the decree that was the subject-matter of the execution proceedings and it was passed against the heirs of the deceased Masturi Khatun. If it had been wrongly passed against those heirs that may be a ground for setting aside the decree. But it is certainly not open to the executing Court to go into that question and to say as to whether the decree was validly passed against those heirs.

That objection is not, therefore, at all tenable.

The second ground put forward on behalf of the Appellant is that there was irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale and that in consequence of such irregularity the properties were sold at an inadequate price. The decretal amount was Rs. 20,258 and the properties were sold for Rs. 15,435. The learned Subordinate Judge has found upon the evidence that the properties consisted of some taluqs and some khamar lands and that the value of the taluqs would be Rs. 12,500 and that the khamar lands would be valued at Rs. 3,800. In his opinion the total value of the properties at the highest figure cannot exceed Rs. 16,300. The Appellant in these proceedings examined himself and two other witnesses in order to prove that the real value of the properties was much more than what was obtained at the sale. The Appellant himself was not in a position to give any clear evidence as to the value of these properties. He stated that the net income of the properties was Rs. 600 from which the suddar rent had got to be deducted and that such properties sell at 40 times the annual income. As to the khamar lands he stated that they were about 22 kanis in area of which about 19½ kanis were culturable lands. In cross-examination, however, he stated he was not able to state the value of any of the taluqs or their income nor was he in a position to say what the profits of any particular taluq were but that his Sarkar knew all about it. This Sarkar was not examined as a witness in the case. Witness No. 2 for the Appellant states that there are 22 kanis of khamar land and that each kani sells for Rs. 700 or Rs. 800 and that the taluqs sell at 30 or 35 times their annual profits. He, however, is a man who is a servant of the Appellant. The only other witness examined in the case on behalf of the Appellant is witness No. 3 who states that he does not know if any sale proclamation had been served or if there had been any beating of the drums. He states that each kani of land sells for Rs. 600 to Rs. 700 and that the taluqs sell at 30 times their annual income. He states that he himself purchased a taluq at 32 times its annual income. As the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, it is well known that small properties are sold at much higher values proportionately than large ones. On behalf of the decree-holders several witnesses were examined and they prove that as a matter of fact taluqs are sold at 25 times their annual income and even upon the deposition of the Appellant the total income of his properties would not exceed Rs. 500 and, therefore, the value of the taluqs would be about Rs. 12,500. As to the khamar land, upon the evidence adduced on behalf of the decree-holder, it would appear that on an average the price is about Rs. 200 per kani. On behalf of the Appellant copies of some cadastral survey khatians were filed and it was only at the very last stage of the case that an application was made on his behalf for time to have them certified. This application was rejected and in our opinion rightly rejected. Moreover what were filed were mere fragments and afford no real assistance to the Appellant.

The position then is that the Appellant has failed to prove the value of the properties, while upon the evidence on the record it cannot be said that the price fetched at the sale was inadequate.

Then as to the service of notices, beyond the negative evidence given by witness No. 3 examined on behalf of the Appellant to the effect that there was no publication of notices there was no other evidence on his side. On the other hand, the decree-holder has examined peons, a tahsildar, a drummer who took part in the service of the notices and three other persons who were present at the time when the proclamation and notice were served and upon their evidence it has been satisfactorily established that as a matter of fact the notice and the sale proclamation were duly and properly served. It is, therefore, not established that there was any irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale far less that there was any inadequacy in the price that was fetched at the sale, consequent upon any irregularity.

The next ground taken on behalf of the Appellant is to the effect that the notices of execution in connection with the issuing of sale proclamation were served not upon the minors' guardian but were served upon the minor judgment-debtors. It is contended that Babu Debendra Prosad Roy who was appointed guardian ad litem of the minors in the suit was not appointed as such guardian in the execution proceedings and that inasmuch as there was no such appointment the service of notices on him cannot be said to have been proper service in the eye of law. It is true that there was no fresh order appointing a guardian for the minor judgment-debtors in the execution proceedings and it is also true that the guardian does not appear to have entered appearance in the course of such proceedings. It also appears that after the sale he made an application before the Court stating that he was informed that the sale which had taken place was vitiated by irregularities and was fit to be set aside and he asked for permission for making an application to set aside the sale and that no order was passed upon his application beyond the order that it should be filed. This, however, only amounts to an irregularity. As has been laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Malkarjan v. Narhari (1), where a sale took place after the notice had been wrongly served upon a person who was not a legal representative of the judgment-debtors' estate and where the executing Court had erroneously decided that he was to be treated as such representative, the sale was not a nullity and should not be treated as invalid notwithstanding the irregularity, even though a material one, for the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree had been complete throughout. This irregularity cannot be taken to have vitiated the sale. As an authority for such a proposition reference may also be made to the case of Fani Bhusan Bhuian v. Surendra Nath Das (2), where it has been held that non-representation of an infant by a guardian in execution proceedings is not itself a sufficient ground for avoiding an execution sale and that such matter stands on a different footing from a case where the provisions of Or. 32 of the Code have not been observed in a suit by or against minors.

For these reasons we think that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

BIMALA PROSAD

v.

LAL MONI DEVI and ors., Opposite Party.

Plaint presented in wrong Court returned for filing in proper Court—Amendment of Court Fees Act before return of plaint—Court-fee, if to be paid as under new Act—Plaintiff, if to be credited with amount already paid.

A plaint was filed in a Court which was ultimately found not to have jurisdiction in the matter and the plaint was returned to be presented to the proper Court. Before the plaint was returned the Court Fees Act was amended:

Held—That when the plaint which has been returned is presented in a Court of competent jurisdiction the suit must be taken to be instituted on the date of such presentation and court-fee was payable under the amended Act. The Plaintiff would be credited with the amount already paid and was to pay the balance.

This was a Rule against an order of Babu Jagadish Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Probodh Kumar Das and Apurba Charan Mukerji for the Petitioner.

Mr. Charu Chandra Biswas and Babu Manindra Kumar Bose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiff filed a plaint in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Alipur on the 2nd October 1920. After litigation up to the High Court it was decided that that Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit and the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court on the 31st October 1922. The Plaintiff then filed it before the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan on the 14th November 1922. The question that arises in this Rule is, "What court-fee should be paid by the Plaintiff." The lower Appellate Court has held that he should pay court-fees in accordance with the amended Court Fees Act, which came into force on the 1st April 1922, after deducting the court-fees already paid.

For the Plaintiff, the Petitioner before us, it is contended that the court-fee originally paid is sufficient. On behalf of the Opposite Party, the Defendant, who appeared in this Rule it is contended that the Plaintiff should pay the court-fee under the amended Act without any deduction for the cancelled court-fee stamp on the plaint that was originally filed. We think that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the court-fee payable is that payable under the new Act after crediting the Plaintiff with the court-fee originally paid. The question as to the Plaintiff being entitled to be credited with the court-fee paid has been decided by Full Benches of the Madras and Bombay High Courts. No case of this Court clearly in point has been pointed out to us but our experience is that the practice in this province is the same as in the other provinces and we think that the Rule laid down in those cases should be followed.

As to the court-fee payable it is undisputed that the court-fee should be leviable under the law which was in force at the time when the suit was instituted.

The whole question in this Rule is, "Was the suit instituted when the plaint was filed in the Court which had no jurisdiction or when it was filed in the Court having jurisdiction." On this point the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Hedlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (1) is an authority for holding that when the plaint which has been returned is presented in a Court of competent jurisdiction the suit must be taken to be instituted on the date of such presentation. On behalf of the Petitioner reliance is placed on certain decisions of this Court reported in the Weekly Reporter which are discussed in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. We agree with him in thinking that those cases turn on the question of limitation and merely apply the Rule which has since been made in the law by the passing of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

The result is that the Rule is discharged. The Opposite Party's application for a Rule directing an order to pay further court-fees is rejected.

The parties will bear their own costs.

The Petitioner will be allowed one month from this date to pay the deficit court-fees.

Criminal Procedure and it is not necessary for the Magistrate to act only on legal evidence and he need not administer oaths but before passing an order under sec. 3 he must satisfy himself not only that the houses are used as brothels or for the purposes of habitual prostitution or as disorderly houses but he must further find an additional fact to bring it within the provisions of cls. (a), (b) or (c) of sec. 2 of the Act.

The Magistrate may come to his decision in any way that does not violate the ordinary rules of fairness and propriety.

While considering the cases of several houses together the Magistrate should apply his mind to the case of each house separately on the question whether annoyance was caused to the inhabitants of the vicinity.

This was a Reference made by the Sessions Judge of Zillah Rajshahi, recommending that the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Malda, dated the 30th September 1924, be set aside.

* The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gopal Chandra Das and Babu Satyendra Kishore Ghose for the Complainants.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Bose and Babu Jatindra Mohan Chaudhuri for the Accused.

Mr. Ashraf Ali, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

This is a Reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Rajshahi recommending that the order made by the Deputy Magistrate of Malda, dated the 30th September 1924, under sec. 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act (Act II of 1907) be set aside.

On a petition submitted to the Magistrate of Malda by 25 residents in the vicinity summonses were served on 31 persons described as owners and 87 persons described as occupiers directing them to appear before the Magistrate on the 30th September 1924. After questioning the persons who appeared before him and examining witnesses, but without administering any oath to the witnesses or recording their evidence or the statements of the persons against whom the proceedings had been taken, the Magistrate passed the following order : " I am satisfied that the houses occupied by the women named below are used as brothels and for the purpose of habitual prostitution and they and the owners of the houses occupied by them named in the left-hand column are directed to discontinue such use by the 30th October 1924."

In the case of Rajani Khemtawali v. Pramoth Nath Chaudhuri (1), it has been held that proceedings under sec. 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act of 1907 are not governed by the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not necessary for the Magistrate to act only on legal evidence and he need not and possibly he may not administer oaths. But before passing an order he must satisfy himself that the house is used as described in sec. 2, cls. (a), (b) or (c) and he may do this in any way that does not violate the ordinary rules of fairness and propriety. In the present case we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the proceedings taken by the Magistrate do not appear to have been conducted within the ordinary rules of fairness. In the case referred to the order of the Magistrate was upheld on the ground that the principles had not been violated. The Judges had before them a full record not only of the evidence taken but also of a local enquiry held by the Magistrate in those proceedings. In the present case we have no record except the written statement filed by the parties proceeded against and the judgment of the Magistrate. In the present case the Magistrate does not appear to have properly realized that before he can pass an order under sec. 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act he must not only be satisfied that the houses are used as brothels or for the purpose of habitual prostitution or as disorderly houses, but he must further find an additional fact to bring it within the provisions of cls. (a), (b) or (c) of sec. 2 of the Act. Though in his subsequent explanation the Magistrate refers to the fact which might bring cl. (a) into operation, namely, that the houses are in the vicinity of educational institutions, but at the time of the enquiry the only allegation made before him was that the houses were used as brothels, etc., to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity. In his judgment he has stated that certain persons named by him have proved that all the women proceeded against with six exceptions are prostitutes and they use the houses occupied by them as brothels and for the purpose of habitual prostitution to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity including the witnesses examined by him. But in his final order he simply recorded that he is satisfied that the houses occupied by the women named below are used as brothels and for the purpose of habitual prostitution. He suggests that he has overlooked the importance of finding that each of these houses is used to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity. Under the law the Magistrate has no power to take action against the keepers of brothels provided that the place is respectably conducted unless it is in the neighbourhood either of an educational institution or of a cantonment so as to draw the operation of cl. (a) or (c).

In order to decide whether a brothel is used as such to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity, there is a great risk of confusion with findings when the cases of such a large number of houses are jointly considered. We do not mean that it is necessary to draw up separate proceedings and hold separate enquiries in the case of each of these houses. But we think in deciding the question whether annoyance was caused the Magistrate should have applied his mind to the case of each house separately. It seems obvious that when there were several brothels in a portion of the town if some of them are used in a disorderly manner to the annoyance of the neighbours the Magistrate, unless he applies his mind to each case separately, is liable to hold that all are similarly used. In fact his finding in his judgment suggests that there has been such confusion. There is no clear finding that every house has been so used as to cause annoyance.

We therefore accept this reference and we set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Malda, dated the 30th September 1924, directing the persons named in his order under sec. 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act to discontinue the use of the houses as brothels or for the purpose of habitual prostitution.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Bose for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MUKERJI, J.—These two appeals arise out of an order passed by the Third Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta convicting the Appellants Prafulla Kumar Roy Chowdhury and Manik Lal Sur of an offence under secs. 120B/408, I. P. C. and sentencing them each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 500 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and awarding the fines, if realised, to the complainant as compensation. There was another accused person one Pramatha Nath Bose who was tried along with the Appellants in respect of the same offence, but was acquitted.

The three accused persons were on the staff of the Bengali newspaper Basumati, Prafulla as a despatcher, Manik as an assistant accountant and Pramatha as checker of postage stamps. The prosecution case was that they conspired with each other and were members of a conspiracy with the object of committing criminal breach of trust in respect of postage stamp or the money equivalent thereof and that they did in fact commit the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of 67,606 half-anna postage stamps of Rs. 2,112-11 as. their money value. The period was confined in the charge to that between the 3rd October 1924 and 23rd March 1925, both days inclusive. It was the prosecution case that a gigantic and well-organised swindle was being perpetrated in respect of postage stamps or their money equivalent for some considerable time, but for the sake of convenience of proof or to prevent embarrassment the charge was confined to such postage stamps as were meant to be affixed to cards which would require half-anna stamps to pass through the post as post cards. The circumstances under which the fraud was detected are fully described in the judgment of the learned Magistrate and need not be repeated here, but it is necessary to describe the procedure which

The procedure which was in vogue may be gathered, though not without considerable difficulty, from the evidence of the proprietor P. W. 4 and the Manager P. W. 1. The difficulty arises from the divergence as to the details in the evidence of these two gentlemen due mainly to the disregard of sequence in the events that they were asked to state. The procedure appears to have been somewhat cumbrous and to state quite shortly it was as follows:—Letters issued from the different departments of the office—and there are sixteen departments of the concern manned by a very large number of employees—are entered in the issue registers of the respective departments and placed before the proprietor in his room for his signature. After they are signed the despatcher takes them from the proprietor's room. The despatcher then gets an advance from the durwan requisite to cover the postage. This advance is made by the durwan from out of the cash which he has in his hand on account of sale proceeds of newspapers sold through hawkers. The despatcher takes this advance from the durwan after giving him a slip noting down therein the details of this amount. Stamp purchased with the amount so received is affixed by the despatcher to the letters and he produces them before the assistant accountant. The assistant accountant is supposed to check and count the number and value of the stamps on post cards, letters and packets and enter the same separately on a slip, and while retaining the slip with himself, returns the post cards, letters and packets to the despatcher. The slip is made over by the assistant accountant to a clerk for being entered in the stamp register. This clerk ordinarily writes the stamp register, but in his temporary absence other persons as well write it including the checker of stamps. The despatcher takes the post cards, letters and packets to the checker of stamps whose duty it is to count them again and keep a note of the figures representing the stamps or their value. The articles are then despatched by the despatcher through some office peon to the post office. After the stamp register is written up the checker compares the entries with the notes kept by him and examines it with reference to the slip prepared by the assistant accountant which also passes on into his hands. The checker has also to compare the entries with the issue register of the different departments. The durwan when he makes over the cash to the cashier, produces before him a book in which he gets written up a sort of account in respect of his collections and disbursements and he also produces before him the slip which the despatcher gives him for the advance taken. The cashier receives the balance, if any, and puts down in this book the items mentioned in the slip and makes a calculation therein showing the amounts spent on different heads and also the cash he receives from the durwan. The cashier finds the amount taken by the despatcher to tally with what the stamp register shows and it is then inferred that the postage actually issued is the postage for which advance has been received from the durwan. It may be conceded that if this procedure was followed to the letter, there could be no fraud but for the complicity of the despatcher, the assistant accountant and the checker, and each one of them was a sine qua non in the conspiracy and possibly others may also have participated in it.

Now as regards the embezzlement there can hardly be any room for doubt. A good deal of argument has been advanced before us in order to show that the examination of the books of the office by the C. I. D. officer was not comprehensive enough, that the figures arrived at by him cannot be acted upon as they do not take into account the postage that must have been used in letters and packets, that the proprietor's personal correspondence and as well as stamps which must have been used by the Collection Department, the Ayurvedic Department, the Editorial Department and the Agency Department have not been included in the calculation. Our attention has also been drawn to some of the dates on which the number of letters actually despatched are far in excess of the number for which postage was charged for, and we have been asked to hold that if an audit embracing all the departments of the concern was made and for a sufficiently long period it would appear that there is no foundation for the charge. The learned Magistrate has dealt with all these matters very fully in his judgment and I entirely agree with him in his conclusions in this respect. Making all sorts of allowance that is conceivable or that may be necessary nothing approaching a plausible explanation can be offered of the gigantic discrepancy in the figures. There is in my opinion not the slightest doubt whatever that a gross fraud was perpetrated in the office on a well-organised system and for a considerable length of time, and but for the honesty of some people in the office, the fraud would have gone on without detection. The statements made by the Appellants in their written statement or in their defence only betray an innate depravity of nature and only create in our minds an amount of prejudice against them which personally I find it somewhat difficult to get over. The proprietor apparently did not realise that he had to deal with a wicked world and it is this ignorance on his part that has caused him to suffer.

The substantial question for investigation in the case is as to the complicity of the two Appellants. As I have already stated, if the procedure which I have described was strictly followed, in other words, if the three members of the alleged conspiracy did what it was their duty to do every day, all three must have been parties to it. In a criminal case, however, we are not permitted to proceed upon an assumption that they actually did what they were required by the rules to do. The learned Magistrate has recognised the importance of this doctrine when dealing with the case against the checker Pramatha. With regard to that accused he thus observes in his judgment :—" There is ground for suspicion that accused No. 2 Pramatha was also in the conspiracy, as there is no doubt that he had the stamp register before him daily, because almost every day his initials are to be found under both the credit and the debit side. But it is said that he checked the totals only and did not compare with the issue register at all. None of these registers do, in fact, bear any initials of the accused No. 2 or any indication that he looked over them. It cannot therefore be said for certain that these registers were placed before him or seen by him daily in the evening as alleged by the prosecution. This work of daily checking used formerly to be done by the proprietor himself but as he was busy with litigation in 1924 he made over this duty to accused No. 2. The checking was done at the end of the day after a strenuous day's work. It is very doubtful whether the checking was ever done as it was intended to be done." He thus acquitted Pramatha giving him the benefit of the doubt. The acquittal of this accused strikes at the root of the prosecution case and reflects upon the case as against the two Appellants at least to this extent that we have got to be satisfied that the two Appellants before us did actually follow the routine that was prescribed for them in respect of the items covered by the period in the charge and to see what exactly has been proved in the case in this respect.

As regards the Appellant Prafulla there is not the slightest doubt upon the evidence of the manager P. W. 1, the proprietor P. W. 4 and the durwan P. W. 3, that the part ascribed to him in the routine used to be performed by him. There is other evidence corroborative of the evidence of these witnesses. To show that he was a party to the conspiracy, however, it has got to be proved that he took a larger sum of money from the durwan than was actually necessary for the postage. On this point there is no evidence. The slips which he used to give to the durwan are not available, the entries in the durwan's book (Ex. 19) which purported to have been made by the cashier from those slips have been proved only by proof of the handwriting of the cashier; the cashier has not been called. It is said he has left office. This is not altogether unnatural as Prafulla is his brother; but that does not relieve the prosecution from proving that the entries so made by the cashier really represented what Prafulla had stated in the slips. The durwan does not and indeed cannot be expected to say what amounts were taken by Prafulla. Prafulla's connection with the entries made in the stamp register or his knowledge of any other documentary evidence showing that larger amounts were being entered than were actually necessary has not at all been established. In fact it has not been shown that the conspiracy was not equally possible without Prafulla but with his brother the cashier as one of the conspirators; and so long as this contingency is within the range of possibility Prafulla's complicity cannot be held to have been established. Prafulla's extrajudicial confession has not been relied upon by the learned Magistrate and his reasons for so doing are sound and substantial. To bring home the offence to Prafulla in my judgment we have to assume the very facts which the prosecution has failed to prove against him.

Besides the evidence to which I have referred the prosecution relies upon the pieces of documentary evidence, namely, Exs. 2 and 3. These are two of the slips which used to be prepared by the assistant cashier. All the other slips are missing from the office. One of them, Ex. 2, is said to relate to a date subsequent to the period covered by the charge and is only relevant as showing the practice and that the assistant cashier used to prepare such slips. The other slip, Ex. 3, of which the lower portion is said to have been in his handwriting shows that he made an entry indicating that postage was being charged for a number of post cards far in excess of those that were being issued on that particular day. The latter undoubtedly is a very valuable piece of evidence as against the Appellant Manik, but it does not touch the Appellant Prafulla.

In my opinion therefore there is no evidence which would justify the conviction of Prafulla upon the charge on which he has been tried, and his appeal should be allowed and he should be acquitted and released.

With the acquittal of Prafulla, the other Appellant Manik stands acquitted as a matter of course, for the conspiracy alleged in the charge is one in which only three persons are alleged to have been participators, of whom one was acquitted by the learned Magistrate and the other

PRAFULLA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Prafulla has just been acquitted by this Court. The Appellant Manik therefore should also be released.

UDOTGLAND PANNA-LAL, Petitioner,
v.

P. E. GAZI AB & Co.,
Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 110—Decree involving indirectly claim to property of appealable value—Connection must not be too remote.

Without attempting to define the word "property" as used in the second clause to sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Judicial Committee held that in the present case where the actual subject of the suit was only Rs. 3,000 odd, the other claim alleged to be affected by the decree was not really consequential on the decree under appeal and too remote to be entitled to the description of being property indirectly involved in the issue of the suit.

This was an application for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decree of the High Court in Bengal, dated the 30th January 1924.

The Petitioner entered into contracts with the Respondent Company for the purchase from the latter of 1,000 bales of jute. The jute was delivered but was rejected as of inferior quality and was invoiced back. Disputes arose between the parties and abortive arbitrations took place.

On the 5th July 1920 a sole arbitrator appointed by the Defendant Company made an ex parte award in their favour for Rs. 18,987.

That award was set aside by the High Court in August 1921.

Another ex parte award in favour of the Defendant Company was similarly set aside in February 1922.

On the 20th February 1922 the Petitioner filed a suit for Rs. 81,617 for loss sustained under the contracts and interest thereon.

That suit was eventually stayed at the instance of the Defendant Company on the 28th July 1922 on the ground that the matters in dispute should be referred to arbitration. Thereafter each party appointed an arbitrator and each arbitrator was objected to by the Opposite Party. Nevertheless each arbitrator contended that his appointment was valid and each made a separate ex parte award. The arbitrator appointed by the Petitioner awarded him Rs. 81,617, the amount of his claim in the suit that was stayed, and the Respondent Company's arbitrator awarded the Company Rs. 3,953.

The Respondent Company thereupon applied to the High Court to set aside the award in favour of the Petitioner, and obtained an order as prayed for on the 5th December 1922.

On the 9th December 1922 the Petitioner filed a suit to set aside the award in favour of the Respondent; he obtained a decree from the trial Judge (Greaves, J.) which was set aside by the High Court on appeal (Sanderson, C. J. and Richardson, J.). The Petitioner then applied for a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council but that application was dismissed by the High Court (Sanderson, C. J. and Walmsley, J.) on the 5th May 1924.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and L. M. Parikh for the Petitioner.—The amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal is over Rs. 10,000, so that an appeal lies to the Privy Council under the first paragraph of sec. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

In any event it comes under the 2nd paragraph of sec. 110, in that there is involved indirectly a claim to property of over Rs. 10,000 in value.

The effect of the judgment of the Indian Courts is to deprive the Petitioner of something of the value of over Rs. 10,000, viz., his right to prosecute his claim in the other suit.

The High Court hold that the word "property" in sec. 110 is intended to connote the element of materiality. That cannot be so, inasmuch as there are cases where no actual value can be assigned to the right in issue as, e.g., in a suit to set aside an adoption.

The word "property" is nowhere defined in the Civil Procedure Code, but it is defined in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Sec. 130 of that Act clearly shows that property must include an "actionable claim," and an "actionable claim" as defined in sec. 3 would include the present right of the Petitioner.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondent Company.—No appeal lies under sec. 110, C. P. Code. In the Code the word "property" is not used in so wide a sense as in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

There is no actual definition but the meaning of the word can be gathered from a reference to the following portions of the Code :—

Sec. 2 (12), Or. 20, rr. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

Or. 21, rr. 11, 17 (proviso).

From this it is clear that "property" in the Code means something tangible as separate from a chose in action.

In any event the Appellant's right to his claim is conditional not merely on his setting aside the decree appealed from but also the decree of the 28th July 1922 from which no appeal has been lodged.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—The question raised by this petition is as to the meaning of sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. The circumstances which have given rise to it are peculiar and complicated. They arise out of a contract for sale of goods made by the Respondents with the Petitioner. In the contract of sale there was a provision that all disputes arising out of the sale should be settled by arbitration. A dispute did arise and cross-claims were made. The parties commenced arbitration proceedings, but disagreed as to appointment of arbitrators. An arbitrator appointed by the Respondents made an ex parte award in their favour, but this was set aside by the Court. New arbitrators chosen in a manner ordered by the Court were then appointed. Another ex parte award was made and this also was set aside. Against this order setting it aside the Respondents appealed. The Petitioner then filed a suit claiming the damages he had sought in the arbitration. This was met by an application to stay the suit pending the disposal of the above-mentioned appeal, or otherwise until the matter was settled by arbitration. The High Court granted the stay. The Petitioner appealed against that order. The Court of Appeal then took up this appeal and the appeal before mentioned and it dismissed both appeals, the date of the dismissal of the last-mentioned being the 28th July 1922. The parties then again betook themselves to arbitration. Again the arbitrators were unable to agree and ex parte awards were made, one in favour of the Petitioner for Rs. 81,000 odd, the other in favour of the Respondents for Rs. 3,900 odd.

On the 5th December, the High Court, on the application of the Respondents, set aside the award in favour of the Petitioner. The Petitioner then raised a suit to set aside the award in favour of the Respondents, and it is in this suit that the petition comes before the Board. The High Court in its Original Jurisdiction set it aside, but on appeal the Appeal Court reversed and dismissed the suit. The Petitioner applied for leave to appeal, but this was refused upon the ground that the sum involved was neither directly nor indirectly of the value of Rs. 10,000.

The only question, therefore, is whether the case falls within the words of sec. 110; that section is as follows:—

110. In each of the cases mentioned in cls. (a) and (b) of sec. 109, the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be ten thousand rupees or upwards, and the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be the same sum or upwards, or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value, and where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must evolve some substantial question of law.

Now, it is clear that the present case does not fall under the first paragraph because the actual subject of the suit is only Rs. 3,000 odd. Nor does it fall under sub-sec. (c) of sec. 109, which is as follows:—

(c) from any decree or order, when the case, as hereinafter provided, is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, because it has not been certified. It is, therefore, if at all, under the second paragraph of sec. 110. The learned Judges of the High Court have held that it does not so fall upon the ground that here what is affected directly or indirectly is not property. The Appellant argued that it must be property because the right which the petition has to make good was the claim of right which, in the nomenclature of English law, is called a chose in action, and because the transference of such rights is dealt with in the Transfer of Property Act.

Their Lordships are not inclined to attempt any precise definition of the word "property." The Civil Procedure Code has not done so, and any definition might not be found in the future precisely to fit the circumstances which the kaleidoscope of actual experience may produce. But they think that the present is not a case where the issue of this suit can be said directly or indirectly to involve other property. Let the situation be considered. If this appeal were allowed and were successful, what would be the position? The Petitioner would indeed get rid of his present liability to pay Rs. 8,000, but that is the subject-matter of the suit and is not of the value of Rs. 10,000. What, then? The first thing that he would have to do would be to get rid of the judgment of the 28th July 1922, staying his suit. Against that judgment he did not appeal, and he feels that so much that he has appended to the present petition a further prayer to be allowed to appeal against that order. He would have to be successful in that appeal and then also he would have to succeed on the merits of his suit, and not till then would he be in possession of anything tangible in the way of money.

Their Lordships think that this is not really consequential on the present decree and too remote to be entitled to the description of being property indirectly involved in the issue of this suit. It must always be kept in view that no real mischief can arise from not allowing a very wide construction of the section, because such cases, if worthy of being tried by a higher tribunal, can always be dealt with under sub-sec. (c) of sec. 109.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to refuse the prayer of the Petitioner with costs.

STATE FOR INDIA IN

10, February. COUNCIL, Respondent.

Judgment,

12, March

Public documents, entries in, admissibility of—Exception to rule of hearsay evidence—Reasons therefor—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 74.

For a series of years since 1852 Plaintiff's family had been shown in the Revenue Records as belonging to a caste of Mohals, which, if true, would make the Plaintiff a Rajput and so a member of an agricultural tribe. The Appellate Court in India discounted these entries on the ground that "there was no proof that whoever first caused this entry to be made had any title to the use of the term Mohal."

Held—That the reason given was not sufficient to disregard entries in public records made in accordance with the requirements of the law, in a pedigree case.

Statements in public documents are receivable to prove the facts stated on the general grounds that they were made by the authorised agents of the public in the course of official duty and respecting facts which were of public interest or required to be recorded for the benefit of the community. The reason for this exception made to the rule of hearsay evidence is that in nearly all cases, after a lapse of years, it would be impossible to give evidence that the statements contained in such documents were in fact true.

This was an appeal (No. 2 of 1924) by special leave from a decree, dated the 25th October 1920, of the High Court at Lahore, which reversed a decree, dated the 24th June 1915, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana.

The Appellant in 1912 purchased certain lands at Ramgarh and applied to have his name brought on to the register. An enquiry was held by the settlement officer who rejected the application on the ground that the applicant was not a member of an agricultural tribe and that the alienation was of a type which the legislature intended to prevent by the provisions of the Land Alienation Act, XIII of 1900. Appeals to the Deputy Commissioner and Financial Commissioner were dismissed.

On the 3rd November 1913, the Appellant instituted this suit for a declaration that he was a Mohal Rajput by caste and that in the Revenue papers he and his ancestors since 1852 had been wrongly described as Mohal Khayyat by caste. The only issue in the trial was "Is the Plaintiff a Rajput?"

The Subordinate Judge answered the question in the affirmative and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff.

He held that one Mohal, a Rajput, became a Mahomedan in the time of the Emperor Akbar and was the founder of a clan of Rajputs which had since borne his name; that Nathu, a descendant of Mohal, was the great grandfather of the Plaintiff, and that he and his descendants had been described in the Revenue Records in the Ludhiana District as Khayyat Mohals, that Khayyat meant a tailor and signified a calling and not a caste, and that Khayyat Mohals had the same status as Mohal Rajputs. On appeal the High Court (Chevis and Scott Smith, JJ.) held that the Plaintiff's alleged descent from Mohal was not established and that there was no proof that Nathu had any real claim to be described as a Mohal. In conclusion they commented on the fact that the Plaintiff himself had failed to give evidence as to the families into which he and his relations had married.

In the event they held that the Plaintiff had not established his contention that he was a Rajput and they reversed the decision of the trial Court.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD CARSON.—The (Plaintiff) Appellant is a resident in the District of Ludhiana of the Punjab and is the owner of "culturable lands" in that District. In or about the year 1912 he bought certain other lands and applied for mutation of names. The Deputy Commissioner and, on appeal, the Financial Commissioner of the Punjab, on the 3rd May 1913, refused the application on the ground that the alienation in question was against the policy of the Punjab Alienation of Lands Act No. 13 of 1900—that Act by sec. 3 enacts as follows:—

"3.—(1) A person who desires to make a permanent alienation of his land shall be at liberty to make such alienation where—

(a) The alienor is not a member of an agricultural tribe; or

(c) The alienor is a member of an agricultural tribe and the alienee is a member of the same tribe or of a tribe in the same group.

"(2) Except in the cases provided for in sub-sec. (1), a permanent alienation of land shall not take effect as such unless and until sanction is given thereto by a Deputy Commissioner.

"(3) The Deputy Commissioner shall enquire into the circumstances of the alienation and shall have discretion to grant or refuse the sanction required by sub-sec. (2)."

The grounds of the decision both of the Deputy Commissioner and the Financial Commissioner were that the Plaintiff was described in the Revenue Records as "Khayyat Mohal," that that tribe was not one of the notified agricultural tribes of the Ludhiana District, nor was the Mohal tribe to which it corresponded. The Plaintiff alleged that although described in the Revenue Record of the land belonging to him as "Mohal Khayyat" he was nevertheless a Rajput and a member of an agricultural tribe. It was admitted that if he was a Rajput he was entitled to become the alienee of the property, as Rajputs were an agricultural tribe and were so declared in the "Punjab Gazette" of the 21st April 1904.

The Plaintiff then instituted this suit in the Court of the District Judge of Ludhiana against the Respondent and prayed for a declaratory decree to the effect that he was a Mohal Rajput and that all the entries in the Revenue papers showing his caste as "Mohal Khayyat" were incorrect. The parties went to trial on one issue only, namely, "Is the Plaintiff a Rajput?"

On the 24th June 1915, the Subordinate Judge, after hearing a number of witnesses and examining a number of documents on both sides, delivered judgment and passed a decree in favour of the Plaintiff. The Respondent appealed to the

GHULAM RASUL KHAN v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

High Court of Judicature at Lahore and, on the 25th October 1920, that Court set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit. Hence the present appeal in which, admittedly, the only question for determination is whether the Plaintiff is a Rajput.

The case made by the Plaintiff, as the Appellate Court states, was that although in the Revenue Records the Plaintiff's family has been shown since 1852 as holding land and their caste been described as Khayyat Mohal, the term Khayyat does not denote a tribe, but merely a profession, viz., tailoring, that his got (i.e., subtribe) is Mohal and that his real tribe is Rajput and that there is no other tribe except that of Rajputs which contains a got of the name of Mohal. The Revenue Records of Mauza Shahna give his pedigree back as far as his great grandfather Nathu who by a pedigree propounded by the Plaintiff was alleged to be one of the four sons of Khana who was himself descended in the 13th generation from Mohal. The Appellate Court admitted that if Nathu was proved to be descended as alleged from Khana the Plaintiff would have proved his right to be a member of the Rajput tribe. That Court, however, refused to rely upon the evidence produced as proving that the Plaintiff traced his pedigree through his great grandfather Nathu to Khana and thence to Mohal. In the view that their Lordships take of the other evidence in the case proving that the Plaintiff's got is Mohal and that thereby his tribe is Rajput their Lordships do not think it necessary to pronounce any opinion as to whether Nathu was descended from Khana. As the Court of Appeal finds

"there seems to be little doubt that Mohal is the name of a sub-division of the tribe of Rajputs, and so far as the evidence in this case shows there is no other tribe in the Punjab which has a got of the name of Mohal."

and the same Court also states—

"The conclusion at which we arrive is that, so far as is known, there are no persons in the Punjab who have any real right to be described as Mohals except Rajputs and some Jats, who rightly or wrongly claim that they are really of Rajput origin."

It is clear, therefore, that if the Appellate Court had been of opinion that the Plaintiff had a title to the use of the term Mohal that Court would have decided in favour of the Appellant. Now the first thing to be observed is that in the course of the present litigation S. Bachan Singh, the Respondent's pleader, stated on oath that it was conceded "that Plaintiff is Mohal got of Khayyat tribe" (see statement of 27th July 1914).

The Appellate Court has found that the mere fact that various members of the family have worked at tailoring cannot be regarded as any proof that the Plaintiff is not a Rajput, for, as stated in Ibbetson's Census Report, p. 333, which has been quoted by the learned Subordinate Judge, men of all castes follow the trade; or as the Subordinate Judge has stated, Khayyats do not make a tribal clan by themselves. It is proved beyond all doubt and so found by the Appellate Court that in the Revenue Records the Plaintiff's family has been shown since 1852 as holding land, their caste being described as Khayyat Mohal—and there are in evidence extracts from the settlement records of this District for 1853 in which Ilahia and Gahia granduncle and grandfather of the Plaintiff are put down as owners of 25 ghumaons of land in the village of Shahna, their quaum being mentioned as Khayyat (Mahommadan) and got as Mohal. Similar entries are to be found in relation to the settlement of 1882. It is admitted by the Appellate Court that if these records truly described the Plaintiff's family as

Mohals it would prove the Plaintiff's right in this action, but they attempt to dispose of this evidence by saying "there is no proof that whoever first caused this entry to be made had any real title to the use of the term Mohal." That is the only link apparently which the Appellate Court has found to be absent from the evidence necessary to prove the Plaintiff's case.

Their Lordships cannot share the view of the Appellate Court that evidence of this character, taken from public records for a series of years since 1852 and recorded in accordance with the requirements of the law, can in a pedigree case be disregarded for the reason stated by the Appellate Court. No evidence is given and no suggestion is made that such entries were false or that there was any existing reason why deliberately false entries should have been made. In such a case as the present, statements in public documents are receivable to prove the facts stated on the general grounds that they were made by the authorised agents of the public in the course of official duty and respecting facts which were of public interest or required to be recorded for the benefit of the community (Taylor, Law of Evidence, 10th Ed., sec. 1591). In many cases, indeed, in nearly all cases, after a lapse of years, it would be impossible to give evidence that the statements contained in such documents were in fact true, and it is for this reason that such an exception is made to the rule of hearsay evidence. Their Lordships being of opinion that the Plaintiff has proved that he is entitled to the description of Mohal, it follows from the facts found by the Appellate Court, and already referred to, that the Plaintiff is a Rajput and is entitled to the relief claimed in this action. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs here and in the Court below and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored.

BALDEODAS LOHRA v. SHUBCHUNDAS GOENKA.

Per BUCKLAND, J.—An order to be a “judgment” within cl. 15 must be one affecting the merits of the dispute between the parties deciding some right or liability. An order setting aside an attachment consequential on the setting aside of the decree under which the attachment was made, though it affects some right between the parties, does not make the order appealable.

What is “due and reasonable diligence” within the meaning of Or. 5, r. 17, C. P. C., depends on the facts of each particular case. Generally if a process-server goes to a place on a day and hour when he may expect to find the Defendant there and does all that is required under the section, if he cannot find the Defendant (and could not find him whatever further steps he took by reason of his absence), then it is not necessary for him to repeat his attempts to make personal service.

COHEN v. NURSINGDAS ADDY (3), RAJENDRA NATH v. SYED JAN MEAH (4) and SITARAM v. KALANDI (5) referred to.

This was an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Page, dated the 22nd July 1924, passed in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Sirkar for the Appellant.

Mr. A. K. Roy for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff against an order made by my learned brother Mr. Justice Page on the 22nd of July 1924.

(4) 2 O. W. N. 574 (1898).

(5) 17 C.J.W. N. 999 (1911).

The facts which it is necessary for me to state are as follows :—

The Plaintiff filed the plaint on the 28th of February 1924, and summary proceedings were taken under Or. 37 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the 15th of April 1924, the Plaintiff obtained a decree, which was made ex parte. The Plaintiff, having obtained his decree, attached certain premises in Calcutta. On the 24th of June, notice of an application was issued on behalf of the Defendants for an order that the ex parte decree of the 15th of April 1924 and the attachment effected in execution thereof on the interests of the Defendants in the premises therein mentioned should be set aside and that the Defendants should have unconditional leave to defend the suit.

The learned Judge heard the application and on the 22nd of July 1924 made an order that the decree and all proceedings in execution thereof be set aside and that the attachment issued in execution of the said decree be withdrawn. It is against that order that the Plaintiff has appealed.

The learned Advocate, who appeared for the Defendants, took a preliminary point that no appeal lies on the ground that the order, which the learned Judge made on the 22nd of July 1924, was not a “judgment” within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The main question before the learned Judge was whether the summons had been duly and properly served.

The learned Judge heard evidence in respect of this matter and delivered a judgment in which he dealt with the various points, which had been raised, at considerable length.

At first sight it may seem unreasonable to suggest that this is not a “judgment.”

But the decisions of this Court go to show that the word “judgment” in cl.

BALDEODAS LOHEA v. SHUBCHURN DAS GOENKA.

15 of the Letters Patent does not include every order which a learned Judge makes or every decision given by a learned Judge, even though it may be accompanied by a statement of the reasons which actuated the learned Judge in arriving at his decision.

The decisions of this Court upon this point are numerous. Many of them have been based upon the definition which was given by the learned Chief Justice Sir Richard Couch in the case of The Justice of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1), and, some of them, in my opinion, are difficult to reconcile with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in that case.

On previous occasions I have expressed the opinion that, whenever this point arises, it is for the Court to decide whether the particular order in question is a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 having regard to the particular facts of the case and to the nature of the order. If the learned Judge had refused the Defendants' application to set aside the ex parte decree, it is not disputed that the Defendants would have had a right of appeal.

The reason for that is, that there would have been a final decision as to the merits of the questions between the parties in the suit, and the liability of the Defendants would have been finally established, so far as that Court was concerned.

That view of the matter is recognised in the Civil Procedure Code, because Or. 43, r. 1 provides that "An appeal shall lie from the following orders under the provisions of sec. 104, namely,"
(d) an order under r. 13 of Or. 9 rejecting an "application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte."

Though there is a right of appeal against an order rejecting an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte, it does not follow that there is a right of appeal when the learned Judge, instead of rejecting the application, accedes to it and sets aside the ex parte decree.

As far as I am aware, this is the first case in which it has been alleged that there is a right of appeal in such a case as this : and, no case has been brought to our attention in which the exact point has been decided.

There must have been many cases, in which an ex parte decree has been set aside by a learned Judge sitting on the Original Side, and it is significant that, as far as I am aware, there has been no appeal to this Court from such an order.

I have come to the conclusion that there is no right of appeal ; and, I base my judgment upon the principle laid down in the case of The Justice of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (1) and upon the principle which I think underlies the decision in Maharaj Kishore Khanna v. Kiranshoshi Dassi (2).

The result of the learned Judge's order is, that the merits of the questions between the parties in the suit have not been decided. On the contrary the result is that the suit has been restored and the matters in dispute and the question whether the Defendants are liable for the amount claimed have yet to be decided.

The learned Advocate, who appeared for the Plaintiff-Appellant, submitted that the order in this case is not an order merely setting aside the ex parte decree, and he drew attention to the fact that it directed that all proceedings in execution should be set aside, and the attachment should be withdrawn : and, he argued that inasmuch as the order included that provision, it was an appealable order.

That submission was at one period of the argument attractive to my mind, but on further consideration I am of opinion that it is not sufficient to justify the Court in holding that this order is appealable.

The proceedings in execution were consequential upon the decree, and if an order, which merely sets aside an ex parte decree, is not appealable, it seems to me impossible to hold that the decree is appealable simply because the Plaintiff had the time and opportunity to attach property in execution of the decree, before the appeal was filed.

It was further argued that the learned Judge in this case had not exercised the jurisdiction vested in him by Or. 9, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the application was in reality an application for a review of the judgment by which he made the ex parte decree on the 15th of April 1924.

I am unable to accept that argument; I think there is no doubt that the application was made by the Defendants under Or. 9, r. 13, and the learned Judge purported to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by that rule. The Court might find itself in difficulties in future cases if we were to accede to the learned Advocate's argument in that respect.

The conclusion, therefore, at which I have arrived is that no appeal lies. That is sufficient to dispose of the appeal and in my opinion it must be dismissed.

The appeal, however, was heard upon its merits; and the learned Advocate invited us to express our opinion upon the merits.

The learned Judge dealt with the matter under the second part of Or. 5, r. 17. That rule provides:—"Where the Defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the Defendant and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the Defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain"

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that one Madanlal was an authorised agent of the Defendants to take charge of legal proceedings. I am not sure whether he meant by that finding to hold that Madanlal was an agent of the Defendants empowered to accept service of the summons in this suit. If the learned Judge was of the opinion that Madanlal was an agent empowered to accept the summons on behalf of the Defendants it seems to me that there was evidence which went to show that the summons was tendered to Madanlal and that he refused to accept it, and it might be argued with considerable force that the first part of r. 17 applied to this case. But in the absence of an express finding upon that point, in my judgment, it would not be safe for this Court to rely upon it.

A further point was raised in the course of the argument, namely, that the application of the 24th of June 1924 was out of time: and, reliance was placed upon sec. 164 of the Limitation Act, which provides that for an application by a Defendant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte the period of limitation is 30 days, to run from the date of the decree or where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant has knowledge of the decree.

BALDEODAS LOHEA v. SHUBOHURNIDAS GOENKA.

In this case the learned Judge held that the summons was not duly served and there is no express finding when the Defendants had knowledge of the decree. There are, however, findings, which go near to a conclusion that the Defendants must have known of the decree on or about the date on which it was passed: and if it were open to us to decide this appeal upon the merits, I should have felt a strong inclination to have some further evidence or some further enquiry upon that point inasmuch as the application to set aside the decree was not made until the 24th of June 1924 though the decree was made on the 15th April 1924.

Finally it was argued by the learned Advocate that the learned Judge's conclusion, that those who were acting on behalf of the Plaintiff in effecting service of the summons, had not used all reasonable and due diligence to find the Defendants was wrong. It was argued that the learned Judge based his conclusion upon a finding that the serving peon, after discovering that the Defendants, at the time when he attended at 12, Banstolla Gully, were not in the house, admittedly made no enquiries whatsoever of anybody as to their whereabouts.

That finding of the learned Judge was strenuously challenged: and, it seems to me on the evidence that there is considerable force in the argument which was presented to us in that respect.

I do not mean to detract in any way from the principle involved in the learned Judge's judgment. I agree that it is necessary for the Court to be satisfied on such an application as this that the provisions of the second part of r. 17 of Or. 5 have been really complied with. It is necessary in each case for the Court to see whether in fact the serving officer has used all due and reasonable diligence with a view to finding the Defendant before the process of affixing the summons to the outer door or some conspicuous part of the house is resorted to.

It is not necessary, in my judgment, for me to say more as to the merits, in view of the fact that I have arrived at the conclusion that an appeal does not lie.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—It is with regret that I concur in the conclusion that this appeal must be dismissed on the ground that the order is not appealable: for, upon the findings of fact of the learned Judge, apart from my own view of the evidence generally, I would come to the opposite conclusion. It is, however, some satisfaction to know that if justice requires that a decree should be made in favour of the Plaintiff he will have a further opportunity of obtaining it.

Before considering whether or not the order appealed against is a "judgment" within cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, I desire briefly to refer to one aspect of the question which was presented by the learned Counsel for the Appellant. He submitted that the order was appealable inasmuch as it could only have been made by way of review under Or. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since as an application under Or. 9, r. 13 it obviously was barred by limitation.

I may say that, speaking for myself, I should have been willing to accede to this argument, had there been the faintest indication in the record that the learned Judge purported to make the order by way of review. We have been referred to the petition upon which the order was based and the statements which it contains setting out matters beyond what is necessary for the purpose of an application under Or. 9, r. 13. That may be and is no doubt the case, but it does not follow, particularly when the prolixity of petitions and pleadings in this Court is borne in mind, that the application was made by way of review or that the learned Judge so made the order. The Code of Civil Procedure provides that an application for review shall be made in a particular form. There is no pretence whatever that the petition in this case is in that form, but this is not a point of much cogency, as similar applications have been treated as applications for review on the Original Side of the Court. The learned Judge, however, says that the Defendant brings the application by reason of the provisions of Or. 9, r. 13 and had there been, I repeat, any indication upon the record that he was proceeding by way of review, the position might have been different. As it is, the order must be regarded as having been made exclusively under that order and rule.

The order provides in the first place that the ex parte decree shall be set aside and the suit restored, and further that certain attachment proceedings incidental thereto shall be set aside. These are two separate and distinct matters.

The order restoring the suit is not appealable under the Code of Civil Procedure. The intention of the Code would appear to be that in the circumstances to which Or. 9 is applicable—be it under r. 13 or under r. 9—where the result is that no further proceedings may take place, an appeal will lie, but where a party who has been deprived of his decree will have a further opportunity of obtaining it, if justice requires that he should do so, then no appeal lies. These principles would appear to be material in considering what is a "judgment," which has been the subject of many decisions of this Court.

The order restoring the suit does not affect the merits of the question between the parties by deciding some right or liability, for the right or liability is left open to be decided, and upon the further hearing, which necessarily follows from the order, it will be decided.

A further argument addressed to us is that the order restoring the suit is an order determining some right or liability because it also sets aside the attachment since obtained, and that, in consequence, the right of the Plaintiff to have a certain property attached and sold at and from the date of the attachment is a right which has been determined and of which he has been deprived.

This argument appears to me to be fallacious. I apprehend that the definition of a "judgment" which is from The Oriental Gas Company's case (1) and has been cited in many decisions of this Court must be applicable in its entirety to the order actually appealed against, and that you cannot apply one part of it to the order under appeal and another part of it to some other order which is or may be affected if the order appealed against is reversed. It does not affect the matter that the order setting aside the attachment is also appealed against. If anything, that lessens the force of the argument, for the latter order may be dealt with separately.

No doubt the judgment states the views of the learned Judge, but every judicial exposition of a Judge's opinion is not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. There is also no doubt ^{where} ~~the~~ ^{decision} ~~is~~ ^{is} ~~that~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~es~~ ^{is} ~~in~~ ^{is} ~~qu~~ ^{is} ~~decree~~ ^{is} ~~should~~ ^{is} ~~be~~ ^{is} ~~set~~ ^{is} ~~aside~~ ^{is} ~~That~~ ^{is} ~~does~~ ^{is} ~~not~~ ^{is} ~~affect~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~merits~~ ^{is} ~~of~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~dispute~~ ^{is} ~~between~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~parties~~ ^{is} ~~,~~ ^{is} ~~still~~ ^{is} ~~less~~ ^{is} ~~,~~ ^{is} ~~apart~~ ^{is} ~~from~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~attachment~~ ^{is} ~~,~~ ^{is} ~~does~~ ^{is} ~~it~~ ^{is} ~~decide~~ ^{is} ~~any~~ ^{is} ~~right~~ ^{is} ~~or~~ ^{is} ~~liability~~ ^{is} ~~.~~ ^{is} ~~As~~ ^{is} ~~regards~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~proceedings~~ ^{is} ~~for~~ ^{is} ~~attachment~~ ^{is} ~~or~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~right~~ ^{is} ~~to~~ ^{is} have the attachment set aside, independently of the right to have the suit restored, there has been no adjudication and it is impossible to say that the decision embodied in the judgment of the learned Judge affects the merits of any question upon which the attachment or the right to attach depends, or that any such adjudication determines any right of the Plaintiff or liability of the Defendant. The order setting aside the attachment is, in my opinion, dependent upon the order restoring the suit and consequential thereupon, and because it is affected as a consequence of the order restoring the suit it is not open to the Appellant to contend that therefore the order restoring the suit, which is otherwise not appealable, becomes appealable. In my opinion, the order which we are asked to set aside is not appealable and the appeal will have to be dismissed upon that ground.

As regards the merits, I do not propose to examine the facts and circumstances in the manner which it would have been necessary to do were we allowing the appeal on that ground, but I have already generally stated my conclusion. It does, however, appear upon a perusal of the judgment that the learned Judge has not considered the effect of the presence of Madanlal as, to use his words, "the authorized agent of the Defendants to take charge of legal proceedings," with reference to Or. 5, r. 17. The learned Judge clearly accepted the evidence adduced on behalf of the Plaintiff in preference to that adduced on behalf of the Defendant, and on a scrutiny of the evidence he set aside, require no great effort to hold that Madanlal, whether or not the learned Judge so meant by the words which I have quoted, was "an agent empowered to accept service of summons on behalf of the Defendant." I need not dwell upon this aspect of the matter or the effect of such a conclusion in relation to the other findings of the learned Judge or the evidence generally, for the learned Judge has not considered it and moreover it is unnecessary in view of the order to be made on the appeal.

The learned Judge has on several occasions used the expression "substituted service" which indicates some slight degree of misapprehension in his mind. No doubt if the circumstances are such that eventually the writ is affixed on the outer door of the house there is a substitution in the sense that the document is not left in the hands of the person on whom service should be effected, if possible, but that is not "substituted service" as recognized by the Code of Civil Procedure. "Substituted service" is provided for by Or. 5, r. 20, but, as there is no question of the service being substituted service in this case, I need not refer to it further, beyond mentioning that before service may be so effected the Court has to be satisfied with regard to certain matters which do not arise where service is effected in the manner provided by Or. 5, r. 17.

Before concluding I desire to comment on certain general observations made by the learned Judge in the course of his judgment, as briefly as I may without referring to the evidence in detail. Or. 5, r. 17 provides that "where the serving officer after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the Defendant he shall do certain things for the purpose of effecting service. The words "all due and reasonable diligence" are general, as necessarily they must be, for they are applicable to every case where service has to be effected.

In Cohen v. Nursingdas Addy (3), Petheram, C. J., sitting singly on the Original Side of the Court made certain observentions with regard to this. He said: "It is true that you would go to a man's house and not find him, but that that is not attempting to find him. You should go to his house, make enquiries and if necessary follow him. You should make enquiries to find out when he is likely to be at home and go to the house at a time when he can be found." These observations have been quoted by the learned Judge in the order under appeal. In Rajendra Nath Sanyal v. Syed Jan Meah (4), Jenkins, J., delivered a judgment as to what is required to be proved as to service in undefended cases, and said: "For the purpose of establishing that the Defendant cannot be found, it must be shewn that proper efforts to find him were made, as for instance, that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect he would be found"—that is so far as I need quote, the remainder refers to other matters to be proved.

The words in these two judgments are in strong contrast, the earlier appears to prescribe a detailed procedure by way of a general rule as to what is "due and reasonable diligence," while the latter merely gives an instance.

It has been said more than once that each case must depend on its own circumstances, a proposition with which I fully agree, which makes it impossible by reference to details to say what is necessary by way of "reasonable and due diligence." What is due diligence in one case may not even be diligence in another case; and the words "due" and "reasonable" would be inapplicable to diligence which took the process-server repeatedly to the Defendant's residence at an hour when he might be expected to be at his business office. What further attempts should be made to find the Defendant elsewhere, assuming he has not been found at the place where he may be expected to be at a particular hour, must in a large measure depend upon the information available to the process-server. If in fact the Defendant is absent from the locality it cannot be said to be necessary for the purpose of showing that he was reasonably and duly diligent for the process-server to go over and over again. This point was dealt with by Mookerjee and Carnduff, J.J., in Sitaram Sivami v. Kalandi Patra (5). In that case the serving peon when he went to the house of the Defendant was informed that the latter had gone to Vizagapatam. He thereupon affixed a copy of the notice on the outer door of the house and it appears that the Defendant did not return from Vizagapatam till three months later. The learned Judges said: "It was consequently impossible for the peon to retain the summons in his custody till the return of the Defendant, and as the Defendant had left the jurisdiction of the Court, it was not possible for the peon to effect service upon him personally outside the jurisdiction." If that is the proper course for the peon to pursue in such circumstances, does it follow that diligence, which would have been such as is required by the section if the process-server had known that the Defendant was absent, is no longer diligence if it so happens that he is not told that the Defendant is absent and that subsequently transpires, when the effectiveness of the service is in question, to have been the fact? In my opinion, provided the process-server goes to a place on a day and hour when he may expect to find the Defendant there and does all that is required under the section, if he cannot find the Defendant and he could not find him whatever further steps he took by reason of his absence, then the position is such as we find it in this case, and I cannot perceive that it is necessary for the process-server to repeat his attempts to effect personal service.

The learned Judge has used the word "perfunctory" but I find it quite impossible to take the view that what took place on the occasion when the summons eventually was affixed upon the outer door of the house and subsequently removed by Madanlal was perfunctory.

The practice of the Court as to proof of service and matters to be proved has obtained, possibly with modifications, for very many years and I have been led to make these observations lest by passing over the learned Judge's observations in silence I might be deemed to endorse his interpretation of the effect of the section. Where the fact of service is contested it will be a matter for detailed consideration as to how service purports to have been effected, and in each case it will be necessary to show that the process-server was reasonably and duly diligent in his attempts to effect personal service, due regard being had to the particular circumstances.

For reasons already given I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

No. 88 of 1925.

PEARSON J.

23, June.

In the matter of

GOPAL DASS AURORA.

Insolvent not producing books before the Official Assignee on the ground that they are not in his possession—Refusal by the Registrar in insolvency to pass protection order—When does the Court interfere with such discretion of the Registrar.

Where the books of a joint family business were in possession of a Receiver appointed in a partition suit between the members, one of whom had been adjudicated an insolvent, and the Registrar in insolvency refused to pass protection order in favour of the insolvent on the ground that the insolvent had not yet produced the books before the Official Assignee:

Held—That in spite of sec. 36 of the Insolvency Act, which may be availed of by the Official Assignee or a creditor for the production of the books, the Court would not interfere with the discretion of the Registrar unless it was convinced that the insolvent had taken all possible steps for the production of the books before the Official Assignee.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee for the Insolvent.

No one for the other side.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

PEARSON, J.—This is an appeal against an order made by the Registrar in insolvency, dated the 5th June 1925, by which he refused to pass a protection order in favour of the insolvent. He has set out the grounds on which he relies in his order, and the broad ground upon which his action has been taken is that the insolvent is a trader, carried on a joint family business of which family he was the karta, and that the books have not yet been produced before the Official Assignee. It appears that at the time the adjudication order was applied for, the Registrar in insolvency refused the application on the same ground. The order, however, was made by this Court on the 23rd April, and the schedule was filed. It appears from the order of the Registrar that the insolvent filed a list of the books at the time of his application for adjudication. It appears that they are in the possession of two Receivers who were appointed in a partition suit between the insolvent and the infant members of his family. It was instituted in December last year. An order of this Court has been made directing the Receivers to deal with the insolvent's share in the property. The list of books filed by the insolvent was signed by the Receivers and he asked that he might be exempted from producing the books stating that they would be produced by the Receivers. That statement has not been borne out by what has subsequently happened, and at the time of application for protection order before the Registrar it was stated by the Attorney of the insolvent that he intended to apply to the Court for an order on the Receivers to deliver the books to the Official Assignee.

The main ground argued in the present application before me is that it is not possible for the insolvent himself to take any further steps than he has done to obtain the production of these books because not only are they in the possession of the Receivers but the books themselves are not the books of the insolvent's own business but of the joint family business, of which he is one of the coparceners. It is urged that the Official Assignee himself could apply to this Court under the provisions of sec. 36 for an order that the books should be made over by the Receivers, or if not the official Assignee, then a creditor might make the application. It is perfectly true that that procedure is open in this case. At the same time, prima facie, it is for the insolvent to produce his books, and before interfering with the discretion that has been exercised by the Registrar in this case I should require to be convinced that the insolvent had himself taken all steps that were in his power to effect the production of the books before the Official Assignee. Consequently I think I ought not to interfere with the order that has been made at present. I find it hard to believe that if the insolvent had taken proper steps even by approaching the Receivers unofficially or asking the Official Assignee for a letter on his behalf or by writing a letter of his own to the Receivers stating what the facts were, the Receivers as officers of this Court would have refused to assist the Official Assignee who is also an officer of this Court, by producing the books in his office. It may be that the terms of the order under which they are in possession of the books might technically prevent them from parting with the actual possession. If so, that is a matter which can easily be remedied by an application made to this Court. But so far as the actual production goes, I can see no reason to think that if proper steps had been taken they might not have been by now effective.

With these remarks I dismiss the application. It will, of course, be open to the insolvent to renew his application for protection order on obtaining the books to be produced to the satisfaction of the Official Assignee.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 572 OF 1925.

GRAVES, J.
B. B. GHOSE, J.L. R. COUNSELL, Petitioner,

v.

25, JuneSM. SUKUMARI DEBI,
Opposite Party.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920)—Standardisation of rent—Lease including property outside Calcutta—Jurisdiction of Rent Controller, where intention of parties was not really to create tenancy in respect of such property.

Where the lease creating the tenancy comprised property in Calcutta as also some to which the Calcutta Rent Act could not apply and the Rent Controller fixed a standard rent for the Calcutta property :

Held—That the real test to be applied was whether there was any genuine intention on the part of the lessor that the tenant should be put in possession of the property to which the Calcutta Rent Act could not apply; and it being evident in the circumstances of the case that there was really no such intention but that such property was put into the lease as an attempt to evade the provisions of the Rent Act, the Rent Controller had jurisdiction to fix a standard rent in respect of the Calcutta property.

This was a Rule granted on the 15th May 1925, against an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal (Mr. S. C. Banerji), dated the 4th April 1925.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Hiralal Ganguly for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Chakravarty, Sir P. C. Mitter and Babu Hiralal Chakravarty for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GRAVES, J.—This Rule was obtained at the instance of the Petitioner L. R. Counsell against an order of the President of the Tribunal, dated the 4th April 1925, refusing to fix a standard rent in respect of the premises referred to in the petition on the ground that they were outside the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act.

The facts are these : On the 30th November 1922, a lease was entered into between Sukumari Debi of the one part and Lionel Ross Counsell, the Petitioner, of the other part. By the lease the upper flat of No. 6, Rowdon Street and the out-offices thereof together with a piece and parcel of land for "pleasure garden" situate at Mudi Shahnagore within the jurisdiction of the Tollygunge Municipality were demised to the Petitioner for a term of five years from the 1st December 1922 to the 30th November 1927 at a clear monthly rent of Rs. 450. The other provisions of the lease are not material for the purposes of this application. The schedule to the lease sets out in detail the demised premises. The first item in the schedule is the flat at 6, Rowdon Street; the second item is a plot and parcel of land situate at Mudi Shahnagore within the limits of the Tollygunge Municipality lying in Division 6, Sub-Division S, being Holding No. 57, Dihi 55 grams, Police Station Tollygunge, measuring about 10 cottas, more or less, bounded on the north and west by land of Sadunandan Lala, on the east by land of Lakhi Bibi, and on the south by a common passage.

The dispute between the parties really arises with regard to the second item of land contained in the schedule. The landlord contends that there was a genuine demise not merely of the upper flat of No. 6, Rowdon Street, but also of the 10 cottas of land at Tollygunge and that consequently the Rent Controller has no jurisdiction to fix the standard rent of the premises. The Petitioner, on the other hand, contends that there was no genuine letting of the 10 cottas of land at Tollygunge and that the real tenancy is of the upper flat of the premises No. 6, Rowdon Street and that, consequently, the jurisdiction of the Rent Controller has not been ousted. The matter came before the Rent Controller in the month of August 1924 and no evidence was adduced before him on behalf of the landlord. Apparently, his legal adviser left the Court without cross-examining any of the witnesses called on behalf of the Petitioner. Some evidence, however, was called before the President of the Tribunal on behalf of the landlord. The evidence consisted of two persons employed by the husband of the Petitioner but their evidence has not been accepted by the President of the Tribunal and both the Rent Controller and the President of the Tribunal have accepted the evidence which was given on behalf of the Petitioner before us. The Rent Controller found that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist as regards the Tollygunge plot and he states that this had not been challenged, but he relies for this finding on a judgment of the Munsif in certain civil proceedings between the parties. I understand that judgment was put in evidence as an exhibit before the Rent Controller but we think that it is better that this judgment should not be relied on for the purposes of this case. The sister of the Petitioner gave evidence before the Rent Controller and she stated that the plot of land in Tollygunge could not be traced. In the result, the Rent Controller relying, I think, on the passage in the Munsif's judgment, to which I have referred, found that the letting merely extended to the upper flat of No. 6, Rowdon Street and, accordingly, he has fixed a standard rent for the premises of

Rs. 259 per month inclusive of taxes. If he had jurisdiction then no question arises so far as we are concerned with regard to the standard rent that has been fixed. The matter was taken before the President of the Tribunal at the instance of the landlord and he raises as the second issue this: "Does the tenancy of the Opposite Party include anything besides the upper flat of No. 6, Rowdon Street? Is the flat a premises within the meaning of cl. (e) of sec. 2 of the Rent Act? If not, can any standard rent be fixed for it?"

With regard to the second issue the President states that it is admitted that the lease under which the Petitioner holds the flat covers also some land in Tollygunge and he states that the case of the Petitioner was that although the land was mentioned in the lease he had never been put in possession of it. The President goes on to state that the Petitioner had sworn to that and that he accepts his testimony on this point. Then he goes on to state that the contention of the tenant, that is to say, the Petitioner was that as the lessor has not put him in possession of the plot of land it could not be said to have been let to him and he seems to have arrived at a conclusion in favour of the landlord on the ground that he finds comprised in the lease this plot of land in Tollygunge. He states that no ground was raised by the Petitioner other than that he had never been put in possession of this land. He then states that the Petitioner used the word "mythical" with reference to the land and that he also stated that he had obtained information about its location so that it could not be said that it was fictitious.

With all respect to the learned President of the Tribunal I do not think that these two reasons dispose of this case. The mere fact that we find comprised in agreement of tenancy a certain plot of land is not conclusive that there was a genuine letting of that plot or that it was the intention of the parties that that should be included in the demise and I also think that mere fact that the land itself existed is not sufficient to dispose of the case. Whether the land in fact existed or not is not a question which we can decide but I am prepared to assume for the purposes of this judgment that there is a plot of land corresponding in general particulars with that set out in the lease, but even so I do not think that this disposes of the matter. I think the real test to be applied is this, was there any genuine intention on the part of the lessor that the Petitioner should be in possession of this piece of land as part of the demise, that is to say, was it really his intention that the lease should extend as well to the land at Tollygunge as to the upper flat of No. 6, Rowdon Street. Turning to the evidence on behalf of the Petitioner which has been accepted by both the Rent Controller and the President of the Tribunal we find that again and again the Petitioner was asking both before the tenancy to be shown the land and after the tenancy to be shown the land and to be put in possession thereof and when we find that there is no attempt either to indicate the land or to put the Petitioner in possession of it, I think the conclusion is inevitable that it was not really the intention of the lessor to include this in the demise but that he merely put it into the lease as an attempt to evade the provisions of the Rent Act with regard to the upper flat of the premises No. 6, Rowdon Street.

For these reasons, therefore, I think that the judgment of the President of the Tribunal is not correct and that we ought to restore the judgment of the Rent Controller who, I think, rightly held that he had jurisdiction in the circumstances to fix a standard rent in respect of the upper flat of No. 6, Rowdon Street.

The result is that we make the Rule absolute and the Petitioner will be entitled to his costs—hearing-fee five gold mohurs.

It appears that the President of the Tribunal having decided the question of jurisdiction against the Petitioner stated that the other issues need not be considered. The matter, therefore, will go back to the President of the Tribunal in order that he may deal with the issues other than the issue No. 2 which deals with the question of jurisdiction.

RULE No. 1085 OF 1925.

CUMING, J.

Judgment,

L. R. COUNSELL,
Petitioner,

v.

SM. SUKUMARI DEBI,
Opposite Party.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 18—Point not taken before Controller, if can be tried by the President of the Tribunal—Revision, meaning of—Sec. 24, scope and effect of—Section, if authorises President to start a new case irrespective of what took place before Controller.

When before the Rent Controller no question was raised as to whether the rent was unduly low or not on the 1st November 1918, the President of the Tribunal has no jurisdiction under sec. 18 or sec. 24 of the Rent Act to express his opinion on the point, in the absence of anything to show that the Rent Controller was invited to express his opinion upon that point.

It is a wrong application of the word "revision" to say that although the decision of the Rent Controller was not sought for on a particular point it was open to any of the parties by an application for revision to the President of the Tribunal to start a new point altogether and to have his decision.

The proper reading of sec. 24 of the Act is that the President of the Tribunal is to follow the procedure laid down in revising a decision of the Controller and not that he can treat the application for revision as a suit irrespective of what was done before the Rent Controller.

The section apparently lays down that where there is a decision of the Controller on a particular question, the President in revising that decision may take further evidence and come to his own conclusion having the decision of the Controller before him.

This was a Rule granted on the 21st August 1925 against the order of the President of the Tribunal (Calcutta Improvement Trust), dated the 17th August 1925.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Babu Hira Lal Ganguli for the Petitioner.

Sir Provas Chandra Mitra and Babu Hira Lal Chuckerbutty for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—This case came before this Court once on a previous occasion from a decision of the President of the Tribunal. On that occasion the President had dismissed the application for fixing a standard rent on the ground that the demised premises did not fall within the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act. The decision of the learned President of the Tribunal was set aside by this Court and the case was sent back to him for trial of the other issues involved in the case.

The present Rule was obtained by the tenant for the revision of the judgment now pronounced by the President fixing the standard rent in revision of the standard rent fixed by the Rent Controller.

Before the Rent Controller the relevant question that was raised apparently was that the premises were let out on a higher rent than what was alleged by the tenant on the 1st of November 1918. The pleader for the landlady made an application before the Rent Controller to the effect that the hearing of the matter should be adjourned till the decision of an appeal arising out of a suit for rent brought in the Alipur Court was decided. This the Controller refused to do. Upon that the pleader appearing for the landlady did not choose to take any part in the proceedings and did not cross-examine any of the witnesses examined on behalf of the tenant who was the Petitioner before the Rent Controller. On the evidence the Rent Controller found that the premises were let out on a rent of Rs. 235 per month on the 1st of November 1918 and adding 10 per cent. to that amount he fixed Rs. 259 as the standard rent for the demised premises.

The landlady applied for revision of that order under sec. 18 of the Rent Act on various pleas. A large number of issues were framed by the President. The material finding with regard to the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 as found by the Controller was affirmed by the President of the Tribunal. The learned President then took up for his consideration what were the 5th and 6th issues before him. These had reference to the fact whether a standard rent had been previously fixed with regard to the premises between two persons, namely, Tuni Meerza and Wishart and to a previous order with regard to the fixing of standard rent of a portion of the building which is now in question which is said to have been 6/7ths of the disputed premises. The President while observing that fixing of standard rent is an order in rem did not accept the fixing of the standard rent between Tuni Meerza and Wishart as such on the ground that the order was passed on compromise between the parties. He, therefore, used the fact that the rent was standardized only as a piece of evidence in coming to his conclusion and he made the same use of the standard rent fixed for the portion of the premises. The argument which he used was that in fixing the rent for the portion (6/7ths of the demised premises) the Rent Controller took into account what he thought to be the proper standard rent of the entire premises. This finding he used for the purpose of coming to his conclusion, which is the vital question in this case, that the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st November 1918 was too low. There was another fact which he took into consideration in coming to his conclusion and it was that the premises were let out at Rs. 280 in November 1913.

The decision of the President turned upon the question involved in the 4th issue before him.

The point taken on behalf of the Petitioner before us may be shortly stated thus: Under sec. 15, sub-sec. (3), cl. (d) the Rent Controller may fix the standard rent at such amount as he deems just where the rent paid on the 1st day of November 1918 was in the opinion of the Controller unduly low and the discretion of the Controller is limited by the 1st portion of the proviso (i) where it is stated that under cl. (d) the standard rent shall not be fixed at a higher amount than the highest rent actually paid for the premises at any time since the 1st day of November 1918. As I have already stated the procedure followed by the Opposite Party before the Rent Controller was such that the Rent Controller was not called upon to exercise his judgment and to give his opinion as to whether the rent which was paid on the 1st November 1918 was unduly low or not. The Rent Controller found the rent as it was on the specified date. There was a dispute as regards the amount of rent paid at the time which he decided in favour of the allegation made by the tenant and which has been found to be correct by the President of the Tribunal. Can the landlady under such circumstances by an application for revision of the order of the Rent Controller under sec. 18 of the Rent Act start a new point and allege that the rent at that time was unduly low and ask for the opinion of the President and get a standard rent fixed on that basis by the President?

It seems to me that the contention on behalf of the Petitioner is sound. I think that under the Act the Controller should first form his opinion whether the rent on the prescribed date was unduly low under cl. (d) of sec. 15 (3) of the Rent Act, and then he is to exercise his discretion in fixing the standard rent. When he does that it is open to the President of the Tribunal to revise that order on an application made by any of the parties. It seems to me a wrong application of the word "revision" to say that although the decision of the Rent Controller was not sought for on a particular point it was open to any of the parties by an application for revision to the President of the Tribunal to start a new point altogether and to have his decision—not revising a decision of the Rent Controller but a new decision of his own—for the first time.

It is contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that sec. 24 of the Rent Act, which lays down that in revising the decision of the Rent Controller the President of the Tribunal shall follow, as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, for the regular trial of suits, implies that the President can treat the application for revision as a suit irrespective of what was done before the Rent Controller. It seems to me that that is not the proper reading of that section. Although it is difficult to understand what is really meant by that provision, it seems to be clear that the President of the Tribunal is to follow the procedure laid down in revising a decision of the Rent Controller. If there is no decision of the Rent Controller to revise there is nothing which the President of the Tribunal can revise. Apparently this section lays down that where there is a decision of the Controller on a particular question the President in revising that decision may take further evidence and come to his own conclusion having the decision of the Controller before him.

It seems to me therefore that the President of the Tribunal had no jurisdiction under sec. 18 or sec. 24 of the Rent Act to express his opinion as to whether the rent paid on the 1st of November 1918 was unduly low or not in the absence of anything to show that the Rent Controller was invited to express his opinion upon that point.

It has been further argued on behalf of the Opposite Party that assuming that the President had no jurisdiction to fix the standard rent on the basis that the rent paid on the 1st of November 1918 was unduly low he has fixed the standard rent after taking into consideration the two proceedings before the Rent Controller to which I have already referred. But the judgment of the President of the Tribunal can hardly be construed in that way. It is quite clear that he treats the decisions in both the proceedings as evidence for the purpose of coming to the conclusion that the rent paid on the 1st November 1918 was too low.

An attempt was made to support the decision of the President of the Tribunal on the ground that the standard rent fixed in the case between Tuni Meerza and Wis-hart should be considered as a decision in rem, because although there is a recital of the decision having been arrived at on consent the Rent Controller was not authorized to fix a standard rent on consent of the parties. That may be so. But it is quite clear that the Rent Controller who had decided that case treated his decision as having been arrived at on consent of parties. If that is so the President of the Tribunal was quite right in his opinion that it could not operate as a judgment in rem. Nor could the decision fixing a standard rent of a portion of the premises be so considered, as the two premises are not identical.

In my opinion, therefore, the judgment of the President of the Tribunal cannot stand and must be reversed and the decision of the Rent Controller restored.

The Rule is made absolute with costs, the hearing fee will be five gold mohurs.

CUMING, J.—I agree,

S. C. M.

Now, the point for decision to my mind appears to be whether these certificates which undoubtedly the accused gave on the 5th and 9th January 1923, that the depositor Bhaba Sundari was alive and sane when she was already dead, are certificates which came within sec. 197. Under the Government Savings Banks Act (Act V of 1873) under which the Post Office Savings Bank is conducted the Governor-General in Council may make certain statutory rules. But these rules as to payment only apply in the case of non-ment of deposits to minors or guardians, in the case of payment of deposits belonging to lunatics and in the case of payment of deposits by or on behalf of married women. Bhaba Sundari comes under none of these three classes. She was a widow and the accused was her brother by adoption. The certificate given under the rule that in the case of female depositors withdrawing by their authorised agents under r. 18 the agent must sign a certificate on the application for withdrawal to the effect "Certified that the depositor is on this day alive and sane" does not appear to be a certificate either prescribed by the Government Savings Banks Act or by statutory rules made thereunder. The rule appears to be made for the general conduct of the Post Office business. Therefore it appears to me that the certificates given by Umananda cannot be certificates such as are covered by sec. 197, I. P. C. The question whether they can come under any other section of the Code which requires sanction under sec. 195, Cr. P. C., is not at present before us. This is purely a private prosecution and not on the complaint of any of the officers of the Post Office.

In this view I agree with the finding of the Deputy Magistrate and the District Magistrate that sec. 197 does not apply. Therefore this Rule must in my opinion be discharged.

SUHWARDY, J.—I agree with the interpretation put by my learned brother on the rule or rather the note to the rule framed under the Government Savings Banks Act. I should, however, like to base my opinion on the general policy which should guide us in interfering with the order of the trial Court when discharging an accused under sec. 253, Cr. P. C. This is a private prosecution by a person who has been found by both the Courts below to have no interest in the money which was withdrawn by the accused. It has been found that the accused was the person who was entitled to this money. He is the heir to the deceased and the money would have come to him as heir. In the circumstances it is not desirable that this prosecution should proceed.

With regard to sec. 197, I have great doubt if it applies to certificates contemplated by note 2 to sec. 25 of general rules and orders framed under Government Savings Banks Act (Act V of 1873). That note says: "In the case of withdrawals made from the account of female depositors by their authorised agents under r. 18 the agent must sign the following certificate on the application for withdrawal "Certified that the depositor is on this day alive and sane." My learned brother has pointed out that this rule is not one of the rules which the Governor-General in Council is authorised to make under sec. 14 of Act V of 1873. But assuming that such a rule was framed under legal authority I am afraid that sec. 197 is not applicable to a certificate granted under such rule. The use of the word "certificate" in the rule has no doubt led to this confusion. In the note the word "certificate" might have been replaced by the word "declaration" or "statement." The certificate contemplated by sec. 197 to my mind, as at present advised, is a certificate which is required by law to be given or signed for the purpose of being used in evidence in the course of administration of justice. That section is one of the sections in the chapter headed "Of False Evidence and Offences against Public Justice." Sec. 198 which follows it makes its meaning clear. Sec. 198 runs thus: "Whoever corruptly uses or attempts to use any such certi-ificate (namely, certificate contemplated by sec. 197) as a true certificate knowing the same to be false in any material point shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence." This section indicates that the offence of issuing or signing a false certificate is one which is intimately connected with the administration of justice. The only thing which goes against the view is that it is not a section which requires any special sanction of a Court of justice or of a public officer for the initiation of the proceedings. It is, however, unnecessary to go into greater details in this matter as I think that on the other grounds this Rule ought to be discharged.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER, CENTRAL PROVINCES.]

LORD SHAW.

LORD BLANESBURGH.

SIR JOHN EDGE

MR. AMEER ALI.

1925,

Heard, 6, 9 and 10, March

Judgment,

25, May.

MIR SUBHAN ALI,

Appellant,

v.

IMAMI BEGUM and
ors., Respondents.

Inam Grant Rules, Rule No. V—Conditions specified in rules, if may be varied—Decree declaring Plaintiffs' share in property and awarding share, if res judicata in subsequent partition suit, when partition might have been refused in previous suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11.

The Inam rules lay down the conditions which are usually to accompany an Inam grant, but they contain nothing to prevent Government from altering or modifying any of the conditions in the case of any particular grant.

Where such a grant, expressly made heritable to male descendants of the grantee to the exclusion of all females, was, in a suit by certain female descendants against the certificate-holder for a share of the profits, erroneously declared to belong in part to the Plaintiffs and they were given a decree for the share of profits claimed:

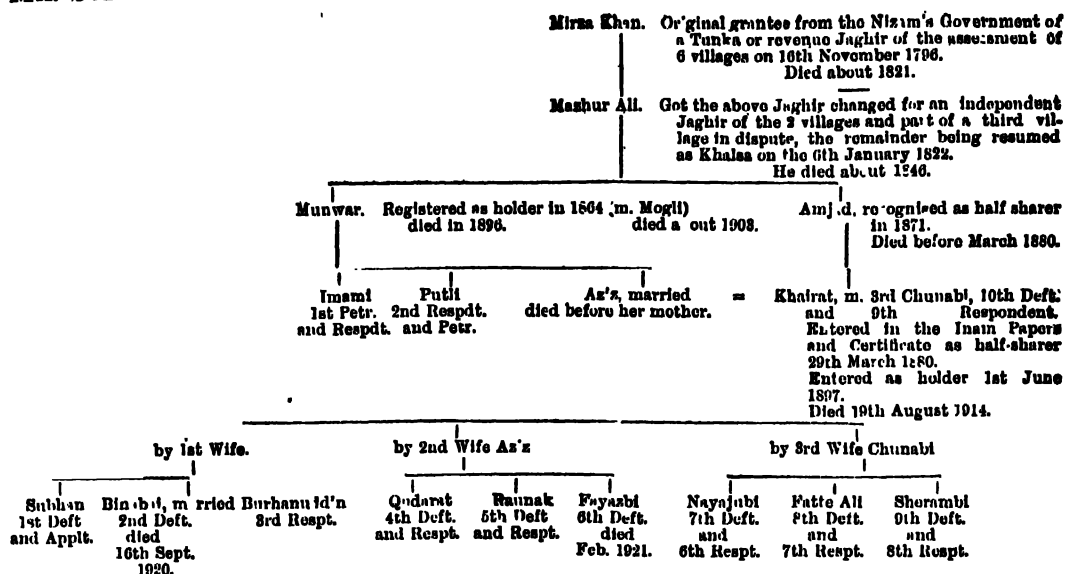

Held—That as there were grounds on which a decree for partition, if claimed, might have been refused to the Plaintiffs in that suit, and such a claim was not raised or decided, a claim by the same Plaintiffs for a partition of the property in a subsequent suit was not res judicata and should be refused, but the previous decree being binding upon the parties, the certificate-holder was to hold the property subject to the obligation to pay to the Plaintiffs the share of the profits declared by the decree.

This was a consolidated appeal and cross-appeal—the latter by special leave—from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, dated the 5th April 1921, modifying a decree of the District Court of Akola, dated the 2nd April 1918.

The suit in which the above decrees were passed was brought by Imami Begum for partition and separate possession of a Jaghir, which was granted by the Nizam to a common ancestor of the parties in 1796, and continued by the British Government in 1866 to the person who then held it and his male heirs in perpetuity. Subhan Ali, the Appellant, was the present certificate-holder and was the principal Defendant.

The following is a pedigree showing the descent of the parties from the original grantee and the intermediate holders:—

MIR SUBHAN ALI v. IMAMI BEGUM.

The original grant was a personal grant for maintenance. A fresh arrangement was made with Mazhur Ali, part of the Jaghir being resumed by the Nizam, and subsequently the new Jaghir was granted to Munwar under a new sanad. In 1871 Amjad Ali was recorded as half sharer with Munwar, and on Amjad's death his son Khairat was similarly entered on the certificate as a sharer. Munwar died in 1896 leaving him surviving a widow and three daughters but no son and after Munwar's death the Inam certificate was granted to Khairat in respect of the whole Jaghir.

Shortly after the death of Munwar Ali as the result of litigation Khairat agreed to pay half the income of the estate to Munwar Ali's widow, the mother of the present Respondents.

In 1904 the present Respondents and their mother, who died pendente lite, sued to enforce this agreement, and eventually obtained decrees for arrears of profits. The judgment of the Judicial Commissioners in this litigation contained a finding that the entry in the Inam certificate regulated the duration of the grant but not the enjoyment of it as between the heirs of the grantee and that the inheritance devolved according to the ordinary Shia law of inheritance by which the family was governed.

Khairat died in 1914, and his representatives were similarly sued for a share of profits and decrees were made against them. On the death of Khairat the revenue authorities decided that the Jaghir should be entered in the name of his eldest son Subhan Ali and the suit now under appeal was instituted against him by Munwar's daughters.

They claimed possession by partition of their share of the Inam lands and arrears of its income.

The District Judge held that the Inam Jaghir was governed by R. V of the Inam Rules, and had not been enfranchised, that although a Jaghir was an estate for life, yet its partition among co-sharers was not prohibited and that the Plaintiffs were entitled to 109/288th share and to separate possession and enjoyment thereof.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioners decided that only males took any interest in the Inam lands, but held that the decree for profits in the earlier litigation was res judicata in favour of the Plaintiffs' claim to income.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.—The decisions in the earlier litigation were erroneous in awarding the Respondents any share of profits.

The original grant was meant to be a grant only for life but the effect of the Government order was to create a perpetual entail.

Here what is claimed is not maintenance but a specific share in the grant.

The earlier decrees against Khairat for a share of profits are not binding against the Appellant. Khairat had merely a life interest and the Appellant does not claim through him.

Krishnaji v. Munwar Ali (1), Krishnaji v. Nilkanth (2), Gulabdas Jugjivandas v. Collector of Surat (3) and Ram Narayan Singh v. Ram Saran Lall (4).

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.—For the duration of the grant the beneficial interest in the Inam lands devolved according to the Shia law of inheritance and the Plaintiffs are entitled to possession of definite shares.

The word "Jaghir" has no special implication. The grant in fact became an Inam grant and must be construed according to its definite terms.

Dosibai v. Ishwardas (5).

An Inam grant is partible, and that is evidenced by the fact that in this case there were two sharers from the start.

The grant was an absolute one and the grantee could alienate the estate. It was not merely a grant for life.

Bodhrao Hunmont v. Nursing Rao (6) and Krishnarao Ganesh v. Rangrao (7).

The Inam rules cannot be incorporated into the grant. They have no statutory authority and are merely directory to Inam officers as to the manner in which grants should be dealt with.

Vinayak Waman Joshi v. Gopal Hari Joshi (8) and Adrishappa v. Gurushidappa (9).

The words "and to the male descendants" are not words of purchase.

Compare the similar words in a Babuana grant.

Pratap Singh Shiv Singh v. Agarsingji Raisinghji (10), Vasudev v. Ramkrishna (11) and Bulaji v. Dattu (12).

The decisions in the former suits operate as res judicata. There it was decided that the Plaintiffs were entitled to "share in the estate," i.e., to share in the corpus of the grant and a specific share in the property was granted to them.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh on cross-appeal and in reply.—The Plaintiffs being females can have no share in property granted to male descendants only.

Were this an ordinary Mahomedan estate it might be argued that no condition could be attached to it contrary to Mahomedan law, but no such consideration applies to a grant from the Crown.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD BLANESBURGH.—The suit out of which these appeals arise was brought by the Plaintiffs for partition and separate possession of their shares in an Inam estate or Jaghir in Berar, and for payment of their due proportions of the income for the three years immediately preceding the institution of the suit in February 1916. The estate now comprises the whole of the two villages of Barmi and Dhotra, and three fields in the village of Ganuhpur in the Murtizapur Taluq of the Akola District. The original Appellant, Mir Subhan Ali, the present certificate-holder and in sole possession of the Inam, was the principal Defendant.

The trial took place before the Additional District Judge at Akola. He, by his decree, dated the 2nd April 1918, allowed the Plaintiffs' claims in full. On appeal, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, Berar Jurisdiction, by a decree of the 5th April 1921, dismissed the suit so far as it was one for partition and separate possession of the Inam, but approved the judgment of the Court below in respect of the Plaintiffs' claim to income. Commissioners both parties are dissatisfied, and in the present appeal and cross-appeal, now consolidated, the Plaintiffs, who were cross-Appellants, ask that the decree of the Additional District Judge should be restored, while the Defendant, Mir Subhan Ali, the original Appellant, asks that the Plaintiffs' entire claim should be rejected and their suit dismissed.

The fundamental question at issue is one of construction, namely, whether the beneficial interest in the Inam granted to a common ancestor of the parties and continued by the British Government in 1866 passes under the terms of the grant then made to all the heirs of the grantees according to Shia Mahomedan law or whether that interest devolves upon male descendants only. There is, however, a further question, namely, how far the rights of the parties, whatever otherwise on construction they might have been held to be, are now regulated by a decree said to be binding upon the Defendant, Mir Subhan Ali, and made by the Judicial Commissioners in a suit brought by the Plaintiffs against, inter alios, the father and predecessor in estate of that Defendant.

The facts of the case are not free from complexity, but they have been set forth at length and with perfect accuracy in the judgment of the Additional Judicial Commissioners. Their Lordships accordingly will re-state them only so far as is necessary to explain the conclusions at which, on the whole matter, they have themselves arrived.

Lands now represented by the estate in question had, from the end of the eighteenth century, been held under sunnuds from the Government of H.H. the Nizam by a succession of holders in direct male descent in a Shia Mahomedan family to which all the parties to these proceedings belong. The Extra-Assistant Commissioner who, in 1864, inquired into the origin of the grant and the claims of the then holders reported that the grant was valid and that its enjoyment had been long and uninterrupted.

"It is not hereditary according to the terms of the sunnuds, but practically the grant has been enjoyed by four successive incumbents during the space of more than 70 years and has assumed that right in a liberal point of view. I think the grant should be confirmed and continued to the present claimant and his descendants male."

These proposals of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner were supported both by the Deputy Commissioner and by the Commissioner, and to give effect to them the Resident recommended that the estate should "be continued to the present holder and his male descendants in perpetuity."

On the 3rd December 1866, this recommendation of the Resident was sanctioned by the Government of India, and an Inam certificate was issued, stating that the grant—one for personal maintenance—was "to be continued rent free in perpetuity to present holder and his male descendants."

The "claimant" and "present holder" so referred to was one Munwar Ali, the father of the Plaintiffs. To him the Inam certificate was issued, and the fundamental question between the parties already referred to depends upon the true construction of these words in it.

And yet not quite so. For if, as has apparently been assumed in the copious stream of litigation which the grant has originated, an agnatic line of male descent is for one purpose or another thereby prescribed, then on a strict interpretation the grant has long since determined, inasmuch as Munwar Ali died in July 1896, leaving three daughters only—the Plaintiffs and another—and no son.

But, as might well be supposed, none of the parties contend for this result. Nor has it, in fact, eventuated. It had been brought to the notice of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner in the course of his inquiry that Amjad Ali, the second son of the previous holder, Muzhar Ali, and a half-brother of Munwar Ali, was in receipt of half the income of the estate by a title which Munwar Ali, the "claimant" or "holder," made no effort to displace. In the original certificate his position was ignored, possibly by inadvertence. In 1871, however, the omission was recognised and rectified, and in that year Amjad Ali's name was, by Government, entered in the certificate as sharer in the estate with Munwar Ali. The effect, it has been assumed, is that the grant must be construed as if made to Munwar Ali and Amjad Ali and their male descendants in perpetuity, or, as a more compendious statement leading in the state of his family to the same result, as if made at an earlier date to Muzhar Ali and his male descendants in perpetuity. The true meaning of these words or their equivalent, therefore, is the fundamental question in the suit.

Amjad Ali died in 1880, and his son, Khairat Ali, was, without objection, shown in his place on the certificate as a sharer along with Munwar Ali. The latter, as has already been said, died in 1896, in the life-time of Khairat Ali. Of the three daughters whom he left, two are the present Plaintiffs. The third, Aziz Begum, married Khairat Ali as his second wife. As Munwar Ali left no son, Khairat Ali was entered as the sole certificate-holder in respect of the whole estate. This was objected to by the present Plaintiffs and by their mother, Mogli Begum, Munwar Ali's widow, who survived him. They appealed to the Commissioner against the order that

MIR SUBHAN ALI v. IMAMI BEGUM.

Khairat Ali was to be sole certificate-holder. Their claim was, that while the grant according to its terms was only to endure so long as the grantee's male line survived, the estate during the subsistence of the grant was to be enjoyed beneficially by all the heirs of the grantee, including females, according to Shia Mahomedan law. The Commissioner refused to take this view of the grant, and he dismissed the ladies' appeal on the ground that women could not succeed to the Inam, which was to be continued to male descendants only. Khairat Ali died in 1914, and his eldest son by his first wife, Subhan Ali, the present Defendant, was, in due course, entered in the register as certificate-holder. His appointment as such was once more opposed, as Khairat's had been, by Imami Begum, one of the present Plaintiffs. Her opposition was again overruled. The Inam was to be continued to male descendants only.

The construction placed by the Revenue Courts upon the grant has therefore been uniform. But the Plaintiffs in the present suit contend that it is erroneous, and they rely both as a res judicata and on their merits upon decisions of the Civil Courts in which their own view of the grant has been accepted. Their Lordships may here so far anticipate as to announce that the plea of res judicata will not avail the Plaintiffs to the full extent of their claims in these proceedings. This fundamental question of construction must therefore be decided. It is convenient to proceed at once to its consideration.

Upon it their Lordships feel no doubt that the meaning attributed to the words in question by the Revenue Courts and by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioners in the present suit is correct.

As it seemed to the Judicial Commissioners, so it seems to them, impossible to hold that an order that an estate shall "be continued to the male descendants" of a certain person means that it shall be continued to the male and female descendants of that person so long as there is no failure of male descendants. It was sought in argument before the Board to treat the estate conferred as being analogous to a base fee in English law. Such analogies are rarely helpful and very frequently they are misleading. But here the suggested analogy is non-existent. A base fee is a grant in terms general, its limitation in point of duration being due only to the fact that the grantor was possessed of no estate enabling him to extend the grant, however general its terms, for any period subsequent to the extinction of his own issue. But here there is no grant at all in general terms. The only grant is to the male descendants themselves—a very limited expression—and the word "to" can have no other than its ordinary meaning attributed to it. It cannot be treated as meaning "during the existence of" or "pending the failure of," and even if the word were capable of being so extended, their Lordships would still have difficulty in seeing how, from the words, a general grant could anywhere be evolved in terms sufficiently wide to include female descendants within its scope.

The learned trial Judge found such a grant by holding that the certificate here was governed by what are known as the Berar Inam Rules, and particularly by No. V of these rules, and that the grant must within that rule be treated as having been made in favour of "direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers"—an expression which would include females. Their Lordships agree with the Additional Judicial Commissioners in thinking that the learned Additional District Judge erred in attributing to these rules an operation universal and unqualified. The rules, it is true, lay down the conditions which are usually to accompany an Inam grant, but they contain nothing to prevent Government from altering or modifying any of the conditions in the case of any particular grant. And where, as in the present case, the right of inheritance is by the certificate confined to a particular class of descendants which in its exclusion of all females from enjoyment is in terms unambiguous, there is no reason known to their Lordships why the grant in these terms should not have effect. As regards decisions upon the meaning of other grants cited in argument, their Lordships need only say that no authority was brought to their notice which leads them to qualify the effect which they attribute to the words of grant in the present case.

So far, therefore, the claim of the Plaintiffs, whether for partition or for a share of the profits of the estate, is not established. But the bearing and effect upon these claims of decrees in previous suits brought by the Plaintiffs in the Civil Court remains to be considered. These are four in number. It will, however, suffice to deal in any detail with one of them only—namely, the Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904, filed in the Court of the Civil Judge of Amraoti by the present Plaintiffs against Khairat Ali, and his three children by Aziz Begum. The claim there made was for a share of profits of the estate for 1903-4 and for

“a declaration that as heirs of Munawar and his widow, Moghli Begum, they got a half share in the Jagir, and that they are entitled to the use of fruit and fodder from the villages.”

The judgment awarded the Plaintiffs a decree for the share of the profits claimed, and declared that “the Plaintiffs have 109/144 of half-share of the Jagir villages in dispute.” This decree was affirmed in appeal and second appeal.

“The entry,” says the Additional Judicial Commissioner in his judgment on the second appeal, “regulates the duration of the grant but not the enjoyment of it as between the heirs of the grantee, and the inheritance devolves under the ordinary law in force in the family. No authorities to the contrary have been cited.”

In the later suits this view was also taken. In the second and third the Plaintiffs' share of profits for the years 1904-5 to 1909-10 were claimed and awarded against Khairat Ali: in the fourth and last suit, brought against all the children and widow of Khairat Ali after his death in 1914, the claim was for a share of the income of 1911-12, and a decree for such share was made against the Defendants to the extent of the assets of Khairat Ali in their hands.

Now it was not disputed by the Defendant before the Board that the decision in Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904 was binding as between the parties to it and their representatives in interest to the extent that the Plaintiffs are entitled during life to the there defined share of annual income, but it was contended that the Defendant, Subhan Ali, does not claim through Khairat Ali, so that the decree is not binding upon him. Their Lordships concur with the learned Additional Judicial Commissioners in rejecting this contention. The succession of the Defendant to the Inam did not involve a re-grant by Government. It was merely a continuance of the grant to him in accordance with its originally declared terms. He holds the estate burdened with the obligation of recognising the rights of the Plain-

But no further. In that suit partition was not asked for, and their Lordships prefer in these appeals to deal with the question of partition as one which was not there decided because it was not raised. There are grounds on which a decree of partition might have been refused to the Plaintiffs even by a Court which interpreted the grant as did the Additional Judicial Commissioners in that suit. In their judgment accordingly there can be no question of res judicata in the Plaintiffs' favour so far as their claim to partition is concerned, and on the view which their Lordships take of the grant that claim cannot, as has already been stated, be maintained.

Their Lordships in the circumstances can feel no surprise that Khairat Ali resisted all claims of the Plaintiffs to a share of the income of the estate and was unwilling to accept for subsequent years the principle of the decree in the suit of 1904. But it is right that that position should now, without further question, be accepted, and that the Plaintiffs should not have imposed upon them the burden of instituting successive suits to establish a claim which, as between the parties, is no longer open to discussion.

Their Lordships accordingly think that there should be added to the decree appealed from a declaration that by virtue of the decree in the Civil Suit No. 137 of 1904, each of the Plaintiffs is during her life and as against the Defendant and his successors-in-interest in the property in dispute entitled to 109/288th of half-share of the income thereof, and liberty should be reserved after each year to apply to have the amount of such income determined by further proceedings in the suit and declared in a further decree.

With that addition to the decree, inserted to spare the parties unnecessary expense, their Lordships are of opinion that the decree appealed from should be affirmed and both appeals dismissed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

There will be no order as to the costs of these appeals except that in accordance with the Order in Council of the 30th May 1924, granting to the Plaintiffs special leave to cross-appeal, the costs of the Defendant of that application must be paid by those cross-Appellants.

Mahomedan law—Marz-ul-mout, wakf executed in, operation of—Tests of death illness—The subjective test of apprehension of death—Capacity to pursue ordinary avocations and to stand up for prayers—The one year rule—Possession of senses and faculties.

T, a very old man and a Mahomedan, was attacked by paralysis of the lower limbs in February 1895; he at once became a helpless invalid, permanently confined to his bed and could not perform the ordinary offices of nature without assistance and could not even leave his bed for religious exercises. On 20th March 1895, he made a wakf of his properties. He lingered on in the same condition till his death in November 1895 from the same illness :

Held—That the wakf having been made in death illness operated only to the extent of a third of his properties.

Per WALMSLEY, J.—That the wakf having been made when T was under an immediate apprehension of death, the months of lingering before actual death did not take the case out of the doctrine.

Per MUKERJI, J.—That the crucial test as settled by the authorities was whether there was an apprehension of death in the mind of the donor as distinguished from apprehension caused in the minds of others. The possession of one's senses and mental faculties is no index of this apprehension.

There is no hard and fast rule that continuance of the illness without change for one year must necessarily take the case out of the operation of the doctrine.

Quære.—Whether inability to attend to ordinary avocations is a sine qua non to the application of the doctrine.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1922 against the decree of S. C. Banerjee, Esq., President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, Calcutta, dated the 12th of August 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitra and Babu Narain Chandra Kar for the Appellant.

Messrs. Naruddin Ahmed and A. S. M. Akram for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is directed against a decision of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal in a dispute about the apportionment of some compensation money.

Premises No. 32, Durga Road have been acquired by the Trust. The Collector's valuation has not been accepted by those who appear to be the owners, and before making the valuation the President has decided the principles on which the compensation when it is fixed will be apportioned.

The former owner was Mohammd Tayeb : he had a wife named Sarifannessa ; he died in November 1895, leaving a widow, five sons and three daughters. The claimant No. 4 is the Appellant, and she is one of the daughters. Her claim as to the share that would ordinarily be hers is resisted on the ground that Mohammad Tayeb made a wakf of the property a few months before his death. The question therefore that the President had to decide was whether the wakf was valid or not. He held that it was valid, and it is against that decision that the appeal is directed.

The first ground on which the Appellant assails the wakf is that it offends against the doctrine of Mushaa. The reason for this assertion is two-fold. First, it is said that the wife Sarifannessa was owner of a portion, and secondly, that one Azimannessa also had a share in the property covered by the wakf. Neither of these assertions can be supported. Sarifannessa's plot of land was not an undivided share, but specific land with Tayeb's land forming the boundary on one side. It may be an open question whether the husband or the wife is the owner of the portion standing in Sarifannessa's name, but for my present purpose it is enough to point out that the premises are divided into specific plots. As for Azimannessa's portion, her name appears with that of the lady who sold to Sarifannessa, and with that of a third person in Billon's Register of 1893. In 1911 she asked for the holding to be subdivided, and for permission to redeem her share of the rent. This was done without any objection. The circumstances indicate that the sub-division consisted of recognizing her possession of a specific plot, and not of carving out from an undivided whole a plot equivalent to her interest. Further if the areas are considered, it appears that there were specific plots with ascertained areas, together amounting approximately to the area of the whole. I therefore agree with the learned President's finding that the doctrine of Mushaa does not render the wakf invalid.

KARIMANISSA BIBI v. HAMEDULLA.

The second objection to the wakf is that it is really a disposition for the benefit of the grantor's family. The question is whether there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses. The income from the property is not large, and a very considerable part of it must be spent for the benefit of members of the grantor's family. There are, however, specific sums to be paid for the maintenance of worship in a mosque established by the wakif's father, and directions are also given for using the income for the benefit of the travellers and students. The terms of the disposition are such that without scrupulous honesty on the part of the mutwalli, little, if anything, is likely to be left for the student and the traveller, but there may be a little and in the ordinary course of nature there should be more. I think the instrument lies very near the border line, and my own inclination would be to hold against its validity, but in deference to the opinion expressed by Greaves, J., in another suit, an opinion which is of course not binding but is entitled to consideration, and to the view taken by my learned brother on this Bench, I have come to the conclusion that I ought to regard the wakf as valid, so far as this objection is concerned.

The third objection is based upon the difficult doctrine of Marz-ul-mout, or death-bed illness. In Sir Roland Wilson's book on Anglo-Mahommadan law this doctrine is set out as follows:— "A gift made in mortal sickness is so far regarded as a bequest that it cannot operate on more than a third of the testator's net assets unless with the consent of all the heirs, nor in favour of one heir without the consent of all the others. Explanation 1—A gift is said to have been made in mortal sickness only if it was at the time, and seemed to the donor himself highly probable that the malady would soon end fatally, and if in fact it did so end. The donor's state of mind, which is the real ground of the rule, may be, but is not necessarily, to be presumed from the gravity of the symptoms. On the other hand, no evidence of actual apprehensions of death will suffice in the absence of external indicia of danger, chief among which is inability to attend to ordinary avocations." There have been numerous decisions on the subject since those words were first written but I think that they set out the doctrine correctly.

The facts which appear to be proved in the present case are that Mohammad Tayeb, then a very old man, was attacked by paralysis of the lower limbs in February 1895; he at once became a helpless invalid, permanently confined to his bed: he could not perform the ordinary offices of nature without assistance, and, more important, he could not leave his bed for religious exercises. He continued in this state until he died in the following November. The wakfnama which we are considering was executed in March.

The fact that Mohammad Tayeb was ill or at any rate bed-ridden for nine months has given scope for the suggestion that the saving principle established for those who suffer from a malady of long continuance will make this wakf valid. Sir Roland Wilson, quoting from Baillie's Digest, has this note: "The lame, the paralytic, the consumptive and a person having a withered or a palsied hand, when the malady is of long continuance, and there is no immediate apprehension of death, may make gifts of the whole of their property," and adds "the Hedaya fixes the period of long continuance at one year, but this is not taken as a hard and fast rule." In this case it is argued that the illness lasted for nine months, and that is almost a year, and therefore under this principle Mohammad Tayeb was competent to make a gift of the whole of his property.

I do not think it is necessary to consider whether this rule is to be construed elastically or not, for the reason that, I have no doubt that in March 1895, Mohammad Tayeb was expecting to die very soon. Not only was the immediate apprehension present to his own mind, there were also external signs which those about him would naturally interpret as indicating that death was at hand. It is true that as a fact he lingered for seven or eight months, and that no fresh illness supervened, and therefore it may be said that his own fears and his relative's expectations were mistaken, and that the malady did not soon end in death. It was from that malady however that Tayeb died: he never got any better, and from February to November there was never a time when the malady became a mere disability; throughout it threatened an early end, and at the last it did prove fatal without any fresh illness supervening. I think therefore that the months of lingering before actual death do not take the case out of the doctrine. My conclusion therefore is that the wakf is valid only to the extent of one-third of the wakif's assets.

The Appellant succeeds in part, and the President is directed to apportion the compensation when determined in accordance with this view.

The Appellant will be entitled to recover her costs from the contesting Respondents in both Courts: hearing fee in this Court is fixed at three gold mohurs.

MUKERJI, J.—The only question that has been raised in this appeal is as to the validity of the wakf executed by one Mohammad Tayeb in respect of certain properties, one of which, namely, premises No. 32, Durga Road comprising an area of 1 bigha 13 cottas 7 chattaks 25 sq. ft., has been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. The validity of the wakf is questioned upon three grounds:—First, that the wakf offends against the doctrine of Mushaa as the premises in question were the joint property of Mohammad Tayeb and his wife Sarifannessa and also because one Azimannessa was a co-sharer in the holdings of which the said premises formed a part; second, that the wakf is illusory and contains directions which are vague and incapable of execution; and third, that the wakf is invalid under the law of Marz-ul-mout.

As regards the first of these grounds what appears upon the evidence is this. The premises aforesaid are comprised within revenue holding No. 318. This holding consists of two distinct plots of lands carved out of old holdings Nos. 64, 64A, 66, 66A and 67. The total area of all these holdings was more or less 2 big. 8 c. 9 ch. By a kobala, Ext. G., dated the 20th March 1889, Sarifannessa Bibi, wife of Mohammad Tayeb, purchased a plot of land 10 cottas in area, and it was recited in the document that previously her husband had acquired by several purchases 1 bigha 5 cottas 14 chattaks of land, and in the schedule to the document this land was stated as forming one of the boundaries on the east. On the 20th March 1895 Mohammad Tayeb executed a wakf-nama in respect of various properties, including the aforesaid lands which were purchased by him as well as that purchased by his wife. The plots of land being distinct, neither Mohammad Tayeb nor Sarifannessa Bibi can be said to have had an undivided share in the lands in respect of which the wakf was made. As regards Azimannessa, all that appears upon the evidence is that in Billon's Register of 1893-94 one Aziman Bibi and one Meher Bibi and two others were recorded as tenants in respect of the aforesaid holdings. Meher Bibi sold the 10 cottas of land to Sarifannessa in 1889. Azimannessa applied in 1911 for sub-division of the holdings and for redemption of the holdings to be allotted to her, and the said application was granted. The holdings allotted to her appear from the order-sheet in that case to have consisted of an area of less than 5 cottas. The total area of the lands of the above-mentioned old holdings as stated in the kobala, Ext. G., was 2 bighas 8 cottas 9 chattaks, of which according to Billon's Register the portion in which Aziman Bibi was a joint tenant with Meher Bibi and others was 1 big. 19 c. and 6½ chs. The purchases by Mohammad Tayeb and Sarifannessa did not extend to the whole of the said 1 bigha 19 c. 6½ chs. but only to 1 big. 15 c. 14 chs. as stated in the Ext. G. The evidence of Khoda Bux, witness No. 2, for the claimant No. 4, was that Aziman had 3½ cottas of land in the holdings, and this seems to be the quantity left to her after the purchases made by Mohammad Tayeb and Sarifannessa. There is nothing to show that the land of Azimannessa was not a separate plot of land such as Meher's was, and it has not been proved that she was a co-sharer in the premises covered by the wakf. The doctrine of Mushaa therefore has no application to the case.

The second ground may be disposed of in a few words. The object set out in the wakf-nama was to make arrangements and provisions for the due performance of religious services in the mosque which had been erected by the father of Mohammad Tayeb at No. 26, Collinga Bazar Street. The inalienability of the properties and the usual limitations and restrictions as to the powers of the mutwalli to deal with the wakf properties were laid down. It was provided that if any land or building included in the wakf estate were acquired by the Government for public purposes, the compensation money would be utilised for purchasing some other property for the purposes of the wakf. In para. 6 directions were given for the yearly repair of the mosque, and the daily lighting thereof, and for arranging for the five prayers that are to be held daily, and also the Jumma prayer, the Azan and Namaz, and the Id and Bakhr-Id prayers, and for the employment of Khatib and Moazzan, the distribution of Iftari during Ramzan, the reading of Tarabi prayer by a Hafez, and for providing for such accessories as are ordinarily necessary for the purpose. The remuneration of the Hafez was fixed at Rs. 25 a year, the Khatib was to get Rs. 2 per month and his food, and the Moazzan Re. 1 a month and his food. Directions were given for the maintenance of students, and the entertainment of the travellers and mendicants. Provision was also made for the accommodation and maintenance of a sister of the wakif and her daughter, and also of the daughter of the wakif in certain circumstances. The five sons were appointed mutwallis, each for a year, and it was directed that the mutwalli in office will get his food and a salary of Rs. 5 and shall be bound to provide for the food of the four future mutwallis. The other directions need not be referred to. The income of the property was small, being about Rs. 100 or Rs. 125; and though a substantial part of it, under the directions contained in the wakfnama, would go to the relations of the wakif, it is manifest that the primary object of the endowment was to support a mosque, to make arrangement for the performance of religious services therein, to carry on works of charity connected therewith, to feed travellers and to educate poor students. The provisions made for the relations can hardly be said to be such from which it may be deduced that the main purpose of the settlement was the aggrandisement of a private family. The directions given to the future mutwallis left a good deal of discretion in them as to how the work was to be carried on, but it was stated that they were to keep to the standard followed by the wakif. The directions therefore cannot be said to have been vague or unascertainable, and the wakf must be taken to have been a valid one. It is perhaps true that the wakf has been administered by the mutwallis in a manner not altogether satisfactory and some of them appear to have dealt with the properties as if they were proprietors. Malfeasance or misfeasance on the part of the mutwallis, however, cannot invalidate a wakf which at its creation was a valid one.

The third ground raises one of the difficult questions which the Mohamadan law abounds in, namely, as to whether the wakf was invalid under the law of Marz-ul-mout. The law of Marz-ul-mout is not the same amongst all the schools; and moreover the reason of the rule as well as its essentials have been differently enunciated by different jurists. Lawyers who may be said to belong to the orthodox school expound the doctrine on the basis of certain principles, modern jurists seek to rest the law upon what they consider to be more in consonance with rational ideas, and judicial decisions have served to break the rigidity of it in no small measure, by interpreting it in a broad and liberal spirit.

A reference to the translations of some of the texts relating to this branch of the law, which are to be found in books of undoubted authority or have been relied upon in judicial decisions may not be unprofitable. In some cases the translations do not agree, and in others it is not easy to appreciate the exact meaning, the passages being darkened by parenthesis or obscured by the translator's gloss. In the case of Labbi Bibi v. Bibbun Bibi (1), the following texts were referred to:—

Futawa-i-Alumgiri, Vol. 4, Ch. XI.—“ Now they speak of the definitions of ‘fatal disease.’ What has been adopted in futwas is that a disease from which death may probably result is a fatal disease, irrespective of whether the patient keeps to his bed or not ” (page 552). “ He who is affected with paralysis, partial or total, and he who has lost the use of any limb, or is affected with phthisis, and the disease is prolonged, and there is no fear of death, may make a gift of his whole property ” (page 562).

Futawa-i-Fusul-Amadi.—“ They have explained prolongation to mean one year, so that if the disposition has been made after one year from the attack of the malady it is like a disposition made in the enjoyment of health" (page 414, M. S.).

Futawa-i-Alumgiri, Vol. I, Book of Divorce, page 640.—"Our learned Doctors have explained the duration of sickness to be of one year, so that if the same sickness lasts for one year the acts of the sick person after one year would have the same effect as if he had done them in a state of health." There is no reason to suppose that the law of Marz-ul-mout is not the same in regard to Talaq as it is in the case of wakf.

Futawa-i-Shami, Vol. II, page 521.—"If the sickness becomes old, that is to say, if one year elapses from its commencement, and no increase or decrease occurs in it, the sick person shall be deemed a healthy person; but if the sickness increases, whether before or after one year, and during the continuance of such increase the person dies of the same, he shall be deemed a sick person." Other futwas also to the same effect appear to have been produced before the Court. Another translation of the passage last quoted will be found in the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Bukhsh (2) and runs in these words:—"If the disease becomes old in this way, that it extends beyond a year, and no increase occurs within that (period), then he (the sick person) is (to be deemed) in health, but if he dies in a state of increase whether the increase takes place before the year's prolongation of it, he is (to be deemed to be) sick."

A passage from Jamai-ool-Rumooz was also produced before the Court which, while admitting that some authorities doubt the prescription of the period of one year, gave, as supported by the better opinion, the rule that "gifts by paralytics are valid if the sickness lasts for a long time, so that a year elapses from the time when it first commenced."

Mr. Ameer Ali in his book on Mahomedan law, Vol. 1, page 56, quotes with approval the observations of Radd-ul-Muhhtar and says:—"It is not merely the fact that the disease is ordinarily fatal that requires consideration but the effect it is likely to have on the mind of the sufferer, which is the chief determining element. A malady of such a nature is called Marz-ul-mout or the illness of death. But where a person has suffered from an illness for a long time so that it has become, as it were, 'a part of his constitution,' or where the progress of the disease is so imperceptible as to cause no apprehension to him, it does not come within the definition of Marz-ul-mout."

At page 57 is quoted the following passage from the Durr-ul-Mukhtar: "The gift of a person suffering from paralysis, palsy and phthisis is invalid as to the whole when the disease has lasted over a year, and there is no fear of death from it, but if it has not extended for a year and there is no fear of death (on his part) the gift will take effect in respect of a third." The learned author states that the reason is there said to be that if a person suffers from a malady which is ordinarily mortal, for over a year, it ceases to have any appreciable influence on his mind as it has become a part of his nature.

At page 58, Futawa Kosi Khan is quoted in support of the proposition that "one struck with paralysis, phthisis or palsy is accounted sick whilst the disease is on the increase; but when the illness has lasted a long time and is not becoming worse, the sufferer is as one in health." Then the following passage of the text is quoted: "Some lawyers have laid down that if a disease, however mortal, lasts for over a year, it should not be regarded as such, because the man becomes so accustomed to it as to lose all apprehension as to his own condition."

At page 59 Durr-ul-Mukhtar is quoted where it says on the authority of the Balazia, that "when a person is in imminent fear of death whether from disease or any other cause, so that in the case of an illness the man is so broken or weakened by it as to be incapacitated from conducting his ordinary avocations outside his house, for example, a Faki (jurist) from going to the mosque, a tradesman to his shop, a woman from attending to her indoor occupations," it is Marz-ul-mout; and also on the authority of the Mujtaba that "where the illness has become so severe as to make it permissible for the sufferer to offer his prayer without standing up (lit. : in a sitting posture) it must be regarded as an illness of death."

The above doctrine, however, is different from that of Futawa-i-Alumgiri which was accepted in the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Bukhsh (2) and where the proposition was laid down in these words:—"A death illness is one which it is highly probable will end fatally whether the sick person has taken to his bed or not or whether in the case of a man it disables him from rising up for necessary avocations out of his house or not. Such as, for instance, where he is Faki or lawyer, from going to the Musjid or place of worship and when he is a merchant from going to his shop; or whether in the case of a woman it does or does not disable her from necessary avocation within doors. But the illness is to be considered death illness when a man cannot pray standing." This extract with the exception of the last sentence seems to be the translation of a passage from the Futawa-i-Alumgiri.

Mr. Tyabji in his Principles of Mahomedan law quotes Baillie's Digest, Vol. 1, p. 543, Grady's edition of Hamilton's Hedaya, p. 684, in support of the proposition that "pains of child birth are considered by the Muslim authors as prima facie a death illness, whereas lameness, gout, paralysis, consumption or withered or palsied hand, after they have continued for a long time and have no immediate danger of death do not constitute death illness."

It is not very easy to reconcile this mass of conflicting dicta which, as they stand, present numerous points of diversity. Some jurists contend that every command of the Sharah was characterised by its illut or reason or principle which is a mental idea and its subub or the cause or the way leading to it, which has an external and physical existence, and that one must adopt the subub in order to reach the obligation which the illut creates. According to them the reason of the rule is that when all hope of life is lost and there is every fear of likelihood of death taking place the right of the heirs to the property is created, just in the same manner as it is created on the death of the owner who ceases by death to have any need for property. Hence it is, they say, that the law has set out in detail the manifestations, indications and signs, and these should be adhered to, whatever might be the doctor's opinion as to the character of the disease. According to them the limit of one year is conclusive, and lays down a hard and fast rule which is to be preferred to a doubtful one depending upon such an uncertain thing as a mental condition like fear. Some others contend that in the case of a disease like paralysis, gout, consumption, etc., a year was required to ascertain whether the illness was a death illness or not, that if the same illness continued uninterruptedly and death takes place on account of it within a year, the illness is a death illness and a gift made within the year is invalid; but if the illness is a lingering one and death does not take place before the end of the year reckoned from the time it commenced, the illness during the year or subsequent to it is not to be considered as death-illness, and any gift made within or after the year is valid. According to some, a subjective apprehension on the part of the patient himself is hardly of any importance because though the reason or motive underlying the law is that illness weakens a man's physical and mental powers and he is therefore likely to act under such circumstances to the detriment of his spiritual interest by disappointing his heirs in their just expectations, according to the principles of Mahomedan jurisprudence that has not to be proved as a fact in each particular case, but the law itself lays down hard and fast rules and criteria by which the validity of a sick person's act has to be determined. The efforts of modern jurists have been directed towards removing the conflict, and judicial decisions have tended to disentangle this mass of complications and lay down some principles which may be of easy application.

In the case of Labbi Bibi v. Bibbun Bibi (1), Pearson and Turner, JJ., relying upon the authority of certain passages in Futwa-i-Alumgiri, Futwa-i-Fusul-Amadi, and Futwa-i-Shami, quoted above, held that under the Mahomedan law the term Marz-ul-mout is applicable not only to diseases which actually cause death, but to diseases from which it is probable that death will ensue; so as to engender in the person afflicted with the disease an apprehension of death; that a person labouring under such a disease cannot make a valid gift of the whole of his property until a year has elapsed from the time he was attacked by it. Some of the texts referred to in that case dealt with paralysis "partial or total," characterized it as "a fatal disease" and laid down the doctrine that when the sickness becomes old, that is to say, if one year elapses from its commencement and no increase or decrease occurs and the same sickness continues, the sick person should be deemed a healthy person, and a disposition made after a year from the attack of the malady was to be treated as a disposition made in the enjoyment of health. In that case the learned Judges overruled the contention that in the case of a disease like paralysis, etc., a year was required to ascertain whether the illness was a death illness or not; that if the same illness continued uninterruptedly and death took place on account of it within a year, the illness was a death illness, and a gift made within the year was invalid; but if the illness was a lingering illness and death did not take place before the end of one year reckoned from the time it commenced, the illness during the year or subsequent to it, was not considered a death illness, and any gift made within or after the year was valid. They went on to observe:—"The Mahomedan law, as it would seem, in order to guard against acts done by a person afflicted with a disease which may disturb his calm judgment, has provided that the person afflicted with the disease shall be deemed incompetent to pronounce a divorce or make a gift of his property until after the expiration of a year from the date on which he was attacked with the disease." This decision was followed in the case of Muhammad Gulshere Khan v. Marriam Begum (3) and the principle was laid down in these words: "According to the Mahomedan law a gift by a sick person is not invalid, if at the time of such gift his sickness is of long continuance, i.e., has lasted for a year, and he is in full possession of his senses, and there is no immediate apprehension of his death." The doctrine as to the validity of the gift when the disease has lasted over a year is considered not to have been correctly appreciated in these decisions (Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, Vol. I, page 57, Foot-note). In the case of Hasarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar (4), Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ., observed as follows:—"A careful study of the principles enunciated in the most authoritative Hanafi works would show that in determining whether the donation of a person suffering from a mortal illness comes within the doctrine applicable to Marz-ul-mout gifts, several questions have to be considered, viz., (1) Was the donor suffering at the time of the gift from a disease which was the immediate cause of his death? (2) Was the disease of such a nature or character as to induce in the person suffering the belief that death would be caused thereby, or to engender in him the apprehension of death? (3) Was the illness such as to incapacitate him from the pursuit of his ordinary avocations or standing up for prayers, a circumstance which might create on the mind of the sufferer an apprehension of death? (4) Had the illness continued for such a length of time as to remove or lessen the apprehension of immediate fatality or to accustom the sufferer to the malady? The limit of one year mentioned in the law books does not, in our opinion, lay down any hard and fast rule regarding the character of the illness; it only indicates that a continuance of the malady for that length of time may be regarded as taking it out of the category of a mortal illness." In the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Bukhsh (2), it was laid down (Rampini and Pargiter, JJ.), that ordinarily a malady should be considered to be of long continuance, if it has lasted a year, but agreeing with the observations made in the case of Hasarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar (4) it was held the limit of one year does not constitute a hard and fast rule and that it may mean a period of about a year. In this case it was laid down that the texts mentioned three matters:—(i) illness, (ii) expectation of a fatal issue and (iii) certain physical incapacities which indicate the degree of illness, and the following observations appear in the judgment:—"The learned vakil for the Defendants contends that the meaning of this is if the 1st and 3rd exist then the 2nd must necessarily be presumed, namely, that there is an expectation of death. The learned vakil for the Plaintiff contends on the other hand that there is no such necessary presumption that the matters of the 3rd class are only evidence and that the Court must decide from that and the other evidence whether the second actually exists, that is, whether there is expectation of death. The latter appears to us to be the correct view; for the passage from Futawa-i-Alumgiri distinctly states twice that the definition of death illness is illness in which death is highly probable whether the incapacities mentioned exist or not. These incapacities therefore are not infallible signs of death illness. At the time when this law was laid down, little medical knowledge existed. It was necessary therefore to decide when an illness was a death illness, and that could only be done by simple rules dealing with certain symptoms which all persons could notice and comprehend. Yet it appears from these passages that even while the lawyers suggested that certain physical incapacities indicated dangerous illness, they did not lay down positively that these incapacities are conclusive for it was no part of their definition of death illness whether the incapacities mentioned existed or not. It is only with regard to the extreme case where a man cannot stand up to perform the primary and simple obligations of saying his prayers that they declared the illness should be deemed a death illness." The learned Judges upon the evidence held that there was nothing in the symptoms of the patient which should necessarily have excited in him an apprehension of death. This case was carried in appeal to the Privy Council and the Judicial Committee in Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Baksh (5) dismissed the appeal, holding that the test which was treated as decisive on the point of the validity of the gift, namely, whether the deed of gift was executed by the donor under apprehension of death, was the right question in the case. The case of Ibrahim Golam Ariff v. Saiboo (6) went up to the Privy Council from a judgment of Chitty, J., then a Judge of the Burma Chief Court, which had been affirmed on appeal by Thirkell White, C. J. and Bigge, J. In that case the Courts appear to have proceeded upon the test which they considered to be the crucial test in the case, namely, whether there was an apprehension of death in the mind of the donor at the time of the execution of the deed of gift which formed the subject-matter of that case, and concurrently found that question in the negative. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on those findings refused to interfere holding that "the law applicable was not in controversy: the invalidity arises where the gift is made under pressure of sense of imminence of death."

These cases must be taken to have set at rest the controversy relating to the rigidity of the one year rule. In view of these cases it is also impossible to contend any longer that the subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the donor as distinguished from the apprehension caused in the mind of others, does not count in the law of Marz-ul-mout. The existence of this subjective element as an ingredient in the law of Marz-ul-mout, was doubted by Woodroffe, J., in the case of Kulsom Bibee v. Golam Hossein Cassim Ariff (7) and Sir Abdur Rahim in his Principles of Mohamadan Jurisprudence, page 256, says that it is not a test at all in such matters.

The law of Marz-ul-mout was considered in the case of Sarabai v. Rabia Bai (8) in which Batchelor, J., laid down that, in order to establish Marz-ul-mout, there must be present at least three conditions:—(1) Proximate danger of death, so that there is, as it is phrased, a preponderance (ghaliba) of khauf or apprehension, that is, that at the given time death must be more probable than life; (2) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person; and (3) there must be some external indicia, chief amongst which would be the inability to attend to ordinary avocations." These principles were adopted in a later decision of the same Court, Rasheed v. Sherabanoo (9).

In view of the decision of the Judicial Committee referred to above, it may perhaps be doubted as to whether the third condition mentioned in the Bombay cases is really a sine qua non.

As regards the investigation into the nature of the illness in the present case we are to some extent relieved by reason of the fact that the malady that Mohammad Tayeb was suffering from was a specific one, and was definitely diagnosed as paralysis of the lower limbs. There is hardly any divergence amongst the witnesses as to the chief characteristics and features of the illness, except perhaps as to minor details as regards which very little preference may be given to one witness more than to another, in view of the fact that the evidence of each witness is coloured by his or her conception of what would or would not constitute Marz-ul-mout. The evidence or such of it as may be safely taken to be reliable points to the first attack of the illness having come in the month of February 1895, the wakfnama was executed, as I have said, on the 20th March 1895. It was presented for registration on the 21st March 1895, and actually registered on the 23rd. Mohammad Tayeb died in November 1895. There is no reliable evidence, one way or the other, as to whether the intensity of the affliction went on or the increase or whether it varied at any time during the period he suffered from it. The trend of the evidence is to the effect that from the first attack medicines began to be administered and he was kept on liquid diet. The lower limbs having been paralysed he would always remain in bed and had to be helped or raised to a sitting posture. On the other hand, we have it that he was taken on a chair into a palanquin on which he was carried to the office of the Registrar where he personally admitted the execution of the document. There is therefore no reason to hold that his brain was affected about the time that the document was executed or at any time, and the evidence of the witnesses who want to make out that his mental faculties had been in any way impaired cannot possibly be believed. The evidence relating to the part that he took in connection with the preparation of the drafts for the wakfnama, and the instructions that he gave in connection with the transaction clearly show that he was in full possession of all his faculties. There is nothing suggestive of senile decay, and he was fairly well with all his powers, but for the paralysis of the lower limbs, for the ripe old age of 94 or 95 that he is said to have been of at the time. These findings are substantially the same at which the learned President has arrived on the evidence in the case, and with his findings in this respect I entirely agree.

The question, however, is not what the testamentary capacity of Mohammad Tayeb was at the time the document was executed, but to quote the words of the Judicial Committee in the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Baksh (5), "whether the deed was executed under an apprehension of death" or in the words of their Lordships as used in the case of Ibrahim Golam Ariff v. Saiboo (6), whether the wakf was made "under pressure of a sense of imminence of death." The possession of one's senses and mental faculties is no index of this apprehension; in fact the proportion of the one to the other would, if anything, vary in the inverse ratio. We have the fact that from the day that he was struck by the disease he was kept on liquid diet, the fact that he was an old man of 94 or 95, the fact that there was nothing before him suggesting that the disease had taken a favourable turn, the fact that the illness continued till the 21st March 1895 on which date the document was executed and the fact that steps were taken the very next day to get the document registered—these facts to my mind suggest unmistakably that Mohammad Tayeb apprehended that he would not survive the illness, and that his end was approaching. Apart from the texts to which I have already referred, the one thing which was held in the case of Hasarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar (4) as likely to create in the mind of Mohammad Tayeb an apprehension of death, and which dictum was approved in the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Bukhsh (2) exists in the present case. It has been found by the learned President and rightly so upon the evidence, and in fact that finding has not been challenged before us, that Mohammad Tayeb from the time that the disease came upon him was unable to stand up for prayer. There is a rational foundation for the rule as to why this inability is regarded in Mahomedan law as creating such apprehension. It is only in a case of utter and absolute disability that one would say his prayers without standing; and when one finds this disability attending him during prayers, it is bound to fill his mind with an apprehension that the end is not far off. At the date of execution of the deed the disease was a little over a month old, and in no sense had continued for a sufficient length of time so as to be a part of his nature. I think all the circumstances point to his having apprehended at the time he executed the deed that it was highly probable that the malady would soon end fatally. At that point of time there was a preponderance of apprehension that death was more probable than life though he lingered on for seven or eight months more and then expired. The wakf in my opinion was made under a sense of impending death which he feared was coming on as a result of the illness he was suffering from. The learned President has relied upon a passage in Ballie's Digest, p. 543, which runs thus:—"The lame, the paralytic, the consumptive, when the malady was of long continuance and there is no immediate apprehension of death, may make gifts of the whole of the property." In my opinion the facts indicate that the apprehension of death was immediate, and that the deed was executed under an apprehension that death was imminent in the sense that there was nothing to stand between the illness and the death, or, in other words, that the latter would follow inevitably as a necessary result of the former and at no distant date. More than that is not necessary under the law of Marz-ul-mout.

There is on the record a judgment of my learned brother Greaves, J., dealing with the question of the validity of this wakf. That judgment is undoubtedly entitled to every respect but as the learned President has held it cannot operate as res judicata in the present case. It may also be remarked that Greaves, J., was able to find upon the evidence that was before him that Mohammad Tayeb suffered for more than a year from his illness before his death, a finding which the evidence before us does not support.

For the above reasons I am unable to agree in the view taken by the learned President on the question of the validity of the wakf. I am of opinion that the wakf was invalid except to the extent of a third of the properties covered by it, which belonged to the wakif.

The appeal will be allowed and apportionment of the compensation in respect of the premises, when it is made, will be made on the basis indicated above.

APP. No. 11 OF 1925.

SUHRWARDY, J. PANTON, J. 1925, 24, June.	BHAGIRATHI CHOW- DHURY and ors., Appellants, v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 162, scope of—Evidence of investigating Police Officer that he had examined certain witnesses for the defence who stated that they were not present at the occurrence, if admissible—Map prepared by Police Officer with statements of witnesses made to him noted thereon—Inadmissibility of such maps—Jury, misdirection to.

Where in a Sessions trial the investigating Police Officer was asked if he had examined witnesses for the defence in the course of the investigation and deposed that he had examined two such persons who stated that they were not present at the occurrence :

Held—That the statement by the Police Officer was not admissible. Sec. 162, Cr. P. C. is clear enough to exclude any statement made by any person and directs that such statement shall not be used for any purpose.

The manner in which the statement was brought out, commented on.

A map prepared in a criminal case should not have thereon any statement made by a witness to the person preparing the map noted thereon.

Such statements in a map prepared by a Police Officer are inadmissible under sec. 162, Cr. P. C. and as hearsay evidence :

Held—That the trial was vitiated by the inadmissible evidence of the investigating Police Officer and the improperly prepared map being placed before the jury.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th February 1925 against an order of the Sessions Judge of Rajshahi (Mr. B. K. Bosu), dated the 6th December 1924, by which he convicted the Appellants of an offence punishable under secs. 147 and 325, I. P. C., and sentenced them to five and three years' rigorous imprisonment respectively.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SUHRWARDY, J.—This appeal is by Bhagirathi Chowdhury and four others who have been convicted in accordance with the majority verdict of the jury by the Sessions Judge of Rajshahi. The first accused has been convicted under secs. 147 and 325, I. P. C., and sentenced under sec. 325 to five years' rigorous imprisonment, no separate sentence having been passed under sec. 147. The other four accused persons have been convicted under secs. 325/149, I. P. C., and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

The riot alleged to have taken place was over a piece of land, in course of which, it is said, one Mir Panchu was beaten to death. Several objections have been taken on behalf of the accused to the address by the Judge to the jury; but it is sufficient to refer to two of these, as in our opinion the others are not important.

The first objection is that certain statements have been admitted by the learned Sessions Judge which are inadmissible in evidence. In the course of the examination of Ananta Prosad Das (Sub-Inspector of Police) he was asked in examination-in-chief whether he examined during the course of the investigation any witness on behalf of the accused and he said that he had examined only two witnesses Bartu Chowdhury and Daulot Ghose who were produced before him and both of them stated that they were not present at the occurrence. This, it is said, is in contravention of the provisions of sec. 162, Cr. P. C. That section says that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation . . . shall be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial . . . It is not clear why the witness was made to make this statement; but it is suggested that one of the persons named by him at least, namely, Daulot Ghose, was a witness, cited by the defence and therefore in anticipation of the evidence which might be given by Daulot Ghose, this statement was made by the Inspector. In my opinion this statement by the Sub-Inspector is not admissible. Sec. 162, Cr. P. C. is clear enough to exclude any statement made by any person and directs that such statement shall not be used for any purpose. The way in which this evidence has been brought out is objectionable in more ways than one. It is in direct contravention of the above provision of law and it is not justified by any other provision of law which makes evidence contradicting possible evidence of a possible witness admissible against the accused. The mere fact that one of the persons so named by the Sub-Inspector was cited by the defence did not justify the prosecution in getting out a statement made by him in anticipation of what he might say. This statement by the Sub-Inspector in the hearing of the jury must have apparently prejudiced the case for the defence and left an impression in the mind of the jury that the accused produced witnesses in support of their case before the Sub-Inspector and both of them denied any knowledge of the occurrence. This statement is not therefore admissible.

The second ground on which the legality of the trial is assailed is that the map prepared by the Sub-Inspector and placed before the jury contains statements of witnesses and hence the map should not have been placed before the jury with those statements thereon. There are two very important endorsements on the map. The first is against the point marked with an arrow and runs thus: "The deceased and Luddi Sheikh Peadas stood here and the deceased received lathi blow from Bhagirathi Chowkidar accused while standing here." In another part of the map certain dotted lines were put and the remark against them is, "showing the route taken by the deceased on being chased by the accused persons." These statements were not of the Sub-Inspector from his personal knowledge but from what he had heard from other people at the time of the investigation. Such statements are therefore inadmissible under sec. 162, Cr. P. C., and as hearsay evidence. The impropriety of placing maps before the jury containing statements of witnesses or of information received by the person preparing the map from other persons has been recently pointed out in several cases. In King-Emperor v. Abinash Chandra Bose (1) the learned Chief Justice has fully dealt with this matter and it has been laid down that "a person who makes a map in a Criminal case ought not to put upon it anything more than what he sees himself. Particulars derived from witnesses examined on the spot should not be noted on the body of the map but on a separate sheet of paper annexed to the map as an index thereto." The direction given here may be inconvenient but the law seems to be clear. The learned Chief Justice in a very recent case to which my learned brother was party (Jury Reference No. 6 of 1925 decided on the 1st May 1925) referred to a map like the one in the present case and remarked that the map placed before the jury was a clear instance of what should not be done, and observed as follows :—"In my judgment the map in its present state ought not to be allowed to be placed before the jury. If it was necessary for the map to be placed before the jury the proper thing to be done was to have a clean copy made with these entries omitted, so that the jury would have a map before them which could not have prejudiced their mind in any way." In my judgment apart from the instruction in the Police Regulations and the High Court Circular Orders, it is highly prejudicial in the interest of justice to allow statements which may or may not be admissible in evidence to be introduced in a case by indirect means. For instance, the map prepared by the Sub-Inspector from certain information received from another person introduces a statement made by that person and it is possible that the person who gave the information to the Sub-Inspector was not himself competent to make the statement his information having been derived from others not before the Court. Apart from sec. 162, Cr. P. C., such statements under the general law ought not to be made to go in in the shape of entries in maps. The trial accordingly has been vitiated by the introduction of these pieces of evidence and in my opinion, the conviction cannot stand.

In the result the conviction of and the sentences passed upon the Appellants should be set aside and a retrial ordered. The Appellants Nos. 2 to 5 will remain on bail and the Appellant No. 1 in custody until further orders by the Magistrate.

BURN & Co., LD.,

Appellants,

THAKUR SAHIB SHREE

LUKHDIRJI OF MORVI

STATE, Respondent.

Contract—Breach—Time, if of essence of contract—Party entitled to rescind after expiry of time but continuing to treat contract as subsisting, if commits a breach by treating contract later on as rescinded on ground of the other party's default.

Shortly after the war broke out, the Defendant Company agreed to supply to the Plaintiff 50 railway wagons for an agreed price, the terms of payment being that the Plaintiff should pay a third of the price on the order being given, another third when the underframes of the wagons should be wheeled and the balance on delivery. The Plaintiff did not pay the second instalment when, the underframes having been wheeled, the Defendant Company asked for its payment; nevertheless the Defendant Company delivered 8 wagons and these were received by the Plaintiff. The Defendant Company thereafter asked for but failed to obtain from the Plaintiff the second instalment of the contract price and the price of the 8 wagons delivered, and then refused to perform the rest of the contract unless the balance of the contract price was first paid to them. Thereafter the Plaintiff sent to the Defendant Company a cheque to cover the second instalment and asked for the delivery of the remaining 42 wagons, the third instalment of payment to be made upon such delivery:

Held—That in the circumstances of the case, the intention of the parties when the contract was made was that time should be of the essence of the contract, as to the time when the three instalments of the contract price were to be paid; and therefore when the second instalment was not paid by the Plaintiff, the Defendant Company might rescind the contract; but by delivering 8 of the wagons after the default they treated the contract as subsisting. The Defendant Company could not insist on the payment on delivery of the price of the 8 wagons only, and they committed a breach of the contract in refusing to deliver the remaining wagons without payment of the balance of the contract price.

This was an appeal (No. 134 of 1924) from a decree, dated the 27th June 1923, of the High Court in Bengal, which affirmed a decree, dated the 30th August 1922, of the said Court in its Original Jurisdiction.

The Thakur Sahib of Morvi brought the suit against the Appellant Company for damages for an alleged breach of contract to supply wagons.

The Plaintiff was the owner of the Morvi State Railway and the contract in suit was contained in letters which passed between the parties from October 1914 to January 1915. The contract provided for the supply of 50 wagons by the Appellant Company within 6 months of the receipt of order. Payment was to be made one-third with order, one-third when the underframes were wheeled, and one-third on receipt of the wagons. The first instalment was paid when the order was given. Thereafter considerable delay took place in securing necessary parts for the wagons but on the 25th October 1916 the Appellant Company gave notice to the Respondent that the underframes were wheeled, and demanded the second instalment.

No payment was made in reply to this demand.

On the 20th February 1917, 8 wagons

were delivered and accepted and further demands were made from time to time for the second instalment. On the 18th July 1917 the Appellant Company gave notice of cancellation of the contract and sold the remaining wagons.

On the 22nd September 1917 the Respondent tendered the amount of the second instalment.

The main question for decision was as to whether the provision in the contract that the second instalment should be paid when the underframes were wheeled was a provision in which time was of the essence of the contract.

The facts and correspondence are set out at length in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

The trial Judge (Rankin, J.) held that in the circumstances time was not of the essence of the contract but that the Appellant Company was entitled to cancel on giving notice limiting a reasonable time for payment.

That no such notice was given by them, and that, inasmuch as a tender of the second instalment was eventually made by the Respondent, the contract was broken by the Appellant Company against whom he made a decree.

The High Court (Sanderson, C. J. and Richardson, J.) were of the same opinion and dismissed an appeal by the Company.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Aske for the Appellant Company.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on the Original Civil Jurisdiction side of the High Court at Calcutta on the 27th August 1918 by His Highness the then Thakur Sahib of Morvi against Burn and Company, Limited, to recover damages for the alleged conversion of 42 railway wagons, and for an alleged breach of contract to make and deliver the same wagons. The property in the wagons had never vested in His Highness of Morvi, who had never been, constructively or otherwise, in possession of them. The claim for conversion has been dropped. The original Plaintiff died and his son, who succeeded him as the Thakur Sahib of Morvi, was on the 19th July 1922, brought on the record as the Plaintiff. The original Plaintiff was, and his successor, the present Plaintiff, is the proprietor of the Morvi State Railway.

The contract was made between His Highness the then Thakur Sahib of Morvi through the manager of the Morvi State Railway, his agent, and Burn and Company, Limited, of Howrah and Calcutta, in British India. The contract was for the manufacture of 50 railway wagons by the Defendant Company at the Company's works at Howrah and their delivery to the Morvi State Railway upon certain terms which will be later more fully mentioned. The contract was made by correspondence between the manager of the Morvi State Railway, who lived at Morvi, and the Defendant Company at Calcutta. The suit has throughout been treated as a suit upon a contract to which the Indian Contract Act, 1872 (Act IX of 1872), applies.

The correspondence began on the 29th October 1914 by a letter to the Defendant Company from the manager for the Morvi State Railway, asking the Company to quote rates for 25 covered wagons and 25 open wagons as per specifications and drawings which he enclosed. The specifications showed that the wagons were to be metre gauge railway wagons. Between the 29th October 1914, and the 23rd January 1915, several letters passed between His Highness's agent and the Defendant Company, the result of which was the contract in suit. By the contract which was agreed upon the Defendant Company agreed to manufacture and to deliver to the Morvi State Railway, upon terms as to payment which will be mentioned, 25 covered and 25 open goods wagons, 50 railway wagons in all, at the price of Rs. 1,825 for each covered wagon and at the price of Rs. 1,875 for each open wagon, the wagons to be in accordance with certain specifications and drawings, and the 50 wagons to be delivered in six months from the date of the receipt by the Defendant Company of an order for the wagons. The terms of payment were that His Highness of Morvi should pay to the Defendant Company one-third of the contract price on the order for the wagons being given, and one-third of the contract price when the underframes of the wagons should be wheeled, and the remaining one-third when the wagons should be delivered. One-third of the total contract price amounted to Rs. 30,833. The contract contained no provision that the contract time for the delivery of the wagons should be extended in case the Defendant Company should be delayed in completing the wagons owing to the war or any other cause beyond the company's control.

On the 23rd January 1915, His Highness of Morvi, through his agent, sent to the Defendant Company his final order for the 50 wagons and said "we have no more drawings to send than we have already sent. From the specifications and drawings sent, you will kindly prepare working drawings in detail and send them for our approval."

After the receipt by the Defendant

Company of the order of the 23rd January 1915, for the wagons, the Defendant Company was much delayed in performing the contract by the difficulties, owing to the war, of obtaining some of the necessary parts of the wagons and the wagons were not ready for delivery at the time specified by the contract. His Highness of Morvi did not at any time exercise such right, if any, as he may have had under the Indian Contract Act, 1872, of determining the contract because the Defendants had failed to deliver the wagons in accordance with it.

The agreement that the second instalment of the contract price should be paid by His Highness to the Defendant Company when the underframes of the wagons should be wheeled, of course meant that the second instalment should be promptly paid when the Defendants had given His Highness of Morvi, through his agent, notice that the Company had fixed the wheels to the under-frames of the 50 wagons. On the 25th October 1916, the Defendants sent by post to the manager of the Morvi State Railway an account, dated the 24th October 1916, for Rs. 30,833, for the second instalment, being one-third of the contract price due when the "underframes are wheeled," and stated in the letter in which the account was enclosed, that it was submitted by them "for favour of payment at your convenience." That letter and the account which was enclosed in it were notice to His Highness's agent, when in the course of the post they were received at Morvi, that the Defendant Company had fixed the wheels to the underframes of the 50 wagons. It was found by Mr. Justice Rankin, who tried the suit, and it has not been disputed, that at the date of that account, the 24th October 1916, the underframes had been wheeled. On the 19th

BURN & Co., LD. v. THAKUR SAHIB SREE LUKHDIRJI OF MORVI STATE.

November 1916, the manager of the Morvi State Railway acknowledged the receipt of the Company's letter of the 25th October 1916, and enquired "when the wagons will be completed and despatched," but did not send any payment of the second instalment.

The position which His Highness, through his agent, then took up and maintained for months is illustrated by the following extract from the manager's letter of the 19th November 1916 :—

"It is now more than a year and a half and yet, as we understand from your letter, you have come as far as the wheeling of underframes, and at the rate you have gone on, there is no knowing when you will finish the work. When we placed the order, you certainly knew the condition of the market, because the war had then been on some months already. Till June even you talked of delay of a few weeks, but it is now several months which may perhaps run into years. In addition to loss of interest on the money locked up with you and trouble and inconvenience we had to pay hire to other Railways and even on payment of hire we could not get timely and sufficient supply and suffered in traffic. In consulting your convenience it was only fair and reasonable that you should have consulted ours. From your opening correspondence, we expected, beside solid and substantial work, that timely execution of this order might lead to future orders.

"We fear the payment of 2nd instalment will remain locked up as the 1st and shall therefore be glad to know definitely when the wagons will be completed and despatched."

In reply to that letter of the 19th November 1916, the Defendant Company wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway on the 23rd November 1916, as follows :—

"Your favour No. 4906 of 1916 dated 19-11-16. We regret very much that you should write to us in this way as we can assure you we have done all possible to expedite and complete your work, the delay is entirely due to conditions brought about by the war.

"You ask when delivery will be made and we regret we cannot at present inform you, for instance the springs for your buffers although all ready in England cannot be despatched because the Munitions Board have so far not granted the necessary permit for them to be shipped. To help us will you kindly address the Railway Board stating that these springs are urgently wanted (i.e., 200 buffing springs) and should be supplied, send their reply to us and we can then enable our London Office to obtain shipping sanction.

"Your contract has been considered in every possible way and we trust that this trouble regarding one item alone, the buffing springs, will give you an example of the unprecedented and extraordinary conditions that have been in existence for the last 18 months and which grow more onerous and difficult every day."

The springs for the buffers referred to in that letter of the 23rd November 1916 were apparently Ibbetson springs, which are patent springs and are made only in England. Their Lordships think it only fair to the parties to this suit that some of the difficulties of the situation should be illustrated by the passages which they have quoted.

On the 14th December 1916, the 4th January 1917, and the 25th January 1917, the Defendant Company wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway asking for payment of the second instalment and received no reply. On the 14th February 1917, the Defendant Company telegraphed to the manager of the Morvi State Railway: "Kindly wire when may expect settlement bill rupees 30,833 account wagons." That was the account for the second instalment. In reply the Company received from the manager by telegraph the following reply on the 19th February 1917: "No. 87. Your telegram of 14th, matter is referred to proprietor of this railway." The proprietor was His Highness of Morvi. The reference to His Highness of Morvi did not result in the payment of the second instalment. In their Lordships' opinion His Highness of Morvi had then decided not to perform his contract to pay the second instalment until some future time, and the Defendant Company was then entitled under the Indian Contract Act, 1872, to rescind the contract, but the company did not rescind the contract.

By the 20th February 1917, the Defendant Company had completed eight of the contract wagons and on that date forwarded them to the Morvi State Railway, and thereby treated the contract as subsisting. On the 27th February 1917, the Defendant Company wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway enclosing an account, dated the 26th February 1917, for Rs. 5,000 in respect of the eight wagons, and in their letter said ". . . we have wired you to-day as follows: kindly wire why bill Rs. 30,833 account wagons not paid . . . we shall be obliged if you will arrange to remit the amount as well as the amount of the enclosed bill No. 8456 W. for Rs. 5,000 with as little delay as possible. . . ." His Highness of Morvi was not bound to accept in part performance of the contract eight wagons, but he did receive them. To the telegram of the 27th February 1917, the manager of the Morvi State Railway replied by telegram on the 28th February as follows: "No. 88. Your wire. Refer to this office wire 87 dated 18. Matter referred proprietor." The Defendant Company received no other reply to their telegram of the 27th February or to their letter of that date.

On the 5th March 1917, the Defendant Company wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway with reference to their account for the second instalment and his telegrams of the 19th and 28th February, and said that the Company had "decided not to despatch any more wagons till your proprietor has paid the bill before mentioned and also that for Rs. 5,000 sent you with our letter of the 27th ultimo." On the 11th April 1917, the Defendant Company wrote to the

"Dear Sir,

"Re Wagons.

"As we have neither received a cheque for the money due to us nor any reply to our letter dated the 5th March we find it necessary to address you again upon this matter and we desire to point out to you that by not paying our bills when they became due for payment you have broken the contract and we shall therefore take whatever action appears to us to be necessary for our own interests if we do not receive a satisfactory reply to this letter before the date specified below.

"The wagons could be delivered as soon as we could obtain trucks from the Railway to carry them, but we regret we cannot now permit another of your wagons to leave our works until you pay us in full for the whole order.

"Your action has put us to very considerable expense and very great inconvenience and at the present time your wagons are occupying much valuable space in our works. . . ."

The date specified in that letter was the 20th April 1917. The letter of the 11th April 1917 was, their Lordships consider, a notice to His Highness of Morvi that the remaining 42 wagons were completed ready for delivery to him on payment of the balance of the contract price which would then be due. On the 21st April 1917, the manager of the Morvi State Railway telegraphed to the Defendant Company as follows: "Your letter though dated eleventh reached here yesterday. Matter referred to proprietor who now in Bombay." No other reply to the Defendant Company's letter of the 11th April having been received, the Defendant Company wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway on the 7th May 1917, as follows:—

"Re Wagons.

"We desire to call your special attention to our letter dated the 11th ultimo and to inform you that it is now imperative that we receive a satisfactory reply to this letter at once otherwise we shall have no option but to settle the matter without further reference to you. Kindly favour us with a reply by return."

BURN & Co., LD. v. THAKUR SAHIB SREE LUKHDIRJI OF MORVI STATE.

To which the Defendant Company received the following reply, dated the 19th May 1917 :—

"Re WAGONS.

"With reference to your special reminder No. OM231/H., dated the 7th instant, I have to inform you that His Highness the Thakore, proprietor of this Railway, is not here at present but he has gone to Matheran, a hilly station for the hot weather, and so I have forwarded your letter to him and I will let you know on hearing from him."

No other reply to the Defendant Company's letter of the 7th May having been received, the solicitors of the Defendant Company, on the 4th July 1917, wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway as follows :—

"Sir,

"Supply of Wagons from Messrs. Burn and Co., Ltd.

"Our clients, Messrs. Burn and Co., Ltd., have instructed us to address you with reference to the contract for the purchase by your Railway of 50 goods wagons from them. The terms of the contract were: Payment as to 1/3rd with the order, 1/3rd when the underframe was wheeled and the balance on delivery. The first instalment was duly paid but the second instalment has not yet been paid, in spite of repeated demands, and in spite of the fact that our clients have actually delivered 8 wagons. In the existing circumstances of the trade, it is obvious that our clients cannot keep the undelivered balance of the wagons locked up indefinitely and, as you have failed to carry out your part of the contract, the only course now open to them is to dispose of the wagons elsewhere as best they can but before doing so they are prepared to give you the opportunity of purchasing these wagons outright by paying the total amount of the original contract price outstanding and we are accordingly instructed to give you notice, as we hereby do, that unless the full amount of the original contract price is paid to our clients or to us as their agents within 10 days from the date hereof the undelivered wagons will be disposed of by our clients as they may think fit.

"Yours faithfully,

"Orr, Dignam and Co."

On the 18th July 1917, the Defendant Company's solicitors wrote to the manager of the Morvi State Railway as follows :—

"Sir,

"As neither our clients nor ourselves have received any reply to our letter to you of the 4th instant our clients have now taken steps to dispose of the undelivered wagons elsewhere and have made up an account the balance due to the Railway [after deducting the costs of the wagons delivered from the deposit made to be Rs. 15,833. We enclose you herewith copy of this account together with our cheque for Rs. 15,833 and shall be obliged if you will let us have a formal receipt for this amount by return.

"Yours faithfully,

"Orr, Dignam and Co."

After the 18th July 1917, the Defendant Company sold the 42 wagons to the Mysore State Railway. On the 22nd September 1917, Messrs. Sanderson and Co., the solicitors of His Highness of Morvi, wrote to the Defendant Company's solicitors saying that they were instructed to ask for the delivery of the 42 wagons still undelivered, enclosing a cheque for Rs. 30,833, the amount of the second instalment, and stating that their clients would pay the third instalment, immediately on the receipt and erection of the wagons in accordance with the terms of the contract. It may be assumed that the cheque was returned. The rest of the correspondence is not material.

As has been mentioned, the suit was tried by Mr. Justice Rankin. It was contended on behalf of the Defendant Company that the payments of the instalments of the contract price at the times specified for them were of the essence of the contract. In support of that contention it was urged that the terms as to the payment of the first and second instalments showed that time was of the essence of the contract; that the performance by the Company of the contract involved the expenditure of very considerable sums of money and the occupation of the Company's workshops by a large number of bulky articles; that metre gauge railways did not form a market where such wagons could be easily disposed of; that the wagons had to be made in accordance with special specifications; and that Plaintiff was a person who could not be sued as of right. Mr. Justice Rankin observed in his judgment that the case depended entirely upon the correspondence, the correct appreciation of the general circumstances of the case, and of the rules of law to be applied, and he said :—

“On the whole and with some difficulty, I have come to the conclusion, looking at the circumstances and the letters, that in this case time was not of the essence of the contract.”

The letters to which the learned Judge referred were letters of the 28th December 1914, the 10th January 1915, the 16th January 1915, and the 23rd January 1915, which, in their Lordships' opinion, do not support the conclusion at which he arrived.

Mr. Justice Rankin, having observed that the Defendant Company had, on the 18th July 1917, sent to the Plaintiff's solicitors the letter of that date enclosing a cheque for the balance due, on the footing that the contract was cancelled, held that the Defendant Company had broken the contract, and gave His Highness of Morvi, the present Plaintiff, a decree for damages, which, in their Lordships' opinion, were not excessive. The balance for which the cheque was sent was the balance due of the first instalment, which had been paid, after deducting the price of the 8 wagons.

From that decree the Defendant Company appealed under the Letters Patent. The appeal was heard by Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., and Mr. Justice Richardson. The Chief Justice in his judgment said :—

“But for the conduct of the Defendants, I should have thought that with regard to the payment of the second instalment time was of the essence of the contract. The Defendants were under contract to build 80 wagons. In my judgment they were not bound to proceed with the work, after the wheels were attached to the underframes, until the Plaintiff paid the second instalment. They surely could not be expected to keep the wagons, partly built, standing in their works, for an indefinite time, or for so long as the Plaintiff chose to keep them waiting for the second instalment. Having regard to the terms of the contract and the nature of the work to be done by the Defendants, in my opinion, prima facie, time would be of the essence of the contract.

“They actually delivered 8 wagons in February 1917, although the second instalment, which had been demanded in October 1917 (1916), had not been paid, and although as far as could be seen in February 1917, there was no immediate prospect of the second instalment being paid.”

The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Richardson agreeing that the Defendant Company broke the contract on the 18th July 1917, the appeal was by their decree dismissed. From that decree this appeal has been brought.

Their Lordships, having regard to the times when the three instalments of the contract price were according to the contract to become payable, and to the fact that the manufacture of the 50 wagons would involve considerable expenditure by the Defendant Company in providing materials for their construction, and in the payment of men who would necessarily be employed in constructing them, and to the fact that it might be difficult to enforce in a British Court or in a Court of the State of Morvi payment by His Highness of Morvi of the contract price, are of opinion that it must have been the intention of the parties when the contract was made that time should be of the essence of the contract as to the times when the three instalments of the contract price should be paid. When His Highness of Morvi had, after he had notice that the underframes of the wagons had been wheeled, made default in payment of the second instalment of the contract, which was, in effect, a refusal by him to perform the contract in its entirety, the

BURN & CO., LD. v. THAKUR SAHIB SREE LUKHDIRJI OF MORVI STATE.

Defendant Company was entitled to treat the contract as void and to rescind it, but the Defendant Company did not rescind it; on the contrary, the Defendant Company, by delivering 8 of the wagons in February 1917, to the Morvi State Railway, treated the contract as a subsisting contract. The Defendant Company was not on that delivery of the 8 wagons entitled to insist on a then payment for them. The contract price was not payable until the 50 wagons had been delivered.

In the view of the facts of this case which their Lordships take, and of the law which they consider is to be applied to those facts, they find that the Defendant Company finally broke the contract in July 1917. The 18th of that month may be taken as the date when Defendant Company finally broke the contract.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION
No. 197 OF 1924.

SANDERSON, C. J.)	W. & T. AVERY, LD.
BUCKLAND, J.)	v.
1925,	KESSORAM PODDER.
10, July.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 2, cl. (f), sub-sec. (i), sec. 11, sub-sec. (5), and sec. 15—Standard rent, what is—Tenant, when entitled to the benefit of the Act—Fair and reasonable compensation for use and occupation, basis of.

The standard rent as defined by sec. 2, cl. (f), sub-cl. (i) of the Calcutta Rent Act should be taken to be the rent at which the premises were let out on the 1st of November 1918 with the addition of ten per cent. as provided in the section, in the absence of any application by the landlord to fix it at a higher rent under sec. 15. This is fixed by statute and does not depend upon any action taken before the Rent Controller.

JETHA BHULCHAND v. GRACE (1) referred to.

A tenant claiming the benefit of sec. 11 of the Act is entitled to it only if he has complied with the two following conditions of sub-sec. (5), viz., firstly, if he has paid all arrears of rent that might be due at the time of the passing of the Act and, secondly, he must pay the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, within the time fixed by the contract, if any, or within the 15th day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable. He does not get three months to pay the rents of the first three months after the commencement of the Act, the second condition applying to them.

When the position of a tenant has been reduced to that of a trespasser, he is no longer entitled to the benefit conferred by the Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd December 1924 against an order of Mr. Justice Chotzner dated the 1st December 1924, passed in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. W. W. K. Page for the Appellants.

Mr. S. R. Das (Advocate-General) for the Respondent.

W. & T. AVERY, LD. v. KESSORAM PODDER.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Defendants against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chotzner.

It is necessary for me to state certain facts : The Appellants were in occupation of one room on the ground floor of premises No. 1, Hastings Street, as monthly tenants from the end of 1911 or the beginning of 1912. The rental was Rs. 150 per month. That rental remained the same until the year 1919. In 1911 the landlords were the Mullicks. In 1919 Messrs. Solomon & Co. took a lease from the Mullicks of the premises No. 1, Hastings Street, for a term of twenty years. The Appellants continued to be tenants under Messrs. Solomon & Co.

On the 5th of September 1919, an agreement was made between the Appellants and Messrs. Solomon & Co. to pay Rs. 500 rent per month : there were negotiations for a lease, which were never brought to completion. In December of the same year the Plaintiff, Kessoram Podder, bought the lease from Messrs. Solomon & Co. and the premises from Messrs. Mullicks for a total of 11 lacs, paying 2 lacs for the lease and 9 lacs for the premises.

The Plaintiff accepted the Appellants as monthly tenants at the same rate of rent, namely, Rs. 500. The Appellants paid the rent at the rate of Rs. 500 up to the end of April 1920. On the 5th of May 1920, the Calcutta Rent Act came into operation. In June the Plaintiff demanded the rent for May : the Appellants then said that they were liable to pay standard rent only, which was the rent payable on the first of November 1918, plus ten per cent., namely, Rs. 165.

Apparently, no reply was sent to that statement and, on the 21st of July 1920, the Appellants tendered the rent based upon the rate of Rs. 500 up to the 5th of May, when the Rent Act came into force, and at the rate of Rs. 165, which the Appellants declared to be the standard rent, for the subsequent period. This was refused : and, on the 23rd of July 1920, the amount was paid to the Rent Controller, and after that date the Appellants continued to pay what, they contended, was the standard rent to the Rent Controller.

The Plaintiff gave notice to the Appellants that he was intending to pull down and re-build the premises : and, he gave them notice to vacate the premises : no action was taken on the first notice and apparently the Plaintiff abandoned his intention to re-build the premises, when he failed to get possession from the Appellants and entered into an agreement to sell the premises to the Imperial Bank. That purchase was completed subsequently, viz., on the 7th of December 1921.

The Plaintiff, on the 29th of December 1920, gave notice to the Defendants to vacate the premises at the end of January 1921. That is the notice to quit, upon which reliance is placed in this suit.

This suit was brought on the 10th of January 1922, and the claim was for rent from and including May 1920 to the end of January 1921 at the rate of Rs. 500 per month, and for damages for wrongful use and occupation of the premises from the 1st of February 1921 up to the 7th of December 1921, which, as I have said, was the date on which the Plaintiff sold the premises to the Imperial Bank and after which he had no interest in the premises.

The first point, which was urged by the learned Advocate on behalf of the Appellants, was that the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent in respect of the first period, namely, from 5th May 1920 to January 1921, both months inclusive, at a rate higher than the standard rent in respect of these premises.

The learned Judge rejected that contention on the ground that the standard rent had not been fixed by the Rent Controller, and that there was a fallacy underlying the argument, because it proceeded upon the assumption that a tenant could standardize his own rent. The learned Judge held that the Appellants ought to have applied to the Rent Controller for the standardisation of the rent and as they did not do so, they could not be heard in this suit to allege that they were not liable for more than the standard rent.

The question is whether the conclusion, at which the learned Judge arrived, is correct.

I am not surprised at the conclusion at which the learned Judge arrived, because it has been pointed out on many occasions that the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act are difficult to construe. With great respect, however, to the learned Judge I am unable to agree with the conclusion at which he arrived.

The question depends upon certain sections of the Rent Act.

Sec. 2 (1) provides that "standard rent" in relation to any premises means, "(i) the rent at which the premises were let on the first day of November 1918, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date and after the first day of November 1915, with the addition in either case of ten per cent. on such rent [I need not read No. (ii) in connection with this case inasmuch as the premises in question were let on the 1st of November 1918];

"(iii) in the case specified in sec. 15, the rent fixed by the Controller."

The word "or" does not appear between these sub-sections, but I think that it must have been intended that the sub-sections or clauses should be read disjunctively. Consequently "standard rent" may be as described in (i), (ii) or (iii) in sec. 2, cl. (f).

The learned Advocate who appeared for the Appellants submitted that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the tenant had standardised his own rent. He argued that the rent was standardised by the Act; and he pointed out that the first sub-clause of sub-sec. (f), if it stood alone, would clearly indicate that the standard rent was the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 with the addition of ten per cent. on such rent.

But the learned Advocate who appeared for the Plaintiff argued that the first sub-section of cl. (f) does not stand alone and sub-sec. (iii) must be considered.

Now, turning to sec. 15, which is the section mentioned in sub-sec. (iii), sec. 2, cl. (f) it is found that "the Controller shall, on an application made to him by any landlord or tenant, grant a certificate certifying the standard rent of any premises leased or rented by such landlord or tenant, as the case may be," and that "in any of the following cases the Controller may fix the standard rent at such amount, as having regard to the provisions of this Act and the circumstances of the case he deems just.

Sub-sec. (d) is one of the following cases and refers to the case "where the rent paid on the first day of November 1918 (or, where the premises were not let on that date, the rent at which the premises were last let before that date) was in the opinion of the Controller unduly low."

Sec. 15 therefore gives the landlord an opportunity of applying to the Controller and alleging that the rent paid in respect of these premises on the 1st of November 1918 was unduly low, and if he can prove that, it will be in the discretion of the Controller to fix the standard rent at an amount higher than the rent which was actually paid on the 1st of November 1918, subject to the proviso contained in the section that he cannot fix it at a higher amount than the highest rent actually paid for the premises at any time since the first day of November 1913. In this case the highest rent paid for the premises since the first day of November 1918 was Rs. 500 per month, so that if the landlord had applied to the Controller and alleged that the rent which had been paid in November 1918 was unduly low, the Controller might have fixed it at a higher amount. If he had been satisfied that the rent in November 1918 was unduly low, the Controller might have fixed it at a higher amount, but he could not fix it at a higher amount than Rs. 500 per month.

Consequently, the learned Advocate for the Plaintiff-Respondent argued that on the 1st November 1918 rent plus ten per cent. should not be adopted as the standard rent in this case, because the Controller might upon an application by the landlord have fixed a higher rent.

In my opinion, that view ought not to be accepted. I think it was intended by the Act that prima facie the standard rent which was mentioned in sub-sec. (i) of cl. (f) of sec. 2 should be the standard rent, and in the absence of any application by the landlord to fix it at a higher rate, under sec. 15, the "standard rent" should be taken to be the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 with the addition of ten per cent. as provided by sub-sec. (i).

It was not necessary in my opinion for the Defendants in this case to show that they had made an application to the Controller and that he had fixed the standard rent at Rs. 165 before taking the point in this suit. In other words, in my opinion, it was open to the Defendants-Appellants to urge and rely upon the fact that the standard rent as fixed by the Act was Rs. 165 per month. Consequently, in my judgment, by reason of the provisions of sec. 4 of the Act, the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover any amount which exceeded the standard rent for the period from May 1920 to January 1921.

The result, therefore, is that, in my judgment, that part of the decree of the learned Judge which deals with the amount of rent recoverable should be varied.

I understand that the standard rent had been deposited with the Controller and has in fact been withdrawn by the Plaintiff.

The remainder of the case relates to the question whether the notice in December 1920 was a valid notice. That depends upon the construction to be placed upon sec. 11, sub-sec. (5). That sub-section provides: "No tenant shall be entitled to the benefit of this section in respect of any premises, unless within three months of the date of the commencement of this Act he has paid all arrears of rent due by him in respect of the said premises, and also unless he pays the rent due by him to the full extent allowable by this Act within the time fixed in the contract with his landlord, or, in the absence of any such contract, by the fifteenth day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable."

It is to be noticed that this section deals with the granting of an order or a decree for recovery of possession only.

The point arises in this way : As I have already mentioned, the amount of the standard rent for May and June was not tendered to the landlord until the 21st July 1920 and was not paid to the Rent Controller until the 23rd of July 1920, and it is not denied that that was not paid within the time specified by the Act. But the learned Advocate for the Appellants presented an ingenious argument based upon sub-sec. (5) of sec. 11 which was to this effect. He argued that sub-sec. (5) was intended to give a tenant three months within which he might pay the arrears of rent, and that such arrears would include not only any arrears of rent, which might be due at the time the Act came into force, but also any arrears of standard rent which might become due after the Act came into force.

In my judgment this argument ought not to be accepted. Having regard to the words used in the sub-section and to the framing of the sub-section, I think it is clear that the intention was to give the tenant the benefit of the section, if he complied with two conditions : in the first place he must have paid any arrears of rent which might be due at the time of the passing of the Act within three months of the commencement of the Act ; and, secondly, he must pay the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act within the time fixed by the contract with his landlord and in the absence of any such contract by the 15th day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable.

In this case the Appellants did not pay the rent within the time fixed in the contract or by the 15th day of the month, which followed the months of May and June for which the rent was payable :

and, consequently, in my opinion, the Appellants were in default.

It is true that the Plaintiff did not act upon the default until the end of the year ; but he was within his rights in giving the notice in December 1920 which expired at the end of January 1921.

Consequently, after January 1921 the Appellants were trespassers and were no longer tenants, and they are liable to the Plaintiff for compensation for the wrongful use and occupation of the premises from the 1st of February 1921 to the 7th of December 1921.

The learned Judge awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 500 per month. He based his judgment to a large extent upon the evidence given by Mr. Shroshree.

It was argued on behalf of the Appellants that the Plaintiff's case was that he wanted the premises in order that he might pull them down and re-build ; that he abandoned that intention of his own accord and sold the premises ; that although he alleged that he had suffered loss, he gave no proof of the alleged loss and therefore that the most the Plaintiff could recover would be such rent as the Plaintiff could have recovered from a tenant during those months ; that having regard to the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act the Plaintiff could not have recovered from any tenant more than the standard rent in respect of the premises and that as the Appellants had in fact paid to the Controller the standard rent for this period and the Plaintiff had received the same, the Plaintiff was not entitled to any damages at all.

On the other hand, it was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that the learned Judge was right in awarding damages at the rate of Rs. 500 per month.

I agree with the learned Judge's decision as to the amount of the damages although I base my judgment on grounds somewhat different to those stated by the learned Judge.

The Plaintiff can only recover such damages as flow naturally from the breach of duty or breach of contract in the ordinary and usual course of things.

The evidence was that the Appellants had willingly agreed to pay Rs. 500 a month for the premises in 1919. Further they desired to take a lease for three years at the rate of Rs. 500 per month. The evidence further shows that the Appellants tried to find other premises but they could not get any other suitable premises at a lower rent than Rs. 500 a month.

Now, after January 1921, as I have already said, they were no longer tenants and they were not in a position to take advantage of the Calcutta Rent Act—they were wrong-doers.

In these circumstances it is not unreasonable to hold that Rs. 500 a month was a fair compensation for the use and occupation of the premises by the Defendants after January 1921.

It was not for the Plaintiff to prove what would have been the standard rent if an application had been made to the Controller.

The premises are in an important quarter of the town and the Defendants, before the Rent Act came into operation, were willing to pay Rs. 500 per month. Prima facie therefore it is not open to the Defendants to allege that such amount was not a fair rent for a tenant to pay. If an application had been made to the Rent Controller he might have fixed the standard rent at less than Rs. 500 per month. On the other hand, he might have fixed it at Rs. 500 a month.

No application was made and that question was never decided.

It has therefore not been proved what the standard rent would have been if the matter had come before the Controller.

In the absence of any such decision and upon the evidence in the case, I am not satisfied that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the damages for the wrongful use and occupation of the premises by the Defendants should be assessed on the basis of Rs. 500 a month.

The result is that the sum of Rs. 4,500 decreed as rent will be reduced to Rs. 1,485 making the total amount of the decree Rs. 6,601-10-6.

As regards costs, we are of opinion that the Appellants should have the general costs of the appeal and the costs of one day's hearing. We do not interfere with the order of the learned Judge as regards costs.

The money received from the Rent Controller by the Respondents will be taken as part satisfaction of the decree and satisfaction will be entered to that extent.

BUCKLAND, J.—I will first deal with the point whether the notice to quit was a valid notice. For this purpose, though I shall give my reasons later, I may say at once that, in my opinion, the amount of rent which the Appellant Company had to pay was the amount which they actually deposited with the Rent Controller month by month and it is on this basis that I will deal with the question as to the notice to quit. The Appellant Company therefore were entitled to the benefit of sec. 11 of the Act provided they paid that amount either to the landlord by the fifteenth day of the month next following that for which it was payable, or, if refused by the landlord, deposited it with the Rent Controller under sub-sec. (4). The difficulty in which the Appellant Company find themselves is that as regards the rent for May 1920 they deposited it out of time and by reason of that they are precluded from claiming the benefit of the section.

The argument that the "arrears" referred to in sub-sec. (5) includes rent in arrear during the first three months after the Act came into force, and payable in respect of those months leads to the difficulty that in regard to those three months, if that construction were adopted, there would be two inconsistent provisions as to the payment of rent, namely, that provided in the first part of sub-sec. (5) that the tenant shall have three months within which to pay such rent and that provided by the latter part that he must pay or deposit his rent month by month.

The correct construction of this sub-section, in my opinion, is that the "arrears" referred to are arrears due at the time when the Act comes into force and that the first part has nothing to do with rent which accrues due month by month after that date.

The next question is as to the amount of rent to which the Plaintiff was entitled for the period between the 1st of May 1920 and the 31st of January 1921. This involves consideration of various sections of the Calcutta Rent Act, an Act of faulty construction which renders it difficult of interpretation.

The contention of the Plaintiff, stated briefly, is that unless the standard rent has been fixed by the Controller the tenant is not entitled to take advantage of the provisions of the Act, for, in fact no rent has been fixed by the Controller as standard rent of the premises in suit.

For the Defendant Company, on the other hand, it has been argued that, though not necessarily in all cases but probably in the majority of cases and certainly in this case, there is a standard rent which, so to speak, attached to property from the moment that the Calcutta Rent Act came into force irrespective of any application made to or order passed by the Rent Controller under the Act, and that, subject to what I shall have to say presently, that is the amount which the tenant must pay or deposit.

"Standard rent" is defined in sec. 2 (f) as the rent at which the premises were let on the first day of November 1918, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let between the first day of November 1915 and the first day of November 1918, plus ten per cent. on such rent in either case.

The sub-section furnishes two more definitions of which the second may be ignored. It has no application to the present case.

The third definition involves reference to sec. 15 and provides that in the cases specified in sec. 15 the "standard rent" is the rent fixed by the Controller. Now, in order to ascertain what those cases are, for it is in those cases alone that rent fixed by the Controller is "standard rent" according to the definition, one must look at sec. 15 (3). The first two sub-sections have nothing to do with this matter, sub-sec. (3) is sub-divided into five cases each involving different sets of circumstances, none of which has any application to the present case. If it had been intended that standard rent should only be such rent as the Rent Controller has fixed, and that in the circumstances contemplated by sec. 2 (f) (1) all that the Rent Controller would have to do would be to ascertain the rent on the date material thereunder and add ten per cent., it would have been more correct to have included such a case among the cases under sec. 15 (3) and eliminated sec. 2 (f) (1) altogether. But, inasmuch as the case with which we have to deal is not one of those mentioned in sec. 15 (3) and consequently is not one in which the Rent Controller may fix the standard rent thereunder, it follows that under the definition clause the action of the Rent Controller in fixing the standard rent should be excluded.

I do not, however, altogether exclude the operation of sec. 15 (1) under which the Controller may certify the standard rent, though he fixes it in appropriate cases under sec. 15 (3). It may be that in a case to which sec. 2 (f) (1) applies it is open to a party to apply to the Controller for a certificate. This point does not arise in this case but I mention it lest the juxtaposition of these two sub-sections should lead to the suggestion that in a case to which sec. 2 (f) (1) applies it is the duty of the party interested in having it done to make an application to the Rent Controller under sec. 15 (1), even if sec. 15 (3) has no application.

In my opinion, the contention of learned Counsel for the Appellant Company is the correct one and where the conditions contemplated by sub-sec. 2 (f) (1) exist, the standard rent follows as a matter of course, subject, however, to this that it is always open to a landlord or a tenant to make an application to the Rent Controller under sec. 15 (3) if he can bring the matter within its several provisions. Upon the Rent Controller so fixing the rent then there is another standard rent for the premises as defined by the Act. This leads to the curious result that there may be a standard rent as defined by sec. 2 (f) (1) and a standard rent as defined by sec. 2 (f) (3), both simultaneously applicable to the same premises. There is, however, no practical difficulty because when you come to apply other provisions of the Act and, in particular, sec. 4 (1) or sec. 11 (5), the landlord would be entitled to the benefit of whichever standard rent might be the higher. In this view, the amount which the Plaintiff was entitled to recover from the Defendant Company was the amount for which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 plus ten per cent. There is no question as to what that amount was and, in my opinion, the judgment and decree of the learned Judge should to this extent be modified.

The learned Judge has relied upon an earlier judgment of mine in Jetha Bhulchand v. Grace (1). That is not an authority for the proposition that if standard rent has not been fixed by the Controller, the tenant must pay the agreed rent to the landlord or deposit it with the Controller. In that case according to my recollection, which the report confirms, there was no competition as between the standard rent and the agreed rent. The only question was whether the tenant had paid or deposited his rent in time. I am not sure that the learned Judge referred to the case on the question of amount, but without explanation it might be so interpreted and deemed to conflict with the opinion now expressed.

The last question is that of damages. I agree with the opinion expressed by the learned Chief Justice and have nothing to add.

I concur in the order to be made.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CUMING, J.—In the suit out of which

(1) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 699 (1896).

this appeal has arisen the Plaintiff who is the Appellant before this Court sued for a declaration that she had lakheraj and jamai right purchased at auction sale in respect of some 3 annas odd share left by her husband and that she was entitled to the 16 annas rent of the land in question and the Defendant had no right in respect of the land. She also asked for a perpetual injunction to restrain the Defendant from obstructing her in the realisation of the rents of this land. If it should be found that the Plaintiff was not in possession of the land then she sued to recover possession. Her case, as a perusal of the plaint will make quite clear, is that her husband bought the lakheraj right in the land in his own name and with his own money. Subsequent to this he purchased the tenants' right in the land on the 24th of February at a sale in execution of a decree in the name of the Defendant
No. 1, obtained a certificate of sale and in virtue of this sale certificate obtained possession of the property. Some of the land he kept in his own possession and the rest was let out to tenants. The kabuliyats were in the name of the Defendant
No. 1, because the sale certificate stood in his name. Umesh Chandra Mukherjee, the husband of the present Plaintiff, died leaving no son and the Defendant No. 1 taking advantage of this circumstance has persuaded the tenants not to pay rent to the Plaintiff. From this the Plaintiff realises that the Defendant intends to take possession of the property left by her husband and hence she has brought this suit asking that the Court will declare that she has lakheraj and jamai title purchased at auction sale of the 3 annas odd share left by her husband and also a declaration that she is entitled to the 16 annas share of the rent, that the Defendant has no title to the property and that her possession may be confirmed. If by any circumstance it be found that she is not in possession then she may recover possession. She also asked for an account from the Defendant of any rent that the Defendant might have realised from the tenants. The case of the Defendant No. 1 who alone has contested this case is that he is the real owner of the property and that sec. 66 (old sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code) is a bar to the suit.

The trial Court found that Defendant No. 1 was the benamdar of the husband of the Plaintiff, that the Plaintiff had been in possession from the date of purchase up to the institution of the suit, and that the Defendant was liable to render accounts to the Plaintiff. He found that the Plaintiff's suit was not barred by the provisions of sec. 66 and ordered that her jamai title and nishkar title to the lands in suit should be declared. The Defendant was restrained from interfering with her possession. He was also to render her accounts.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the District Court. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiff had been dispossessed from the land before the suit and was not now in possession, that the Defendant was the benamdar of the Plaintiff's husband, that sec. 66 was a bar to the suit and ordered that the suit of the Plaintiff so far as it related to jamai right of the Plaintiff would be dismissed.

The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Her case, if I have understood it rightly, is as follows :—

1. That the lower Court has wrongly found that she is not in possession and as she is in possession she is entitled to maintain a suit for confirmation of possession. In support of this contention she relies on the case of Sasti Charan v. Annapurna (1).

2. That by payment of rent to the landlord a new tenancy has been created in her favour and that she has a title independent of the purchase by her husband in the name of the Defendant and to this title the provisions of sec. 66 are not a bar.

3. That the purchases made by the Defendant of the tenancy rights in 1915-16 were made by the Defendant as her agent and hence she is entitled to a declaration of her tenancy under these purchases.

Now it seems to me on the facts as found by the learned Subordinate Judge the Plaintiff's case must fail and that sec. 66 is a bar to her suit.

This suit is governed by the old Code and sec. 317 of that Code, which corresponds to sec. 66 of the present Code, is as follows :—

"No suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims."

Now the case of the Plaintiff as made in her plaint is clearly this, that the property was purchased by her husband in the benami of the Defendant No. 1. It is nothing else, although the learned Advocate for the Appellant has spent a day and a half in trying to persuade us that the case of the Plaintiff was that she had an independent title by paying rent to the zemindar. Reading the section as it stands it is quite immaterial whether the Plaintiff was or was not in possession at the time of the suit. It seems to me that a declaratory suit equally with a suit to recover possession comes within the mischief of the section.

The Plaintiff has relied on the case of Sasti Charan v. Annapurna (1) and asks us to hold that if she is in possession then sec. 66 (317) is no bar to her suit. With due respect to the learned Judges it is very difficult to reconcile this decision with the plain words of the statute. The learned Judges remark: "Sec. 317 does not make all benami transactions invalid; nor read with sec. 316 does it confer upon the ostensible purchaser a title as against the real purchaser. It merely declares that a suit shall not be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that he was only the ostensible purchaser. The ostensible purchaser could not insist on his certified title to recover from the real owner in possession. If therefore the Defendant sets up the sale certificate as an answer to the Plaintiff's case, there is nothing to prevent the Court from going into the question whether that sale certificate did or did not confer a valid title upon the Defendant as against the Plaintiff. It is not a case in which the Plaintiff relying on a sale certificate seeks to obtain a decree for possession against the ostensible purchaser. Resting as it does on an existing possession, we do not think that it is a suit of the nature prohibited by sec. 317 (present sec. 66)."

If I understand the learned Judges aright they would seem to hold that in a suit for confirmation of possession the Plaintiff has not to prove his title, for obviously sec. 66 would be a bar to his maintaining a title based on a benami purchase. Neither do I understand what is meant by a title resting on existing possession. Surely it is not sufficient for a person asking for confirmation of possession to say: "I am in possession; prove that I have no title." As far as I am aware this case stands alone. It has never been followed but has been dissented from. See the case of Hanuman Prosad Thakur v. Jadunandan (2), where Coxe, J., points out that if accepted as good law it would practically repeal the whole section. See also the case of Bishan Dayal v. Ghaziuddin (3). The learned Judge, Strachey, C. J., in considering the case of Sasti Charan v. Annapurna (1) remarks that if that case holds that sec. 317 only applies when the Plaintiff being out of possession seeks to recover possession and can never apply to a suit by a Plaintiff in possession for a declaration that the certified purchaser out of possession is not the real purchaser, he cannot agree with that. I am myself of opinion that it is immaterial whether the Plaintiff is in possession and seeks a confirmation of possession or whether he is out of possession and seeks to recover possession. In either case sec. 66 applies.

The Appellant seems also to have attempted somewhat faintly to make out that the property was conveyed to her husband by his being put in possession after the purchase. How this could give the Plaintiff any title in the absence of a conveyance as required by the Transfer of Property Act, I admit I do not understand.

(2) The next argument advanced by the Appellant is that she or rather her husband acquired a title independent of her purchase by paying rent to the zemindar. I must admit that this argument was put forward in a somewhat shadowy form. I presume that the learned Advocate meant that she or rather her husband had been recognised by the zemindar. Otherwise I do not understand how any title could be acquired by the mere payment of rent. In order to establish or to attempt to establish this part of his case the learned Advocate was obliged to take us through a large portion of the evidence of the case. The mere necessity for doing this made it at once evident that this had never formed any part of the case of the Appellant in either of the Courts below.

It was perfectly obvious that this had never formed any part of the case of the Appellant in the lower Courts and it is somewhat difficult to imagine how the learned Advocate for the Appellant could have thought that he would be allowed for the first time in second appeal to make out a case which depended on findings of facts which had never been even suggested in the lower Courts.

(3) The Appellant lastly attempted to argue that the purchases made by the Defendant of certain tenancies as the result of certain decrees obtained in 1915 and 1916 were made by the Defendant as the agent of the Plaintiff.

Here again the same difficulty confronts us, viz., that this case that these purchases were made by the Defendant as the agent of the Plaintiff finds no place in the case of the Plaintiff either in her plaint or in the case as presented to the lower Courts. It is obviously a question of fact and cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. In para. 7 of the plaint the Plaintiff distinctly sets out that after the death of her husband her son-in-law managed her properties. It is not sufficient to say that a person is an agent. It is necessary to set out what is the scope of the agency in order to determine whether any particular act was done by the person as an agent or not and for this purpose a definite case would have to be made out. The only suggestion in the plaint is that the Defendant looked after the suits of the Plaintiff. There is no suggestion that it was any part of his duty to purchase properties on behalf of the Plaintiff. The case of Ganga Buksh v.

Rudar Singh (4) may be referred to in this connexion.

The result is that the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

The plaint in this case was framed in open disregard of the provisions of sec. 66, C. P. C. The only ground upon which the bar might have been avoided was not taken in either of the Courts below and in the result the Defendant retains and enjoys the fruits of his fraud which has been so clearly established. It is only to be hoped that this case will serve as an example for dissuading people from indulgence in the pernicious habit of creating benami title and in some measure further the object with which sec. 66, C. P. C., was enacted.

essed therefrom by order of Court by the Defendants claiming to possess the property on their own account and not on behalf of the judgment-debtor. The Plaintiffs, on coming to know that their tenants had wrongfully parted with the holding, brought a suit for ejectment more than one year after the order under Or. 21, r. 101, raising the question whether the tenants had a transferable or a non-transferable interest in the holding:

Held—That the suit was not barred under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

That the suit contemplated by r. 103 is a suit by a person who is kept out of possession of the property purchased in execution of the decree and claims possession under his auction-purchase. It does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person apart from his character as auction-purchaser may have against the Defendant. If a suit is not brought under r. 103 within the statutory period the right to bring a suit to establish the claim of the Plaintiff as auction-purchaser for possession of the property is lost. But if he has any other cause of action against the opposite party it cannot be said that this provision in the chapter relating to execution of decrees bars his suit based on such cause of action.

These were appeals against the orders of Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Howrah in Zillah Hooghly, dated the 5th of July 1923, reversing the orders of Babu Jotindra Nath Mukherjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Uluberia, dated the 28th of June 1921, and remanding the suit to his Court for trial on the merits.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Bijan Kumar Mukherjee for the Appellants.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu

Radhikaranjan Guha for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This case raises an interesting question which does not seem to have come up for consideration before. The facts are that the Plaintiffs-Respondents obtained a rent decree against the heirs of the tenant Gaganeswar Mondal and in execution of that decree purchased and took possession of the holding in suit. The Defendants thereupon alleging dispossession made an application under Or. 21, r. 100, C. P. C., for restoration of possession. On the 26th June 1917 order was passed in their favour under Or. 21, r. 101. The Plaintiffs instituted the present suit in May 1920. It is accordingly maintained by the Appellants that the suit is barred under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act, having been brought more than a year after the order under Or. 21, r. 101 was passed. The trial Court gave effect to this contention but the learned District Judge (sic) held that the Plaintiffs' suit is not barred under the above article of the Limitation Act. In this appeal the Appellant argues on the same line as adopted by the learned Munsif. What happened was this : The Plaintiffs as decree-holders auction-purchasers took possession of the holding which they purchased in execution of the decree but were dispossessed therefrom by order of Court by the Defendants claiming to possess the property on their own account and not on behalf of the judgment-debtor. The Plaintiffs thereupon became aware that their tenants had parted with the holding wrongfully and brought the present suit for ejectment. The question raised in the suit is whether the tenants had a transferable or a non-transferable interest in the holding.

AMBIQA CHARAN BAKTA v. RAM PROSAD CHATTERJEE.

Or. 21, r. 100 contemplates a case where a person has been dispossessed by an auction-purchaser taking possession of the property through the help of the Court. He then complains to the Court of such dispossession and the Court after making a summary investigation, if it holds that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account and not on account of the judgment-debtor, directs under r. 101 that possession be given back to the applicant. The party against whom this order is passed may then institute a suit under Or. 21, r. 103 to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property. Reading these sections together it cannot be questioned that the suit contemplated by r. 103 is a suit by a person who is kept out of possession of the property purchased in execution of the decree and claims possession under his auction-purchase. It does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person apart from his character as auction-purchaser may have against the Defendant. If a suit is not brought under r. 103 within the statutory period the right to bring a suit to establish the claim of the Plaintiff as auction-purchaser for possession of the property is lost. But if he has any other cause of action against the Opposite Party, it cannot be said that this provision in the chapter relating to execution of decrees bars his suit based on such cause of action. In the present case the suit is brought by the Plaintiffs not in their character as auction-purchasers but as landlords. In the plaint, the cause of action in the suit is based not on the adverse decision against them in proceedings under r. 100, but on the transfer by the tenants of their non-transferable occupancy holding, the information of which he got during the course of the execution proceedings. The causes of action of the two suits, one under r. 103 and another as brought by the Plaintiffs, must therefore be different. In a suit under r. 103, the cause of action must be the adverse decision passed under r. 101. But the present suit is based upon a different state of facts. The cause of action is not the loss of possession by the Defendants from the Plaintiffs in connection with the execution proceedings but the fact that the tenants had unlawfully transferred a non-transferable occupancy holding to the Defendants and hence the holding is treated as abandoned under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the landlords are therefore entitled to possession of the holding which the Defendants are in possession of as trespassers. But it is argued by the learned vakil for the Appellants that under sec. 22, Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlords having purchased the holding in execution of the rent decree the tenancy got merged in the landlords' superior interest and therefore the only remedy the landlords now have is to proceed as auction-purchasers under Or. 21, r. 103, their character as landlords having been lost by virtue of the purchase of the holding. We do not think that this contention is right. It is the case of the Defendants that the tenants had a transferable occupancy holding. It further appears that the Defendants are in possession of the land for more than 12 years. He accordingly contends that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to possession because the tenants had a transferable interest in the holding and that the Defendants have acquired the rights of a tenant in it. The present suit brought by the Plaintiffs is totally unconnected with the execution proceedings. It seems that the Plaintiffs have abandoned all their right in the execution sale, it having been found against them that the Defendants are entitled to immediate possession. In these circumstances we do not think that the present suit is barred under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act.

The appeals accordingly fail and are dismissed with costs—two gold mohurs in each case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 374—Reference to High Court for confirmation of death sentence—Duty of High Court to be satisfied on evidence as to the correctness of the finding of the jury—Identification test, held during trial, propriety of.

In a reference under sec. 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for confirmation of a sentence of death passed by a Sessions Judge, the High Court must be satisfied that the finding of fact arrived at by the jury is justified on the evidence on the record.

The High Court came to a contrary view on the examination of the evidence and acquitted the accused.

Propriety of identification test held during trial commented on by MUKERJI, J.

This was a reference under sec. 374, Cr. P. C., by the Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj (W. H. Carter, Esq.), dated the 27th September 1924, for confirmation of the sentence of death passed by him on the accused.

The accused also preferred an appeal from the said sentence.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendra Narain Bhattacharja for the Accused.

Mr. Khundkar for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—Arshed Ali has been found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the jury on the charge of abetment of murder. He has been sentenced by the Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj to death under sec. 302 read with sec. 109 of the Indian Penal Code. Under sec. 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the proceedings have been submitted to this Court for confirmation and the accused has also preferred an appeal against his conviction.

The facts according to the case for the prosecution are as follows :—

Lalsom Bibi, the principal witness in this case, has lived as the wife of five men. To how many of them she was legally married is not clear, but her marriage to the Appellant Arshed Ali who was the fourth of her so-called husbands was certainly bigamous as it took place during the life-time of the third Abdul Hussain who had not divorced her. After living with the Appellant for a few months she left him and went to live in her father's bari. She was then one month pregnant. In Magh last she went through a form of nika marriage with the deceased Sher Ali. This enraged Arshed Ali and twice in the months of Falgoon and Chaitra, Javed Ali who is Arshed Ali's dharma-bhai asked Lalsom to return to Arshed Ali and threatened her when she refused to do so. On the night of the 10th April (28th Chaitra) Sher Ali, Lalsom and her three children were sleeping in her hut. At a little before midnight

ARSHED ALI v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Lalsom woke up hearing the noise of a scuffle. She heard Javed Ali, whose voice she recognised, say "Let me go." She got up to light a lamp and then heard Arshed Ali saying "Javed Ali, is the deed done." By the light of the lamp she saw that Sher Ali's viscera were protruding from a wound in his stomach and another wound on the left side of his chest. Her cries brought several neighbours to the scene and both Sher Ali and Lalsom told them that they had recognised Javed Ali and Arshed Ali by their voices.

Sher Ali was taken by boat to Patuakhali, the Sub-Divisional headquarter, where he arrived at about 11 A.M. He was taken to the hospital and there his statement was recorded by an Honorary Magistrate from 3-30 to 4-10 P.M. He said that he had been wounded by Javed Ali and Arshed Ali and that Javed Ali inflicted the wound with a dao. He also stated that he was wounded because he married Arshed Ali's wife. He died before sunset that afternoon. The doctor who held the post mortem examination found three incised wounds on the body, of which two were homicidal. In his opinion death was due to shock and hæmorrhage from these two wounds.

That Sher Ali was murdered on the night of the 10th April has been clearly proved. Whether the Appellant before us was guilty of abetting this murder depends on the credibility of the evidence that he was recognised by his voice. Though the jury have unanimously convicted him, this being a reference under sec. 374, Cr. P. C., we must be satisfied that their finding of fact is justified by the evidence on the record. After full consideration we are compelled to hold that there are several points in the case which make it unsafe to rely on this evidence. We also find that there has been positive misdirection on one important piece of evidence in the case in addition to non-direction by reason of the learned Judge having omitted to draw the attention of the jury to several points which throw doubt on the truth of the case for the prosecution.

In his charge to the jury the learned Sessions Judge has said: "On Wednesday, the 27th Chaitra (9th April) Arshed Ali was seen in Kalagachia village which adjoins Kewalumia walking towards the bari of Javed Ali." But the evidence is that Arshed Ali was seen in the neighbourhood not on the Wednesday but on the Thursday afternoon. The fact of the case for the prosecution rests on a statement alleged to have been made by Sher Gazi and is supported by the evidence of his brother Mahomed Gazi who deposed that Sher Gazi said he had seen Arshed Ali on the previous afternoon. That the expression "the previous afternoon" cannot mean the afternoon of the previous day is clear from the statement of Lalsom Bibi in the first information to the effect that her husband had told her in the afternoon of the day of occurrence that when he returned after noon of that day he saw Arshed Ali and Javed Ali. This is a very serious misdirection since it was proved by witnesses who were examined by the Court to test the accused's plea of alibi, that he was present at Patuakhali as an accused in a case which was the last heard on the 10th April. Though this might not have prevented him being present at the murder he could not possibly have been at Kalagachia at the time that is Sher Ali said that he saw him.

The case against this accused depends solely on the recognition of his voice by Sher Ali and Lalsom Bibi. It is certainly suspicious that no mention of this fact was made to anyone outside the village before the 18th of April when Lalsom Bibi's first information was recorded. Though the chowkidar Adam Ali went to the Amtali Police Station the morning after the occurrence, nothing was recorded there. The explanation given is that it was thought that information would be taken at Patuakhali. We think it unlikely that no entry would have been made even in the station diary if the chowkidar had then asserted that the accused had been recognised by their voices at the time of occurrence. The statement of Sher Ali recorded by the Honorary Magistrate contains no mention of how Javed Ali and Arshed Ali were recognised, though both are named.

It is difficult to rely absolutely on the statements of the deceased and his wife since they are clearly untruthful on one important point, the period that elapsed between Lalsom Bibi leaving Arshed Ali and her marriage to Sher Ali. Lalsom Bibi's evidence is that she married Arshed Ali 4 years ago and after living with him 4 months she went to live at her father's house. Sher Ali stated to the Honorary Magistrate that she was at her father's bari for about 4 years. But the age of the child of which Lalsom Bibi says the accused is the father, is inconsistent with her having lived apart from the accused for as long as two years. If the accused had raised no objection to Lalsom Bibi leaving him for even two years there is no reason why he should have committed this murder. Whatever the truth may be we have no doubt that there was good reason to suspect the accused and that the true story of the ill-feeling between the parties has been concealed.

There are other reasons besides the delay in informing the authorities which make us suspect the truth of the story of recognition, apart from the question as to how far such recognition can support the conviction. It is most improbable that when a murder is being committed the murderer's companion should call to him by name. This suggests that the actual words that may have been heard, have been altered to strengthen the case against Javed Ali who is absconding.

Lalsom Bibi's evidence is contradictory on some material points. She said she had no talk with her husband before he made the statement to the neighbours and that when she lit the lamp her husband was senseless and he came to after the neighbours came. Then in cross-examination she said: "It is a fact that before any neighbours came up my husband told me he recognised Javed Ali and Arshed Ali, he told me this while I was lighting the lamp." Also in her deposition she said that her husband said "o ma" before any statements were made by the assailants, but when questioned by a juror as to the order of events she places this cry of "o ma" last of all. The evidence of the neighbours who came afterwards is not free from discrepancies. It is noticeable that when Ibrahim called to the chowkidar he spoke of some one unknown having committed the murder though according to the evidence he had then heard the story of recognition. There are also important discrepancies as to whether Lalsom Bibi said anything that night. The deceased's brother's account of a conversation with the deceased is very significant. He says that the deceased gave three reasons for accusing Javed Ali and Arshed Ali, (i) that he had no other enemies, (ii) that he saw Arshed Ali in the afternoon, (iii) that he had recognised their voices.

We think that the real reason for the accusation of these men was the first and that the third reason on which the case now rests is as unreliable as the second has been proved to be.

For these reasons we must hold that the guilt of the accused Arshed Ali has not been proved. We refuse to confirm the sentence of death passed on him. We allow his appeal and set aside his conviction and sentence and acquit him of the charge on which he was tried and direct that he be released.

MUKERJI, J.—I entirely agree. I only wish to add a few words as regards the identification test that was held in the course of the trial in this case. The matter, however, is not of much importance in the present case, inasmuch as the witness who was subjected to this test was for sometime the wife of the accused, who was sought to be identified. It is not reasonable to expect that she would have failed to identify the accused in any case. What happened in this case was this:—Lalsom Bibi was examined as a witness on behalf of the prosecution; and after her examination was over, with the permission of the accused and his pleader, the identification test of the accused's voice was held, the accused being mixed up with 7 other men. The accused was actually numbered six on the file, and his voice was correctly identified by Lalsom Bibi as the 6th voice. Personally I have always entertained grave doubts as to the propriety of such a test being adopted during the trial. It makes no difference that in the present case it was held with the permission of the accused and his pleader; for a request in a matter of this description is always very embarrassing to the detence. There is no warrant for this procedure in the statute and it is likely to lend spurious weight to the testimony which should be available for the purposes of a criminal trial.

Alluvion and diluvion—Reg. XI of 1825, sec. 2—Customary boundary between estates proved to be channel of river—Shifting of course of river through overflow into it of another river—Custom, if applies in such a case—Hearsay evidence, when admissible to prove custom.

After the existence of a custom for some years has been proved by direct evidence, it can only, as a rule, be shown to be immemorial by hearsay evidence and it is for this reason that such evidence is allowable as an exception to the general rule.

Where it was proved that by custom the channel of the intervening river was to be the constant boundary of two estates, whatever changes might take place in the course of the river by encroachment on one side and accession on the other:

Held—That the fact that the shifting of the course of the river was due to the overflow of another river into it did not make any difference in the applicability of the custom.

This was an appeal (No. 126 of 1922) from a judgment and decree, dated the 21st March 1919, of the High Court at Patna, which affirmed a decree, dated the 23rd December 1913, of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr.

RAJA RAJENDRA NARAIN DHANJ DEO v. KUMAR GANGANANDA SINGH: 7 :

The suit was brought by the Respondents for possession of about 700 bighas of alluvial land which was in the possession of Raja Rajendra Narain Dhanj Deo.

The lands in question were claimed by the Plaintiff as being reformatio in situ of their village Mansi.

The Defendant-Appellant was the owner of Rahimpur. This village lies to the south of the river Gandak while Mansi lies to the north.

The river Ganges which flows to the south of the Gandak and some distance from it encroached upon that river in the year 1899 but receded in the following year.

The disputed lands appeared to the south of the Gandak between 1899 and 1903 and were taken possession of by the Appellant who contended that according to immemorial usage the Gandak had been the boundary between the parties, and claimed the right to remain in possession according to the mid-stream rule and the provision of sec. 2 of Reg. XI of 1825.

The Subordinate Judge found that the disputed lands lay to the south of the Gandak but negatived the custom alleged by the Defendant and made a decree for the Plaintiff. The High Court found in favour of the custom but held that the disputed lands were the result of the alluvion and diluvion of the Ganges to which the local custom was inapplicable.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and S. Hyam for the Appellant.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by:-

LORD CARSON.—The Defendant-Appellant is the owner of Mauza Rahimpur and the Plaintiffs-Respondents are the owners of Mauza Mansi in Pergana Farkia. The river Gandak or Bari Gandak flows between the two villages, Mauza Mansi being situated on its northern side, and Mauza Rahimpur on its southern side. The river Ganges flows at some distance to the south of the Gandak. In 1899 the Ganges began its encroachment northwards and ultimately joined with the Gandak, and by the combined action of the two rivers certain of the lands which had formed part of the Mauza Mansi were "diluviated," i.e., the surface soil (the cultivable soil) was wholly washed away. In course of time, however, the waters receded and about 589 bighas of the land, including the lands in question in this action, gradually re-appeared towards the south in 1906, and by degrees the land became hard and firm soil, capable of being cultivated in the usual manner. The Appellant took possession of the said lands on the ground that by immemorial custom the middle line of the bed of the Gandak formed the boundary line between Mansi and Rahimpur, and that owing to the change in the course of the Gandak the land which had re-appeared was now on the southern side of the bed of the said river and belonged to the Appellant as owner of the Mauza of Rahimpur. Magisterial proceedings ensued, and the possession taken by the Appellant was protected by an order made on the 14th December 1908 under the Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 145. An appeal against the said order was rejected on the 21st May 1909. The present action was then brought by the Plaintiffs against the Appellant and others who were in possession of the said lands, asking for a declaration that they belonged to Mauza Mansi and were the property of the Plaintiffs. The contention raised by the Appellant-Defendant is very clearly stated by the Subordinate Judge before whom the suit came for trial:-

RAJA RAJENDRA NARAIN DHANJ DEO v. KUMAR GANGANANDA SINGH.

"The Defendant's contention," says the learned Judge, "is that whatever alterations may take place in the course of the Gandak and whatever shiftings may occur therein the main channel of the Gandak forms the constant boundary of Mansas to its north and south by virtue of a clear, and definite and immemorial usage, custom or usage. So the disputed land which is just to the south of the present flowing Gandak forms a part and parcel of Rahimpur and becomes the property of the Rahimpur Malik, the Defendant No. 1."

The learned Subordinate Judge found as a fact and his finding has not been challenged that—

"the stream to the north of the disputed land is the stream of the Bari Gandak and it is a continuation of the Bari Gandak, which is just to the west of Mansi, and it has fallen into the Ganges near about Gogri after taking a wandering course near the disputed land."

The Subordinate Judge, however, decided upon the evidence, which will be dealt with later, against the Appellant-Defendant upon the question of the custom alleged holding—

"that the flowing Gandak is not the constant boundary of Mansi and Rahimpur and that no such custom has been proved to exist."

In the result he entered judgment for the Plaintiffs for recovery of the said lands.

From this judgment the Defendant-Appellant appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna, who, in the result, affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, making certain modifications and directions with a view to ascertaining the exact area to be delivered up.

The judgment, however, of the High Court was based on entirely different considerations from those put forward by the Subordinate Judge. The learned Judges of the High Court did not agree with the Subordinate Judge that no custom or usage had been proved. As some argument has been addressed to the Board to show that the High Court had not found the custom proved, it is necessary to set out the words upon this point used by Mr. Justice Roe, who delivered the judgment of the Court:—

"On a consideration of the Revenue Survey maps of 1827 and 1846, the Gangetic survey of 1865, and the Cadastral survey of 1887, it appears to me to be certain that there is, if not a custom of Pargana Farkia, at any rate a general usage whereby in lands reformed by a gradual accretion on one bank of the Gandak and cut away from the other bank by diluvion the ownership of the land so accreted goes with the ownership of the bank. . . . Now we may concede for the purpose of the argument in his case that the custom is precisely stated by Mr. Aguilar, and I myself would go further and say that upon the whole of the evidence of the Plaintiff's witnesses it is certain that where lands are washed away and reformed gradually there is a general usage upon the banks of the Gandak in this region whereby the inhabitants of one village do not cross the river to cultivate lands upon the other side, etc."

The learned Judges, however, held that the establishment of such a custom was no defence to the present suit:—

"The lands," they said, "have not been diluviated by the Gandak and they have not been recovered from the Gandak. They were washed away by the Ganges, and have been recovered from the Ganges, and this is clearly stated in paras. 4, 5 and 6 of the plaint, I cannot see that a custom which regulates only questions of alluvion and diluvion by the Gandak can be applied to alluvion and diluvion by the Ganges."

The defence of the Appellant-Defendant under the custom was based upon sec. 2 of Reg. XI of 1825, which is in the following terms:—

"Whenever any clear and definite usage of shekust pywast respecting the disjunction and junction of land by the encroachment or recess of a river may have been immemorially established, for determining the rights of the proprietors of two or more contiguous estates divided by a river (such as that the main channel of the river dividing the estates shall be the constant boundary between them, whatever changes may take place in the course of the river, by encroachment on one side and accession on the other), the usage so established shall govern the decision of all claims and disputes relative to alluvial land between the parties whose estates may be liable to such usage."

Assuming as the High Court did that the custom alleged was proved, their Lordships can see no reason for refusing to give effect to this rule because the conditions which arose in the present case were brought about by the overflow of the Ganges into the Gandak. Whatever may have been the cause of the river Gandak becoming so swollen as to bring about the results already referred to, whether by floods or by the overflow of the Ganges into the Gandak, their Lordships cannot see anything in the regulation quoted which prevents the main stream of the Gandak continuing to be the boundary after the lands had been diluviated, nor do they think that such diluviation can be dissociated from the action of the Gandak.

The real question therefore remains : Was the custom proved? was the Subordinate Judge right in his finding that there was no such custom? or, was the High Court right in coming to the opposite conclusion, as in their Lordships' opinion they did? Their Lordships, having carefully considered the evidence, have come to the conclusion that the finding of the High Court in this respect was right. It is unnecessary again to refer to the surveys and other documentary evidence already quoted for the judgment of the High Court. As regards the verbal evidence, which consisted of a vast array of witnesses upon both sides, whilst as the High Court points out, upon the whole, even the Plaintiffs' witnesses support the alleged custom, their Lordships are of opinion that the evidence called for the Appellant-Defendant establishes it beyond any reasonable doubt.

The Subordinate Judge, who has analysed all the evidence most carefully, quotes the witnesses for the defence who had deposed to changes of land in very many cases, and on both banks of the river, by reason of a change in the course of the bed of the river when alluvial and diluvial occurrences similar to those in the present case had occurred. He then says :—

"The instances referred to above no doubt afford cogent evidence in proof of the usage. But there is no guarantee that the gaining and the losing proprietors have acquiesced in or recognised the changes, nor is there evidence that such a state of things has continued from time immemorial. The Defendant's witnesses have personal knowledge of the custom not extending over 20 years at the most, the rest is based on hearsay evidence."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge did not sufficiently consider the fact that if the changes deposed to had not been acquiesced in such want of acquiescence or recognition of the changes deposed to could easily have been tested, but in reality there was no serious challenge of the accuracy of the vast number of instances which were deposed to. It is also to be noted that the Subordinate Judge entirely omits to deal with the admission made as to the custom by the Plaintiffs' own witnesses. As to the date from which the custom is said to have prevailed, after the existence of the custom for some years has been proved by direct evidence, it can only, as a rule, be shown to be immemorial by hearsay evidence, and it is for this reason that such evidence is allowable as an exception to the general rule. It has already been pointed out, and indeed, the contrary has not been urged before the Board, that the Subordinate Judge has found that the lands in question are formed through the changes which have taken place to the south of the river Gandak, and that being so, and the custom having been proved, it follows that the claim of the Respondents to possession of the lands cannot be sustained. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, with costs, the decrees of both Courts set aside, and that the suit should be dismissed with costs.

Re : GOPALDAS AURORA,
ex parte, the Debtor.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), sec. 15—R. 74 of the Calcutta Insolvency Rules, 1910—Order of adjudication, whether discretionary—Account books of the debtor, if to be deposited with the Official Assignee before the adjudication order—“May” in sec. 15, if mandatory.

When the conditions laid down in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, are satisfied, a debtor upon his own petition is entitled to an order of adjudication as a matter of course. It is not the settled practice to hand over the account books of a debtor to the Official Assignee before the adjudication order is made. Such practice is not sanctioned by the rules.

name of Gopinath Pursottamdas presented a petition to the Registrar in Insolvency on 1st April 1925 for his adjudication through his attorney, with an affidavit saying that the books of account are not in his possession as the same were with a Receiver appointed in a partition suit. The petition was returned for alteration and addition and the Registrar also directed the Petitioner to file an affidavit setting out a list of books of account of the firm of Gopinath Pursottamdas that were in the possession of the Receiver appointed in suit No. 2910 of 1924 (being a suit for partition of the joint family properties and the assets of the joint business of Messrs. Gopinath Pursottamdas) which was pending before the High Court.

As directed as aforesaid a fresh petition was presented to the Registrar on 3rd April 1925 with the affidavit when the Registrar refused to pass any order either way unless the books of account were made over to the Official Assignee. On 6th April 1925 the said petition was presented to the Court and Buckland, J., ordered that the Registrar should deal with the application and should make out a statement of his reasons for refusal. On the same day the said petition was again presented by his attorney to the Registrar who again refused to entertain the application. The petition was again presented through Counsel to the Registrar. The Registrar still refused to entertain the petition and stated his reasons for refusal, the material portion of which is as follows :—

“ I did not see my way to make the order on the application as the account books of the firm were not made over to the Official Assignee. It has been the invariable practice of this Court since the year 1915 to insist upon the books of an insolvent, who is a trader, to be made over to the Official Assignee, before the adjudication order is passed [see judgment of Rankin, J., in Re Bhuramull Banka (3) and Re Joseph Perry (4)]. The reason for requiring the books of the insolvent to be made over to the Official Assignee is obvious. In the present case there ought to be no departure from the settled practice of this Court. The Official Assignee has a prior right to the custody of the books (see sec. 124).

"On the 2nd December last a suit was instituted in this Court by the infant cousin of the debtor against himself and two other cousins of his for partition of the joint estate. In para. 18 of the plaint it was stated that the debtor and his cousin Defendant No. 1 were managing the joint family affairs and carrying on the joint family business [see plaint in suit No. 2910 of 1924, Rangila Aurora v. Lachmichand Aurora]. That this is a collusive suit instituted with a view to defraud the creditors of the business would be apparent to anyone who cares to go through the proceedings. In that suit Mr. was appointed Receiver and he is said to be in possession of all the books of the business.

"Had I not settled the order of Ghose, J., passed in suit No. 2910 of 1924 on the 17th February last I would perhaps have been led to think that the suit was a bond fide one and that the Receiver was a stranger who had refused to part with the books?

"This is in reality an attempt to stay the hands of the creditors and to prevent them from proceeding against the debtor

Gopaldas Aurora, who was only a few days ago arrested and brought up before the Court in execution of a decree and at the same time to deprive the creditors of the benefit of the assets of the business and to investigate its affairs by withholding the books.

"I wish only to add that under sec. 15 (1) of the Act the making of an order of adjudication is at the discretion of the Court. If before making the order the Court requires the insolvent to comply with any requisition it is his duty to do so. In a case like this, the Court requires the debtor trader to make over his books to the Official Assignee as a condition precedent before passing an order and until that condition is fulfilled the insolvent is not entitled to the order he seeks.

"I decline to make an order of adjudication; the petition may be filed and if the debtor wants to appeal against my order under sec. 8 (2) (a) the order will be drawn up on a requisition being put in by his attorney."

On 8th April 1925 Buckland, J., gave liberty to the Petitioner to inspect the statements of the Registrar and to appeal if so advised. On 23rd April the appeal was heard by Buckland, J.

Mr. S. N. Bannerjee on behalf of the Applicant argued that a Petitioner insolvent is entitled to get an order for adjudication if he satisfies secs. 9, 10, 11, 14 and 15 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The word "may" in sec. 15 (1) means "must" as appears from r. 74 of the Insolvency Rules of the High Court which is in the following terms:—
"If the debtor files a petition the Court shall forthwith make an adjudication order thereon." Cited Chhatrapat Singh Dugar v. Kharag Singh (1). Mr.

Re: GOPALDAS AURORA.

S. C. Mitter in his judgment had referred to sec. 99 and r. 150. These rules having nothing to do with the matter, he was absolutely wrong. He refused to make an order as the account books of the firm had not been made over to the Official Assignee. There is no rule which compels the debtor to lodge the books of account with the Official Assignee.

Assuming that since 1915 there has been this practice before the Registrar Mr. Mitter, he is wrong in insisting on the books being filed before he makes an adjudication order. The books can only be filed after the adjudication order is made.

[BUCKLAND, J.—Why is the debtor applying personally and not the firm?]

Mr. Bannerjee.—It is a coparcenary business, there is no contractual relationship between the partners. It is a Mitakshara family business. The whole objection is with regard to the account books.

[BUCKLAND, J.—I am not much impressed with that objection of the Registrar in Insolvency.]

Mr. Bannerjee.—The whole family is not adjudicated. It is only the individual member that is adjudicated [refers to Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (2)]. The Registrar has said that the settled practice is to hand over the books of account before adjudication is made since the judgments in Re Bhuramull Banka (3) and Re Joseph Perry (4). Those two cases have no application here.

Act against an order of the Registrar in Insolvency refusing to adjudicate the Petitioner insolvent upon his own petition. That the matter is one with which the Registrar has been duly empowered to deal is not in question.

The petition is in form No. 7 to be found in the appendix of forms to the Insolvency Rules of this Court made under secs. 112 and 114 of the Act, and, as pointed out by learned Counsel, it contains averments which will bring the application within the relevant sections of the Act, and are therefore necessary for the purpose of obtaining the order.

Sec. 9 states that a debtor commits an act of insolvency :—“(f) if he petitions to be adjudged an insolvent.” Sec. 10 provides that subject to the conditions specified in the Act if a debtor commits an act of insolvency, he may present an insolvency petition and the Court may on such petition make an order adjudging him an insolvent. Any difficulty that might arise in combining this with sec. 9 (f) is avoided by the explanation to sec. 10, which says that the presentation of a petition by the debtor shall be deemed an act of insolvency within the meaning of the section. Consequently provided certain other conditions are fulfilled, the mere fact of the presentation of a petition for adjudication is enough on which to make the order.

Sec. 11 contains certain restrictions upon jurisdiction. The only part of the section to which I need refer is sub-sec. (b), under which the Court has no jurisdiction to make the order unless the debtor within a year before the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition has ordinarily resided or had a dwelling house or has carried on business either in person or through an agent within the limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the

Re: GOPALDAS AURORA.

Court. The petition in this case states that the Petitioner lately carried on a coparcenary business as a merchant under the name and style of Gopinath Pursottamdas at No. 113, Monahardas Katra, in Calcutta, and has for the greater part of the past 6 months ordinarily resided at 101, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

Further conditions which must be fulfilled are to be found in sec. 14, and to entitle him to present a petition, the debtor must either owe Rs. 500 or have been arrested and imprisoned in execution of the decree of a Court for the payment of money or an order of attachment in execution of such a decree must have been made and be subsisting against his property. The first condition is that which this Petitioner states has been fulfilled, for his petition says that he is unable to pay his debts, which exceed Rs. 500. That he must state under sec. 15, which goes on to provide that if the debtor proves that he is entitled to present the petition, which means that the necessary conditions obtain, the Court may thereupon make an order of adjudication, subject, however, to another Court having insolvency jurisdiction being that to which the application should preferably be made.

R. 74 of the Rules of this Court provides that where a petition is filed by a debtor, the Court shall forthwith make an adjudication order thereon, and the rule appears to contemplate that if the petition is in form in the sense that the Court has jurisdiction and the conditions prescribed by the Act have been fulfilled, the order shall go as a matter of course. This would appear to be in accordance with the view expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Chhatrapat Singh Dugar v. Kharag Singh Lachmiram (1). That was a case under the Provincial Insolvency Act, but for the present purpose no distinction need be drawn between that and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. It is pointed out in the judgment of the Board, which was delivered by the late Chief Justice of this Court, that the Act entitles a debtor to an order of adjudication when its conditions are satisfied. His Lordship continued:—

“ This does not depend on the Court's discretion, but is a statutory right; and a debtor who brings himself properly within the terms of the Act is not to be deprived of that right on so treacherous a ground of decision as an ‘ abuse of the process of the Court.’ ”

It appears that that was the ground upon which in that case the petition was refused both by the District Court of Murshidabad and by this Court on appeal. That is not the ground upon which the Registrar has dealt with this application, though he seems to have taken into consideration matters which, according to the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, are not relevant to his decision.

The Registrar has referred to sec. 99, which provides that any two or more persons being partners or any person carrying on business under a partnership name may take proceedings or be proceeded against under this Act in the name of the firm, and contains a further provision for disclosure of the names of the members of the firm. This is only an enabling section akin to Or. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, and does not purport to prescribe anything that is to be done or left undone in order to obtain an adjudication order where a debtor who is a member of a partnership firm or where the members of a partnership firm apply for an order of adjudication. But the Registrar, by his reference to r. 150 of the Rules of this Court seems to have regarded this as an insolvency petition filed on behalf of a firm of debtors. If that were the case, he would be correct in requiring under the rule that the Petitioner should state the names of the partners. Apparently his reason for having regarded it as though it were a petition filed on behalf of a firm is because the lists annexed to the petition are admittedly those of debts due by and outstandings due to the firm. This does not necessarily mean that the petition is made on behalf of a firm. Learned Counsel has said that there is no partnership firm and drawn my attention to the statement in the petition that the debtor was carrying on a coparcenary business, and submitted that there is no evidence of the existence of a contractual partnership to which the Act and rules refer. In any event, he has submitted that it would be open to a partner to apply to be adjudicated an insolvent and that in such a case he would be right in setting out the debts due by his firm, for the reason that under the ordinary law they would be debts for the full amount of which he would be personally liable. When the case is that of a coparcenary business and not a contractual partnership, he contends that the position is even more favourable to his client, for which proposition he relies upon Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (2).

I am disposed to think that this contention is correct, but as this appeal, like the application, is ex parte, I have not had the advantage of hearing the matter argued from the standpoint of any person interested in placing the contrary view before me, which may occur at a later stage of this case or even in other proceedings. Should such occasion arise, it may be necessary to reconsider the opinion which I have expressed.

The Registrar has also stated that it is the settled practice of this Court since the year 1915 to insist upon the books of an insolvent who is a trader being made over to the Official Assignee before the adjudication order is passed, and in support of that proposition he has referred to the judgments of my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin in Re: Bhuramull Banka (3) and in Re: Joseph Perry (4). If my learned brother's information in the latter case is correct and insolvency is regarded as a privilege in India, that may explain the readiness of persons desirous of availing themselves of the privilege to make over their books of account to the Official Assignee even before the privilege is conferred upon them. But where it is contended that there is no obligation to make over the books of account to the Official Assignee before the order is made, the matter assumes a different aspect. A practice founded upon the willingness of debtors cannot be regarded as being settled practice obligatory upon persons who do not wish to comply with it. There is no rule of the Court which so requires, and were such a rule made, it would be a matter for consideration whether such additional condition could be super-imposed upon the Act which does not demand it. The two judgments referred to by the Registrar do not, in my opinion, support the proposition for which they have been cited. Each case was one of a person who already had been adjudicated an insolvent. In Re: Joseph Perry (4), my learned brother merely referred to this matter incidentally, and I do not read his judgment as definitely holding that there is an obligation in law or practice on a debtor to hand over his books to the Official Assignee before the adjudication order is made. Both in that and in the other case cited, he was dealing with books withheld from the Official Assignee by an insolvent after adjudication which is a very different matter, and in my opinion there is nothing establishing that it is the duty of an unwilling debtor to hand over his books to the Official Assignee before he has been adjudicated an insolvent.

Lastly, the Registrar has referred to suit No. 2910 of 1924.

The Registrar may be perfectly right in the conclusions which he has drawn from the materials which he has examined in that case, or, on the other hand, it may be, as learned Counsel has stated, no doubt upon instructions, that the facts upon which the Registrar's observations are based are incorrect. It appears that the Registrar's knowledge was due to the circumstance that he happened to have settled an order of Mr. Justice Ghose in that suit in February last. It also appears to be purely fortuitous that the same officer was concerned with that order and this application, but so far as this application is concerned anything which the Registrar learnt in that connection must be regarded as extra-judicial and cannot be utilised as the foundation of his order. I must not, however, be taken as meaning that no reference whatever can be made to external matters, assuming of course that they are relevant, but if an order is to be founded upon them they should be duly brought to the notice of the parties and the parties given an opportunity of furnishing an explanation. I do not know whether that was done in this case; it may be that it was, but in any event the matters referred to have no relevancy upon this application, whatever use may be made of them by persons entitled to be heard at any subsequent stage of the proceedings.

The question of the adjudication of a debtor upon his own petition is a comparatively simple matter, and as has been pointed out by the Privy Council in the case cited, if the conditions of the Act are satisfied, the debtor is entitled to the order. All that need be done, therefore, upon a debtor's application is to see whether those conditions are fulfilled, and if so, to make the order. It may be that, in substance, though prematurely, the Registrar was perfectly correct in the view that he took of the matters to which he refers, but they can subsequently be brought to the notice of the Court, and if it should appear that the debtor had no right to apply for an order of adjudication, or that circumstances exist which would justify the Court in so doing, the Court has full power under sec. 21 to annul the adjudication order.

For the foregoing reasons, I set aside the order of the Registrar, dated the 6th April 1925, and the usual order of adjudication will be made.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
NO. 220 OF 1923.

GREVILS, J.	}	JORINA AKTAR KHATUN,
CUMING, J.		Defendant, Appellant,
1925,		v.
25, April.		HAFIZUDDIN KHAN,
		Plaintiff, Respondent.

Mahomedan law—Sunni Hanafi School—Divorce, given by husband to wife under compulsion—Divorce embodied in a compromise with a third person but addressed to wife and not mere acknowledgment of divorce given, if effective.

JOBINA AKTAR KHATUN v. HAFIZUDDIN KHAN.

Under the Hanafi School of Sunni law, a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid and is none the less so because it is contained in a written document, provided this document is addressed to the party to be divorced and provided it actually pronounces the divorce and is not merely an acknowledgment of something agreed to under compulsion.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Surendra Krishna Ghosh, Subordinate Judge, 4th Court of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 29th of August 1922, affirming the decree of Babu Suresh Chandra Sen, Munsif, 1st Court at Netrokona, dated the 23rd of May 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gopal Chandra Das and Babu Bhuban Mohon Saha for the Appellant.

Mr. Gunada Charan Sen and Babu Annada Charan Karkoon for the Respondent.

GREAVES, J.—Defendant No. 1 in the suit appeals against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh confirming a decision of the Munsif of Netrokona directing restitution of conjugal rights at the instance of the Plaintiff, the husband of the Appellant.

Both parties are Sunnis and governed by the Hanafi School. The marriage took place on the 21st Kartick 1315 and the parties lived together as husband and wife. The Appellant left her husband in Aswin 1322 and after this as a result of land dispute between Defendant No. 7 and the Plaintiff, criminal proceedings under sec. 147 of the Indian Penal Code were instituted; these were settled by a compromise which was reduced to writing; one of the terms of the compromise was that the Plaintiff should divorce his wife. The compromise was subsequently set aside at the husband's instance and both Courts have found that the Plaintiff signed the terms of compromise under compulsion and the question is whether according to the Hanafi School a divorce extorted by compulsion is binding and if so, whether a divorce in writing in the form in which it was contained in this suit is binding. Subsequent to the compromise the wife is said to have married Defendant No. 2 in nika in Aswin 1325. No reliance can be placed upon another document which was produced, namely, an unregistered taluk-namah. It is undated and found to be unreliable.

The only question therefore is whether a valid divorce was effected by the compromise which has been found to have been executed by the husband under coercion. According to the Hanafi School a pronouncement of divorce is effectual although it has been made under coercion. Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. I, p. 210, Tayabji's Principles of Mahammadan Law, p. 134 (par. 123), although the learned author raises the question whether at present time the Courts would give effect to a divorce pronounced under such circumstances.

The Respondent contends, however, that even if a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid the divorce contained in the compromise is not binding as it is contained in a "non-customary" writing, that is to say, in writing not addressed and directed to any person. And we were referred to Baillie's Digest of Mohamadan Law, Vol. I, 2nd Ed., p. 235, where it is stated as follows :—

"A man is compelled by beating and imprisonment to write the repudiation of his wife and he writes that his wife, such an one, the daughter of such an one, the son of such an one, is repudiated, but his wife nevertheless is not repudiated."

This passage is, as I think, explained by the foot-note in the same page. The writing here is treated as an acknowledgment of repudiation which if written under compulsion is not binding but I do not think that it can be taken as authority for anything else or to affect the rule that the written repudiation is valid provided it is addressed to the person to be repudiated. In the case referred to in Baillie, ubi supra, there was no repudiation but merely an acknowledgment of one which is not enough.

On an examination of the authorities I think the law according to the Hanafi School is clear that written divorce is valid, provided it is addressed to the person to be divorced. It remains therefore to see the nature of the compromise. It is in these words:—

"I release you the third party Aktar Khatun from the marital bond by giving you three talaks according to the Mohamadan scriptures."

The compromise was signed by the husband and by the wife and it was registered and was addressed by the husband to the wife. It seems to me to be not an acknowledgment but a document which actually effects the divorce.

As I have already stated, to my mind, the law is clear that according to the Hanafi School, which governed the parties, a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid and that such divorce is none the less valid because it is contained in a written document provided this document is addressed to the party to be divorced and provided it actually pronounces the divorce and is not merely an acknowledgment of something agreed to under compulsion which in my view the compromise is not.

The appeal accordingly succeeds and we set aside the decree of the 1st Court which was confirmed on appeal and the Appellant will be entitled to her costs here and in the Courts below.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), secs. 62, 65, 67—Declaration about a person as to unsoundness of mind and incapacity to manage his affairs when justifiable—Different factors to be considered by the Court.

Under the present Lunacy Act, what the Courts have got to decide is whether the person before them is of unsound mind and is incapable of managing himself and his affairs and under the provisions of sec. 65 of the Act, it is open to the Courts to find that a man is of unsound mind so as to be incapable of managing his affairs but that he is capable of managing himself and is not dangerous to himself or to others. It is necessary to find that the person is both of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs.

Where the Appellant was declared by the District Judge to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs the High Court on a consideration of the evidence on the record and examination of the Appellant himself vacated the order of the lower Court.

This was an appeal against the order of K. K. Sen, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Khulna, dated the 23rd of September 1924.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Basak and Babu Radhika Ranjan Guha for the Appellant.

Dr. Mitter and Babu Nirode Bandhu Roy for the Respondents.

GREAVES, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Khulna, dated the 23rd September 1924, whereby he found that the Appellant before us was of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. The learned District Judge came to this conclusion upon the evidence of the Civil Surgeon of Khulna which was to the effect that the Appellant was not in a sound condition and that he was suffering from a great deficiency of memory and from general weakening of mental faculties and this witness further states that he put many questions to the Appellant and he could not in all cases give rational answers; and he further states that he came to the conclusion at which he arrived because he found great deficiency of memory and general weakening of mental faculties and he states the various questions that he put to the Appellant in the course of his examination. It appears that the Appellant was under the observation of this gentleman for a considerable period and that he examined him some seven times in all. This witness further states that the Appellant had no reasoning faculty and that his mind was not sound and that he was not able to manage his properties.

There was, further, the evidence of the Appellant's wife Haridasi who states that the Appellant had no power of understanding and could not say anything coherently and that he was like an inert mass and could not give any opinion after proper consideration.

There was also the evidence of a son of the Appellant, Narendra, and he states that his father's head was in a deranged condition since he had a stroke of paralysis and that he had no power to look after his health or his estate. He further states that the Appellant did not like visitors, could not speak, would weep and call dead people.

The pleader Promotha Nath Dutta in his evidence stated that the mental condition of the Appellant was not good and that he could not recognise known men and that he had lost his memory and he speaks of seeing the Appellant in a such condition. Two other doctors, on the other hand, gave evidence to the effect that the Appellant was not of an unsound mind. One of them, Babu Satis Chandra Ghose, states that he thought the answers to the questions that he put to the Appellant were sound and he says that he did not find any defect and that the Appellant had a power to exercise judgment although his memory was impaired. The other doctor is Phani Bhusan Roy who states that the Appellant gave proper replies to the questions that he put to him and that the Appellant also put intelligent questions to him. He further states that he noticed, besides physical defect, partial loss of memory probably due to paralysis combined with the old age of the Appellant. This was the evidence which was before the District Judge when he arrived at the conclusion to which we have already referred and the question which we have got to decide in this appeal is whether the conclusion of the District Judge was well-founded. Under the present Lunacy Act what the Courts have got to decide is whether the person before them is of unsound mind and is incapable of managing himself and his affairs and under the provisions of sec. 65 of the Act it is open to the Courts to find that a man is of unsound mind so as to be incapable of managing his affairs but that he is capable of managing himself and is not dangerous to himself or to others. But what is to be borne in mind is that in order to arrive at the conclusion at which the District Judge has arrived it is necessary to find that the person is both of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs. This was pointed out by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mazaharuddin Khan v. Serajuddin Khan (1). That was a case under the Lunacy Act of 1858, Act XXXV of 1858. But the words there in sec. 2 are very much the same as in the present Act, namely, that the object of enquiry is to find whether the person was of an unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. The only difference, therefore, is that under the Act of 1912 you have to ascertain whether the person is of an unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs. We were referred to a Bombay case in the course of the argument, In the matter of Cowasji Beramji Lilaovala (2). That was a case under the Act of 1858 and Mr. Justice Latham then came to the conclusion that the term "unsound mind" comprehended imbecility, whether congenital or arising from old age as well as lunacy or mental alienation resulting from disease. When the matter first came before this Court we read the evidence and the judgment of the learned District Judge and we came to the conclusion that it would be better that we should see the Appellant ourselves. The Appellant was, accordingly, produced before us yesterday in the presence of the learned Advocate who appeared on his behalf and we put various questions to him in order that we could ascertain for ourselves as also upon the evidence whether the conclusion of the District Judge was correct and speaking for myself, after having seen the Appellant, I am not prepared to find that he is a person of an unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs within the meaning of these words as used in the Act of 1912. There is no doubt, we think, that the mental condition of the Appellant has been affected by the stroke of paralysis from which he suffered and both owing to this and his age his memory has no doubt been seriously affected and as has been pointed out to us he was unable to recognise either here or in the other Court his son-in-law and other relatives and apparently, the names of some of his daughters escaped his memory. But he was able to answer questions with regard to his estate with a certain amount of intelligence and also questions with regard to his family and having regard to the evidence which was before the District Judge and which was read to us coupled with what we have gathered from the questions which were addressed to the Appellant we think that the District Judge was not justified in the conclusion at which he arrived and the order which he made. We are not satisfied that the Appellant is of unsound mind and incapable of managing himself and his affairs and the result is that we discharge the order of the District Judge. The manager appointed will be discharged after passing his accounts and he will hand over the property to the Appellant.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES

Nos. 3, 4 AND 19 OF 1923.

WALMSLEY, J.
B. B. GHOSE, J.
1924,
14, November.

MESSRS. H. V. LOW
& Co., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
HAZARIMULL BABU
and ORS. Plaintiffs,
Respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 56 and 81, principles of, if applicable where some of several mortgaged properties are subject to a mining lease, the lessee having taken the lease with notice of the indebtedness of the mortgagor—Lessee, if entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the other mortgaged properties first, where the mortgagor has still a valuable interest in the property, e.g., the superior right to receive rent and royalty.

Where two out of several mortgaged properties were subsequently leased out for mining, the lessees having notice of the mortgagor's indebtedness, and the properties, the subjects of the lease, were ordered to be sold first in execution of the decree had on the mortgage upon the application of the mortgagors:

Held—That the lessees were not entitled to have the mortgage debt satisfied by the sale first of properties other than those subject to the lease, and the principle of sec. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply as the mortgagors still had a valuable interest in the property, i.e., the right to receive rent and royalty from the lessees, which superior interest might be sold in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. The principle of marshalling of securities as contained in sec. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act also did not apply in such a case as the lessees having taken the lease subject to the encumbrance with full notice of the indebtedness of the mortgagor had no equities in their favour.

That in the circumstances of the case, the order directing the sale of the leased properties first was properly made.

These were appeals against the decrees of Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 11th of September 1922.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babus Nagendra Nath Ghosh, Manindra Nath Banerjee, Jitendra Nath Roy and Prafulla Chandra Chakravarti for the Defendants.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury, Sisir Coomer Banerjee, Sashi Sekhar Bose, Jyotish Chandra Sarkar, Hemendra Nath Sen and Gopendra Nath Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—These three appeals arise out of three suits brought on different mortgages by the same Plaintiff. In the suits out of which appeals Nos. 3 and 4 arise, the Defendants were the same. In the suit which has given rise to appeal No. 19, the principal Defendants were the co-sharers of the principal Defendants in the other two suits who owned an eight anna share of the mortgaged property. The Appellants before us are Messrs. H. V. Low & Co., Ltd., who were added as Defendant No. 3 in the suits from which appeals Nos. 3 and 4 arise and who were the Defendant No. 8 in the suit which has given rise to appeal No. 19. The suits were decreed by the Subordinate Judge against all the Defendants. The mortgage in appeal No. 3 is dated the 3rd April 1917. In appeal

MESSRS. H. V. LOW & Co. v. HAZARIMULL BABU.

No. 4, the mortgage is dated the 23rd September 1913 and in appeal No. 19, it is dated the 10th of January 1917. The Appellants before us are the lessees of two mouzahs called Simsa and Barkola and they obtained a mining lease from the mortgagors in appeals Nos. 3 and 4 on the 10th February 1919 with regard to a moiety share of those two mouzahs. They also obtained a similar lease from the mortgagors in appeal No. 19 on the 25th August 1919. There is no question that the Appellants are bound by the several mortgages and that the property in their hands is liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decrees along with the other properties mortgaged at the instance of the mortgagee. These Defendants in the Court below made an application in each case praying that the two mouzahs of which they had taken leases should be put up to sale last of all. In answer to their petitions, the mortgagors contended that these two mouzahs should be put up to sale first as the whole of the mortgage debt would then be paid off out of the purchase-money of these two mouzahs; they were the most valuable part of their property and something would remain in excess after satisfying the mortgages. The mortgagors also said that, if those two properties were sold first, it would be unnecessary to proceed with the sale of their other properties. The mortgagee was indifferent as to what direction the Court might make with regard to the order in which the mortgaged properties were to be put up to sale. In all the cases, the Subordinate Judge made an order to the effect that these two properties Simsa and Barkola should be put up to sale first as he considered that that was the most equitable order having regard to the fact that the Defendant Company—the Appellants before us—had taken their mining leases with knowledge of the indebtedness of the mortgagors and on favourable terms and further that the agents of the Company who negotiated the transaction undertook to pay off the several mortgages.

In each of these suits there was another set of Defendants who were the sons of the mortgagors and they pleaded that they were not bound by the leases granted by their fathers as the leases were not granted for the benefit of the joint Mitakshara family of which they were all members. This question the learned Subordinate Judge has left open, and it seems to me that it was unnecessary to decide that question which was an issue between Defendant and Defendant wholly unconnected with the main issues which arose in the mortgage suits.

The Defendant Company have appealed against the decrees passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and they attack the particular portion of the decree in each case in which the order in which the mortgaged properties should be sold is stated, that is to say, they object to the order that mouzahs Simsa and Barkola should be put up to sale first in satisfaction of the mortgage decree. Their contention, in the first place, is that the other properties which are not the subject of the lease to them should be sold first and that, if the mortgages are not satisfied out of the sale-proceeds, then the property leased to them should be sold; secondly, they urged that, if that contention of theirs be not accepted, the order with regard to the sale of the two properties Simsa and Barkola first should be expunged and the mortgagee should be allowed to proceed to execute his mortgages against any property he chooses. It is said on behalf of the Appellants that the law as enacted in sec. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, namely, where two properties are subject to a common charge and one of the properties is sold the buyer is, as against the seller, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the other property, so far as such property will extend, should be applied to the present cases. It is next said that, if that provision is not applicable, then the general principle of marshalling of securities as laid down in sec. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act should be applied as a rule of equity.

In my judgment, the answer to the contention that the principle of sec. 56 should be applied is that here the mortgagors have a valuable interest in the property, that is, the right to receive rent and royalty from the lessees, the dead rent being fixed at Rs. 2,000 per annum in each case, the mortgagors may very well say that, if their interest which is still subsisting and which is superior to that of the lessees is sold, then the rest of their property would be preserved, and, in such a case, it seems to me that it will not be open to the lessees to say that the two properties in question should not be sold, because the sale might in the end affect their interest. When I asked the learned vakil for the Appellants whether this principle has ever been applied in any reported decision in favour of the lessee of a mortgagor his answer was that he had not been able to find any case. On that ground and the lessees having taken with full notice, in my judgment, the principle of marshalling of securities is not applicable to the present cases. The contention, therefore, of the learned vakil for the Appellants that properties other than those leased to the Defendant Company should be sold first cannot be upheld.

It is next contended on behalf of the Appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in finding on the evidence that the persons who conducted the negotiations for the leases with the mortgagors agreed to pay off the mortgage-debts. It is urged that in the various petitions filed by the mortgagors before the learned Subordinate Judge they did not allege this as a ground for having the two mouzahs Simsa and Barkola sold first and that the story of the agreement is absolutely an after-thought. In appeal No. 19, it is said that there is absolutely no evidence of the alleged agreement. It seems to me, however, that the Appellants when they invoked equity in their favour signally failed in their case; they have not, it appears, paid any rent or royalty to the mortgagors since the date of the lease and this sum would, it is said, amount to over Rs. 12,000 with interest. The mortgage debt in this case would amount to about that sum and it can hardly be said to be equity that the other properties belonging to the mortgagors should be sold in order to pay off the mortgage debt while the Appellant Company have in their hands money due to the mortgagors to the same extent. In my opinion, therefore, on that ground alone the order made by the learned Subordinate Judge should be held to be quite equitable and should stand.

With regard to the other two appeals, the Subordinate Judge has accepted the evidence given by the mortgagors that there was such an agreement by Mr. Samson who is now the general manager of the Defendant Company. There was mention of one Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee in the evidence. Jyotish comes forward and denies the whole story in his evidence. But he goes too far because he says that he had no knowledge whatsoever of the indebtedness of the mortgagors. It is hardly necessary to point out that with regard to one branch of the mortgagors it was necessary to have the sanction of the Court for the lease and it was recited in the order that the estate of the mortgagors was heavily encumbered and it was, therefore, necessary to grant a mining lease, and, on the basis of that order, the lease was granted. Mr. Samson does not give his evidence. I am unable to hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in accepting the evidence given by the mortgagors in these two cases. But apart from that, having regard to the circumstances that the mortgagors are entitled to a large sum of money as royalty out of these properties and that the lease was taken subject to the encumbrance with full knowledge of the indebtedness of the lessors, I think we should not interfere with the order of the lower Court.

The result, therefore, is that all the three appeals are dismissed with costs. We allow only one set of hearing-fee in each appeal to be divided between the different sets of Respondents who have appeared.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), secs. 12, 13, 14, proceedings under, if proper when allegation on which action taken amounts to charge of commission of a specific criminal offence.

Where the allegation against the persons against whom proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act were taken amounted to a charge of aiding and abetting or conspiring to commit a criminal offence, viz., causing evidence to disappear for the purpose of screening an offender:

Held—That the correct procedure to be followed was that proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act should not be taken but that if it was thought necessary to take action it should be by way of a criminal prosecution.

In this view the High Court discharged the Reference.

In the matter of CHANDI CHARAN MITTER (1) referred to.

This was a Reference under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, made by the 2nd Additional District Judge of Mymensingh (Mr. Nirode Ch. Guha), dated the 31st August 1925.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows:—

During the trial of Sessions case Cal. No. 200 of 1924 (Emperor v. Sonaula, under sec. 471, I. P. C.) which was held before me it transpired that in O. C. Suit No. 265 of 1921 of the local 3rd Subordinate Judge's Court (Rani Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Sonaula and others), a document purporting to be a registered Fata Kobala, dated 21st Ashar 1318, was filed on behalf of the Defendants by pleader Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta. In his deposition before the Sessions Court Rajendra Babu admitted that he received the document from Sonaula (Defendant No. 1). The document was filed on the 6th July 1923 and the Plaintiff's pleader challenged the document as a forgery and cited Babu Digendra Nath Chakravarty, Sub-Registrar, to demon-trate the forgery. On the 7th July Digendra Babu was examined by the Plaintiff and the Defendant's pleader (Rajendra Babu) retired from the suit and the case was decreed ex parte on the same date (7th July 1923). The Plaintiff applied for sanction on the same date and notice in due course was served on Sonaula and he showed cause on 8th September 1923 through pleader Moulvi Abdul Khaleque who was engaged on 18th August 1923 by a vakalatnama executed and presented by Sonaula himself. The sanction case was numbered Misc. No. 28 of 1923. The disputed document was marked Ex. C in the original case (No. 265 of 1923) and Ex. 1 in Misc. case No. 28 of 1923. The Court ultimately granted sanction under sec. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on 12th January 1924 and wrote to the Magistrate on 18th January 1924 to take necessary action. The Sub-Divisional Officer, Myensingh, ordered issue of process on 18th January 1924. On the 1st April 1924 Sonaula filed an appeal to the District Judge against the order for sanction which was dismissed on 9th May 1924. On the 26th May 1924 Sonaula came to Rajendra Babu and instructed him for the return of the documents filed in O. C. Suit No. 265 of 1921 (including the disputed document). According to Rajendra Babu's deposition in the Sessions case it appears that he told Sonaula that he might get back his other documents, but it was not likely that the document which was the subject-matter of the sanction case would be returned. In spite of this and with the full knowledge of the circumstances a petition for return of all the documents filed on behalf of the Defendants in O. C. Suit No. 265 was prepared by one Ali Hosen and Rajendra Babu signed and filed it in Court on 26th

May 1924. It was, in my opinion, clearly the duty of the pleader Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta to mention in the petition that of the documents, Ex. C was the subject-matter of a sanction case and magisterial enquiry. It seems that the pleader almost anticipated that an order for returning the documents might be passed through inadvertence, and he was prepared to take advantage of it. In fact, an order in the routine form "return if no objection within three days" was passed by the Saristadar "by order" on 26th May 1924 and Rajendra Babu instead of bringing it to the notice of the District Judge that an order for the return of all the documents (including Ex. C) was passed through inadvertence, himself went into the record room and signed a receipt on the back of the petition. According to his evidence in the Sessions case, before he could sign other books he was called away on urgent business and he instructed Ali Hosen (the alleged Mohirir of Rajendra Babu but in fact not his registered Mohirir) to engage some other pleader to finish the work. Ali Hosen (who does not appear to be any pleader's clerk at all and is presumably a tout) then asked the Moulvi Abdul Khaleque and the Moulvi came to the record room, struck out the signature of Rajendra Babu and himself signed on the back of the petition a receipt and took back all the documents including Ex. C which was the subject-matter of the sanction case and magisterial enquiry. It was also clearly his duty to bring to the notice of the District Judge that the order for return of documents without reservation regarding Ex. C was passed through inadvertence and in any case not to take back Ex. C. Moulvi Abdul Khaleque not only took back Ex. C on 27th May 1924 but made it over to Sonaula, who was the accused himself. The result of the conduct of Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta and Moulvi Abdul Khaleque was that the prosecution was hampered and gravely imperilled. But for the accident that the document having been marked an exhibit in the Original Civil Suit No. 265 the Plaintiff had obtained a certified copy, the prosecution in all probability would have failed. It further appears that Moulvi Abdul Khaleque held no power at all in the original case No. 265, and the document Ex. C was filed by Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta not on behalf of Defendant No. 1 Sonaula (from whom Rajendra Babu had no vakalatnama) but on behalf of some other Defendants. Moulvi Abdul Khaleque held a power from Sonaula alone in the sanction case (Misc. No. 28 of 1923). The document Ex. C could therefore have been returned to Rajendra Babu alone and not to Moulvi Abdul Khaleque at all.

From the above my clear impression is that when Sonaula found that his appeal against the sanction was dismissed (9th May 1924) he conspired with Ali Hosen (to all appearance a tout) to remove the forged document by corrupting the record room staff. To this nefarious design Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta when he got inkling of it, not only put no check but practically encouraged Sonaula to take his chances and helped and aided him into success. The part which Moulvi Abdul Khaleque took was no less serious, in that he actually took back the forged document and put it into the hands of the accused himself and thereby put it beyond the reach of the Court. I cannot conceive of unprofessional conduct graver than this and I feel it my duty to draw up proceedings against both Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta and Moulvi Abdul Khaleque under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. I shall draw up separate proceedings against each, but this "statement of reasons" will govern both the cases and copies of it will be served on both the gentlemen. Write to the District Magistrate requesting him to instruct the Government pleader to appear in the proceedings on behalf of the Crown and to offer (if necessary) evidence in support of the charges under sec. 14, Legal Practitioners Act.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Crown.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhuri and Babu Debendra Narayan Bhattachariya for Rajendra Kumar Dutta.

Mr. Gopal Chandra Das, Moulvi Md. Nurul Huq Choudhuri and Babu Satyendra Kishore Ghose for Abdul Khaleque.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference concerning two pleaders of the Mymensingh Bar Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta and Moulvi Abdul Khaleque.

The facts appear to be these :

There was a certain Title Suit No. 265 of the local Subordinate Judge's Court (Rani Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Sonaula and others).

Rajendra Kumar Dutta was the pleader on behalf of some of these Defendants though it does not appear that he had received any vakalatnama on behalf of Sonaula. In the course of this suit a certain document was filed on behalf of the Defendants on the 6th July 1923 by Rajendra Kumar Dutta. The Plaintiff challenged the genuineness of this document, certain evidence was taken and on the 7th July Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta, the Defendant's pleader, retired from the case and the case was decided ex parte. On the same day the Plaintiff moved the Court to prosecute Sonaula for forgery. Notice was issued on Sonaula and he appeared on 8th September 1923 and showed cause. Moulvi Abdul Khaleque appeared for him on this occasion.

The Court ordered a prosecution on 12th January 1924 and wrote the usual letter to the Magistrate on 18th January 1924. The same day the Magistrate issued process. What took place in the Magistrate's Court does not appear but on the 1st April 1924 Sonaula preferred an appeal to the District Judge against the order for prosecution which was dismissed on 9th May 1924.

On the 26th May 1924 Sonaula came to Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta and instructed him to apply for the return of the documents filed in the original suit including the document which was the subject of the criminal charge. It is somewhat remarkable that this document was still on the record of the civil case. It ought to have been impounded but the probable explanation is that in view of the appeal to the District Judge against the order for prosecution it had come back once more to the original suit file. The usual application for a return of the document was filed and Babu Rajendra Kumar Dutta himself went to the record room to get back the documents. Rajendra Babu himself signed a receipt for the documents on the back of the petition. He was then called away to attend to some other case and one Ali Hosen was told to instruct some other pleader and he went and fetched Mr. Abdul Khaleque who took back the documents, signed receipt for them and made them over including the document, the subject of the criminal case to Sonaula.

What therefore the two pleaders are charged with amounts to aiding and abetting Sonaula in getting back this document so that he might defeat the criminal case while it was their duty to have brought to the notice of the District Judge that Sonaula was attempting to do this.

Now it will be clear that what is alleged against these two pleaders amounts to a charge of aiding and abetting or conspiring to commit a criminal offence, viz., causing evidence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender, an offence punishable under sec. 201, Indian Penal Code. Both the pleaders have filed statement denying that they had any knowledge that the document in question was being taken back and have supported their explanation with affidavit. In such a case it has been held that the correct procedure to be followed is that proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act should not be taken but that if it is thought necessary to take action it should be by way of a criminal prosecution. The question has been dealt with in the case of In the matter of Chandi Charan Mitter (1) and the judgment of Mookerjee, J., may be with advantage referred to where he deals with the numerous authorities on the point and points out that summary proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act may result in grave injustice to the persons concerned. We do not think we should be justified in departing from the principles laid down in the case we have just referred to.

We think therefore that the Order of Reference should be discharged. It will be open to the authorities if they think fit to criminally prosecute the two pleaders. On that point we express no opinion.

In the matter of RAJENDRA KUMAR DUTTA and ABDUL KHALEQUE.

It will of course be open to the Additional District Judge after any action that may be taken in the Criminal Court to take action under the Legal Practitioners Act, if so advised.

GOVT. APP. NO. 2 OF 1925.

WALMSLEY, J.	} THE SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCE OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, Appellant, v. SADER SAIK, Respondent.
MUKERJI, J.
1925,
Heard,
10, August.
Judgment,
12, August.

Jury, misdirection to—Witnesses for prosecution absent—Application for adjournment refused and trial proceeded with and jury directed to return a verdict of not guilty for want of evidence—Misdirection—Acquittal set aside on appeal by Local Government.

On the date fixed for hearing in the Sessions Court the witnesses for the prosecution were not present and the trial was adjourned to the next day when too the witnesses not being present, the public prosecutor made an application for further adjournment which was refused and the Judge then empanelled a jury and called upon the public prosecutor to open his case and upon the accused to plead, whereupon the public prosecutor opened the case under protest and informed the Court that he had no witnesses present to support the case for the prosecution and the Judge directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty as there was no evidence:

Held—That in the circumstances of the case it was a misdirection for the Judge to tell the jury that there was no evidence and that they should return a verdict of "not guilty."

That the Judge had exercised his discretion unwisely in not giving the public prosecutor an opportunity to produce his witnesses, since it appeared that there were witnesses whose attendance had not been procured on the date fixed through blunder.

The High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed a re-trial.

This was an appeal against the decision of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 30th October 1924, acquitting the accused Respondent of offences under secs. 365 and 366, I. P. C.

The facts were as follows:—

The Respondent Sader Saik was tried on charge under sec. 366, Indian Penal Code, by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Mymensingh with the aid of a jury and was convicted on the said charge and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of three years.

On appeal the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence and directed a re-trial on the ground that the provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. Code, had not been complied with.

The re-trial took place before the same Assistant Sessions Judge who held the original trial.

In connection with the re-trial the committing Magistrate had through oversight omitted to summon the prosecution witnesses and on the date fixed for hearing the public prosecutor had to apply for an adjournment as none of the prosecution witnesses were in attendance.

The order passed on the said application was as follows:—

"The public prosecutor has applied for adjournment on the ground that none of the prosecution witnesses are in attendance. It has not been shown why the prosecution witnesses are not in attendance. The public prosecutor to request the Magistrate to produce the witnesses to-morrow as the case is an old one or to inform me if there be no likelihood of the witnesses being produced by 5 P.M. this afternoon."

The public prosecutor accordingly requested the Additional Magistrate to send a telegram to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kishoreganj, directing him to secure the attendance of the prosecution witnesses next day at 11 A.M. and to send a reply by wire before 5 P.M., but no reply was received.

Later on the same day the learned Assistant Sessions Judge passed the following order:—

"It is 5-15 now. No intimation received whether the witnesses can be produced to-morrow or not. Adjourned the case to to-morrow. . . ."

On the next day the learned Assistant Sessions Judge took up the case at 12 noon and no reply from the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kishoreganj having arrived the public prosecutor again applied for an adjournment stating that he was not in a position to explain why the witnesses were absent and pointed out that the re-trial had been ordered on a technical ground and that in the previous trial the accused had been convicted.

The application for adjournment was refused, a jury was empanelled and the accused was called upon to plead and the public prosecutor was made to open his case which he did under protest. The learned Judge directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty for want of evidence and on such verdict being returned he acquitted the accused.

Against this order of acquittal the Local Government preferred an appeal.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Appellant:

Babu Urukramdas Chakravarty for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WALMSLEY, J.—The facts necessary for the decision of this appeal are as follows:—Sader Saik was tried upon a charge under sec. 366, I. P. C., before the Assistant Sessions Judge of Mymensingh: he was convicted and sentenced to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment. He preferred an appeal and the learned Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence on the ground that the trying Judge had not complied with the provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. C.

The case was fixed for fresh trial on October 29th. On that date no witnesses were present, and the hearing was adjourned to next day. Again there were no witnesses present. The learned Judge then refused to grant any further adjournment. He then called upon the accused to plead, and empanelled a jury: he then directed the public prosecutor to open the case, and the latter did so under protest, and informed the Court that he had no witnesses present to support the case for the prosecution. Thereupon the learned Judge directed the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty," and after that verdict had been returned he acquitted the accused.

It seems to me clear that the learned Judge exercised his discretion unwisely both on the first day and the second day. He must have realized that some one had blundered and that the witnesses could not be collected and sent to his Court at less than a day's notice. He should have ascertained what had happened and should have granted a reasonable adjournment.

It is said, however, on behalf of the accused that the Code of Criminal Procedure gives us no authority to interfere with the verdict and the order of acquittal. Our attention is drawn to the words of sec. 423 (2) of the Code, and it is urged that there was no misdirection by the Judge, and therefore we cannot disturb the verdict of the jury. I do not agree with this argument for this reason that the public prosecutor did not say that he had no evidence to offer, or that he did not intend to offer any evidence: his attitude throughout was that he had witnesses who would substantiate the case if further opportunity were allowed to him, and I think that in such circumstances it was a misdirection for the Judge to tell the jury that there was no evidence and that they should return a verdict of "not guilty."

I therefore set aside the verdict of "not guilty" and the order acquitting the accused, and direct that he be tried in accordance with law.

MUKERJI, J.—I agree.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 339—Exception, accused in revisional stage, if can claim benefit of, when he did not raise the defence under the Exception in the lower Courts—Dispute of civil nature, propriety of trial by Criminal Court.

A person accused of an offence under sec. 341, I. P. C., for obstruction of a way by raising a wall, did not raise the defence that he was entitled to the Exception to sec. 339, I. P. C., and denied having raised the wall. But at the same time he contended that the wall which had been raised was on his own land:

Held—That the dispute between the parties was evidently one which could be better determined in the Civil than in the Criminal Court. In the present case the obstruction put up by the accused having been put up in good faith in the belief that he had a lawful right to obstruct the complainant from going along the path, he was entitled to the benefit of the Exception to sec. 339, I. P. C., though he did not clearly raise that defence in the lower Courts.

This was a Rule granted against the judgment and order of Mr. Anath Bandhu De, Magistrate, 1st class, Burdwan, dated the 8th January 1925, confirming those of Mr. Ali Asghar, Magistrate, 2nd class, Assansol, dated the 3rd December 1924.

The facts material to this report will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bankim Chandra Mukherjee (Advocate), Babu Nolini Kumar Mukherjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioner has been convicted under sec. 341, I. P. C. He was clearly to blame in not clearly raising in the lower Courts the defence that he was entitled to the Exception to sec. 339, I. P. C. He foolishly denied having erected a wall as alleged by the complainant. But at the same time he contended that the wall which had been erected was on his own land. The dispute between the parties is evidently one which can better be determined in the Civil than in the Criminal Court. The complainant's own case is somewhat vague, and we are not even now sure whether he claims an absolute right to the strip of land in dispute, or whether he claims a public right of way, or private right of way for all purposes, or a mere right to go over this land when it is necessary to do so in order to repair the south wall of his house. However that may be, we can see no reason to doubt that the obstruction put up by the Petitioner was put up in good faith because the Petitioner believed himself to have a lawful right to obstruct the complainant from going along this passage. There does not appear to be any suggestion that he acted from any other motive.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute. The conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioner are set aside and the fine and costs, if paid, will be refunded.

J. N. R. Rule made absolute.

Judgment,
11, June.

Adoption by Hindu widow—Authority to adopt given by husband, when minor, in a Will—Will registered after executant's death but not by widow, if valid for conferring authority to adopt—Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), secs. 2, 3—Succession Act (X of 1865), definition of "Will" in—Registration Act (III of 1877), secs. 17, 23, 40, 41.

An owner of property aged 19 years, who was under guardianship and therefore a minor within the definition of sec. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), executed a Will which purported to be a disposition of his property and also conferred a power of adoption on his widow. The Will was after the death of the executant of the document registered not by the widow, the donor of the authority, but by the legatee:

Held—That the document did not operate to any effect as a Will, as a disposition of the property or for any other purpose, e.g., as a power to adopt embodied in a Will.

JAGANNATHA BIREMA DEO v. KUNJA BENARI DEO (1) referred to.

That though inoperative as a Will, the document might nevertheless constitute a valid authority to adopt, requiring to be registered, under sec. 40 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), by the donor or after his death by the donee of the power, in the manner provided by sec. 41.

That in this case the donee of the power having failed to present it for registration within the time allowed by sec. 23, the document was inoperative as an authority to adopt and adoption made by the widow on the strength of it was invalid.

This was an appeal (No. 62 of 1923) from a decree, dated the 16th April 1920, of the High Court at Madras which affirmed a decree, dated the 30th December 1918, of the District Judge of Ganjam.

The suit was instituted by the Appellants who are the daughters of the late Mandapaka Appanna who died on the 1st October 1906 aged 19.

The deceased on the day of his death purported to execute a Will and the questions for determination in the appeal were (i) whether the alleged Will was a Will within the meaning of sec. 17 (3) of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, and (ii) whether an authority to adopt contained in the Will was legally valid. The lower Courts decided that the Will was genuine, that it was a Will, and that the authority to adopt was valid.

for the Appellants.—The document is bad as a Will so that none of the provisions contained in it are valid, including the provision giving authority to adopt.

The testator being a minor was incompetent to make a Will, and the authority to adopt was not conferred by a Will within the meaning of sec. 17 (3) of the Registration Act, 1877.

The requirements of the Registration Act must be observed with the greatest strictness.

Mujibunissa v. Abdul Rahim (2).

Actually although there is a document called a Will it is found not to be a Will legally, so that the authority to adopt is not one conferred by a Will.

It follows that inasmuch as the document was not registered as an authority to adopt it cannot operate to authorise an adoption.

Jambu Parshad v. Md. Aftab Ali (3) and Jagannatha Bheema Deo v. Kunja Behari Deo (1).

If the authority to adopt were valid it might be used for the purpose of defeating the intention of the testator as provided in his Will.

Mr. Ingram for the Respondents contended that inasmuch as the Courts in India had held concurrently that the Will was genuine, that question was not open to the Appellants on this appeal. The Will was registered as a Will and an authority to adopt conferred by a Will does not require registration.

out of which this suit has arisen, so far as they are material to the judgment, may be very shortly stated.

One Mandapaka Appanna, a Sudra in the Ganjam District, who was possessed of a considerable amount of property, died in 1906 leaving a widow and two daughters, the latter being the Plaintiffs in the action. When on his death-bed and within an hour or two of his actual death he executed a document, which purported to be a disposition of his property and at the same time conferred a power of adoption on his widow. This document was registered as a Will at the instance of a legatee. It was challenged by the Plaintiffs (who are still in minority) on the ground among others (1) that it was not genuine and (2) assuming that the signature which it bore to be that of the deceased, that he was incapable at the time of understanding its contents owing to the illness from which he shortly afterwards died.

Both Courts have decided, although with much hesitation, that the Will was genuine and on the question whether the deceased was in a fit condition to dispose of his property, the Subordinate Judge held that he was, and the High Court of Judicature at Madras may be presumed to have endorsed his judgment, although they have not expressly dealt with this matter in their reasons. Whether it is competent in these circumstances for their Lordships' Board to entertain an appeal from what may be represented as concurrent judgments on questions of fact it is unnecessary to consider, for a point of law remains, the decision of which in their Lordships' view is sufficient for the disposal of the appeal.

At the time of his death Mandapaka Appanna was admittedly only 19 years of age and was under guardianship. Act

KONDAPALLI VIJAYARATNAM v. MANDAPAKA SUDARSANA RAO.

No. 9 of 1875 provides, sec. 2, that nothing therein contained should affect the capacity of any person to act in the following matters, namely :—Marriage, Dower, Divorce, Adoption.

Sec. 3 provides as follows :—

"Subject as aforesaid, every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice, and every minor under the jurisdiction of any Court of Wards, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act (No. X of 1865) or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of twenty-one years and not before :

"Subject as aforesaid, every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before."

It follows, therefore, and indeed is matter of admission, that the document which purported to be a Will of Mandapaka Appanna could have no legal effect as such. On the other hand, as Mandapaka Appanna was over 18 years of age an authority to adopt, whether oral or in writing, was within his legal capacity.

A power to adopt may be embodied in a Will and if the document now under consideration can be treated as such the judgment under appeal cannot be impugned. "Will" is defined by Act 10, 1865, as :—

"The legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with respect to his property, which he desires to be carried into effect after his death," and by sec. 3 of Act 10 of 1897 :—

"Will shall include a codicil and every writing making a voluntary posthumous disposition of property."

The learned Judges in the Court below have held that the document in question satisfied these definitions. If the form of the document only is considered no doubt that would be so, but, having regard to the fact that it was executed by a person who was a minor and incapable of making a Will, their Lordships are unable to agree with the decision. The so-called Will is not a "legal declaration of the intentions of the testator," for it had no legal effect and was not capable of disposing of any of the estates of the deceased. So far as it purported to deal with his property it was a nullity. That a document is called a Will although it does not operate to any effect as such, will not give it the effect of a Will for any other purposes. This was so held in the case of Jagannatha Bheema Deo v. Kunja Behari Deo (1), a case which was not before the learned Judges of the High Court as it was not decided till after their judgment had been pronounced.

It does not follow, however, as the learned Subordinate Judge held that "a person who is incapable of making a Will is incapable of conferring an authority to adopt by a Will though he may be capable of giving an authority to adopt to be exercised after his death." Their Lordships see no reason to doubt that a document which purported to be a Will but was inoperative as such might nevertheless constitute a valid authority to adopt. Here, however, the Respondents are met with a different objection. Act No. 3 of 1877 provides, sec. 40 :—

"the donor, or after his death the donee, of any authority to adopt, or the adoptive son, may present it to any registrar or sub-registrar for registration."

and sec. 41 provides that an authority to adopt shall be registered in the case of the death of the donor on the registry officer being satisfied

(a) that the authority was executed by the donor

(b) that the donor is dead, and

(c) that the person presenting the authority is, under sec. 40, entitled to present the same.

In the present case it is not alleged that the donee, who, at the time of the registration of the document as a Will was the only one who could present it for registration, either did so herself or gave authority for the registration. Act III of 1877, Part 3, sec. 17, enacts that all authorities to adopt a son executed after the 1st January 1872, shall be registered, and by sec. 23, that no document other than a Will shall be accepted for registration unless presented for that purpose to the proper officer within four months from the date of its execution. As the widow, who was the donee of the authority, failed to register it within this period of four months, the deed which was afterwards executed by her on 24th December 1913, adopting Defendant No. 1, cannot receive effect. This indeed was not contested by the Respondents' counsel.

(1) L. R. 48 I. A. 482 : s. c. 26 C. W. N. 374 (1921).

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and that the Plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration, that the Will, dated the 1st October 1906, alleged to have been executed by the late Mandapaka Appanna is void, and also to a declaration in terms of the 2nd, 3rd and 4th heads of their prayer with costs of the suit both in the Courts below and before this Board.

HABUMAT ALI and anr., Appellants,
v.
MUSST. NASIB-
UL-NISA,
Respondent.

Custom, proof of—Right of brother's daughter to succeed in place of deceased brother—Proof of succession by uncle's daughter, if sufficient for the purpose.

If there be a customary rule that entitles an uncle's daughter to be her father's representative for the purpose of inheritance, it would be anomalous and arbitrary to withhold from a brother's daughter the same right, and the High Court was right in holding the custom proved in the case of the latter though no instance was proved of an actual succession by a brother's daughter.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 23rd July 1921, of the High Court at Lahore, which varied a decree, dated the 28th May 1915, of the Subordinate Judge of Rohtak.

The parties are Mohammedan Arab-Sayads of Kharhanda in the Rohtak District.

The Plaintiff-Respondent instituted the suit in 1910 to recover possession of properties which she alleged had belonged to Mir Barkhat Ali who died childless in 1872; that his widows succeeded to his property during their lives, and that on the death of the last surviving widow in 1909 the Plaintiff who was the daughter of Mir Barkhat Ali's brother became entitled to the property according to custom.

The Appellants-Defendants claimed to be in possession under transfers effected by Musammât Bismillah Begam, the last surviving widow of Barkhat Ali and they contended that the right to challenge these transfers was confined to a male collateral only of Barkhat Ali.

The Subordinate Judge decided that succession in the family was governed by Mahommedan law as modified by custom and that the Plaintiff had failed to prove the custom which she had set up.

He held that the Plaintiff-Respondent and Afzal Ali—a sister's son of Barkhat Ali—were equally related to Barkhat Ali and that by custom a male of equal degree excluded a female so that the Plaintiff was excluded from the succession. In view however of an admission by Afzal Ali that the Plaintiff was entitled to an equal share with him he held that she was entitled to a half share in the properties left by Mir Barkhat Ali.

The High Court on appeal held that the Plaintiff as the daughter of a brother would exclude the son of a sister and passed a decree in her favour for the whole of the property.

The Defendants appealed to H. M. in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Respondent.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 23rd of July 1921, of the High Court of Judicature at Lahore, varying a decree, dated the 28th of May 1915, of the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rohtak.

The suit is brought by Mussammat Nasib-ul-Nisa to recover possession of immovable property described in the plaint on the ground that it formed part of the inheritance left by her uncle, Mir Barkhat Ali, and on the death of Mussammat Bismillah Begam, his last surviving widow, devolved on her as his customary heir.

Though the record is voluminous, the points now in issue are narrowed down to two: (a) whether the whole of the property claimed formed part of Barkhat Ali's estate, and (b) whether the Plaintiff has established that she is his customary heir. The items claimed include a moiety of the villages of Salakhni and Kanai.

Up to the Mutiny the entirety of these villages belonged to Bisharat Ali. They were then confiscated for his alleged default of duty. But on the application of Barkhat Ali, whose military service had earned him the good will of the authorities, the villages in 1858 were restored to him and Umrao, Bisharat's son, and their names were entered in the revenue records. The Subordinate Judge held that the name of Barkhat Ali was included as part owner without any apparent rhyme or reason by Barkhat Ali himself when Umrao was a mere boy of 14, that Barkhat Ali had never been in actual possession or enjoyment of the villages, and that the Defendants had so long been in adverse possession of them against Barkhat Ali and his successors, that the Plaintiff was not entitled to lay any claim to them. The High Court, for reasons which appear in its judgment, took a different view and held that the moiety of these villages belonged to Barkhat Ali.

Their Lordships agree with this conclusion.

Has then the Plaintiff established her claim to be the customary heir of Barkhat Ali? The members of his family are Mohammedan Arab-Sayads of Kharbanda, and it is among them that the heir to his property is to be found. Their relationship to him is shown in the following pedigree:—

HASHMAT ALI v. MUSSAT. NASIB-UL-NISA.

Barkhat Ali died in 1872 without issue but survived by the three widows shown in the pedigree. Contrary to the rule of Mohammedan law, they succeeded to the whole of his estate, for an interest terminable with their lives and with a right of survivorship as between themselves.

Mussamat Bismillah Begam was the survivor, and on her death in 1909, three members of the family instituted three separate suits, each claiming as heir of Barkhat Ali to recover possession of the property now in suit. One was brought by Mussamat Nasib-ul-Nisa, one by Mussamat Ahmadi-ul-Nisa, and the third by Mir Afzal Ali. They were consolidated and heard together. The second and third failed, and no appeal has been preferred; in Nasib-ul-Nisa's, a decree was passed in her favour on appeal, and it is against that decree that the present appeal has been preferred.

For Nasib-ul-Nisa it has been argued that, as the heirship of her two rival claimants has been negatived, hers must be taken to be established even as against the Defendants. But their Lordships cannot assent to this contention. The Defendants, though without title, are in possession and the Plaintiff can only recover that possession by establishing her own title as against them, regardless of what has been determined in the other two suits.

Appended to the Subordinate Judge's judgment are nine pedigrees, G I to G IX, showing the family relationship at the dates of the several successions said to support the customary rules of succession on which the Plaintiff relies. Their correctness is not questioned and the actual succession in each case is proved, not merely by oral evidence, but by judicial decisions or revenue orders made in mutation proceedings.

The devolutions to which they relate have been accurately investigated by the High Court and it would serve no useful purpose for their Lordships to travel over the same ground.

What has to be determined is the inference to be drawn from them as to the rules of succession relevant to the Plaintiff's claim in this suit.

They corroborate the oral evidence that in this family custom is followed in matters of inheritance, and this, in their Lordships' opinion, is established beyond controversy. So the present enquiry is not whether in relation to the particular succession now in question, the ordinary personal law is superseded by a custom, but what is the customary rule that regulates it.

That there is a customary rule which entitled Barkhat Ali's widows to succeed as heirs to his estate for limited interests is not disputed; it is equally clear that there is a rule of inheritance in this family which entitles brothers to succeed to the exclusion of sisters. Applying these two rules to the succession on the surviving widow's death, if Sarfaraz Ali had survived, he would have inherited Barkhat Ali's property to the exclusion of his sisters. But Sarfaraz Ali was dead, and the Plaintiff, his daughter, alleges that by the code of customary rules regulating succession in this family, the principle of representation is sanctioned, and she claims that by virtue of it she, as Sarfaraz Ali's daughter, in the absence of male issue, represents him and stands in his place. Their Lordships agree that representation is a part of the rules of succession in this family. It is settled by judicial decision that a son in matters of inheritance represents his deceased father, and the record discloses instances of succession in which a widow was recognized as the representative of her husband, and a daughter as the representative of a deceased uncle. It is thus shown that sex is not a bar to representation, but that widows and daughters in the absence of sons can claim the right in their favour.

But then it is said that no instance is proved of an actual succession by a brother's daughter, and therefore, it is argued, the necessary custom that precisely covers this case has not been proved. But if there be a rule that entitles an uncle's daughter to be her father's representative for the purpose of inheritance, it would be anomalous and arbitrary to withhold from a brother's daughter the same right, and their Lordships hold that the High Court rightly decided in Nasib-ul-Nisa's favour. In their opinion, therefore, this appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The Appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

No. 120 OF 1924.

SANDERSON, C. J. RANKIN, J. 1925, 20, March	}	THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. W. G. BOWDEN, Defendant, Respondent.

Landlord and tenant—Calcutta Rent Act (Bengal Act III of 1920) as amended by Act II of 1923 and Act I of 1924, sec. 11, sub-secs. (1) and (2).—Expiry of lease—Breach of covenant during subsistence of original lease—Waiver of such breach by subsequent acceptance of rent with knowledge of such breach—Whether landlord is entitled to a decree for possession.

The Plaintiff, a trustee of the estate of Anna Apcar, deceased, of which J. Apcar was the beneficiary, on 20th November 1919, demised the premises to the Defendant for a period of four years to expire on 30th September 1923. The lease contained a covenant—"not to assign, sublet or part with possession of the said premises or any part thereof without the previous consent in writing of the lessor." The Defendant sublet the upper flat of the premises to a tenant in April 1921 who continued to be in occupation till April 1923. Before the expiry of this lease the Plaintiff gave notice to the Defendant to quit and vacate the premises as the same was required for the use and occupation of the beneficiary and brought this suit for a decree for possession and for mesne profits at Rs. 650 per month till the recovery of possession. The Defendant denied that the premises were required for the use and occupation of the beneficiary and claimed benefit of the Calcutta Rent Act. BUCKLAND, J., found that the Plaintiff did not bonâ fide require the premises for use and occupation as alleged but allowed the Plaintiff to amend the pleadings in order to raise the issue whether the Defendant could claim the benefit of the Rent Act in view of the said breach of covenant regarding subletting. On the amended pleadings it was found by GHOSH, J., on evidence, that the Plaintiff accepted rent with knowledge of the breach in August and September 1923, so that there being waiver of forfeiture the suit was dismissed :

Held—That subletting the premises without written consent was a technical breach of covenant but there was complete waiver of the breach by subsequent receipt of rent after the landlord had that knowledge. In those circumstances it could not be said that the tenant failed to perform the conditions of the tenancy.

Per RANKIN, J.—By the last words of proviso to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the Court could in a proper case take into account breaches of the conditions of the tenancy committed during the course of the original tenancy in granting a decree in ejectment at the termination of the lease.

But sub-sec. (1) of sec. 11 does not mean that because a perfectly harmless technical breach was committed in 1921, the Court cannot give the tenant in 1924 the benefit of the Calcutta Rent Act.

This was an appeal against the judgment of Buckland, J., passed on 22nd February 1924 and of Ghose, J., passed on 20th May 1924.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Pugh (with Mr. Barwell) on behalf of the Plaintiff argued that the tenant had not performed the terms of the lease which were the conditions of the tenancy because he had sublet the premises. The landlord came to know of this two months before the lease expired. He had his right of forfeiture [cited Job v. Banister (1)]. In order to enable the tenant to have the benefit of sec. 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act the tenant must show that he has performed all the conditions of the tenancy. It is immaterial whether the landlord knew about the breach by the tenant. The tenant is not entitled to renewal of lease [cited Bastin v. Bidwell (2)].

Mr. B. K. Ghosh (with Mr. P. C. Basu) on behalf of the Respondent.—Before the grant of the lease the Official Trustee knew that part of the house was to be let out by Bowden to Melitus Estate. This shows that the covenant against subletting was never intended to be enforced; learned Judge has found as a fact that the Official Trustee received rent for two months after he knew that the Respondent had broken the covenant against subletting. Cited Ahindra Nath v. Twiss (3), where it was held that a Court can grant relief to the tenant, in case of forfeiture where the same was waived by the landlord. Refers to sec. 112, Transfer of Property Act, Bithaldas v. Lalbehari (4).

11, sub-sec. (1) are very clear. The tenant must perform all the conditions of tenancy and one condition is that he cannot sublet without written permission of the landlord. Sec. 112, Transfer of Property Act, not made applicable.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from two judgments, the first of which was delivered by my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland on the 22nd of February 1924, and the second of which was delivered by my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose on the 20th of May 1924.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff, the Official Trustee of Bengal, as Trustee of the Estate of Anna Apcar, on the 5th of December 1923 : and, it was alleged that the Defendant had been the lessee under a lease, dated the 20th of November 1919 for a period of four years, the term of which expired on the 30th day of September 1923.

There was a further allegation that on the 13th of August 1923, the Plaintiff gave notice to the Defendant to quit and vacate the premises on the expiry of the lease, as the premises were required for the use and occupation of one Johannes Apcar, the present sole beneficiary under the trust.

The plaintiff alleged that the Defendant failed to give possession of the premises and, it then contained a definite statement that " the premises were bonâ fide required for the use and occupation of the said beneficiary Johannes Apcar."

It is therefore clear that when this plaint was filed, the Plaintiff had the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act in mind, and he was asserting in effect that the Calcutta Rent Act would not protect the Defendant from an order of ejection by reason of the fact that the premises were bonâ fide required for the use and occupation of Mr. Apcar. It is material to notice this and because of what occurred at the trial. The suit was heard on the 21st and the 22nd of February. On the second day, namely, the 22nd, it appears from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland that the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff then stated for the first time that he relied not only on the allegation that the premises were required for the use and occupation of Mr. Apcar but also upon the latter words of sec. 11, sub-sec. (1) of the Calcutta Rent Act.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that it was not proved that the premises were bonâ fide required by Mr. Apcar for his own occupation : and, I need not say more than that I agree with the learned Judge's finding upon that question of fact.

The learned Judge then allowed the other point, which had been raised by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff, to be investigated : and, he gave directions that the necessary pleadings should be filed by the one side and by the other : and, he adjourned the hearing of the suit for a month.

The suit then came before my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose.

The allegations upon which the Plaintiff relied on that occasion were these : He relied first of all upon a covenant in the lease which is as follows : " The lessee doth hereby covenant with the lessor not to assign, sublet or part with possession of the said premises or any part thereof without the previous consent in writing of the lessor, but such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld in the case of a responsible and respectable person other than a boarding house keeper or tenants other than Europeans:" and, it was alleged on behalf of the Plaintiff that the Defendant without the knowledge or consent of the Plaintiff and without application made for the consent of the Plaintiff, sublet and gave possession of the upper floor of the premises, during the subsistence of the lease, to one Mr. Stevenson at a monthly rent of Rs. 225 and that the Defendant also without such knowledge or consent and without such application made, and during the subsistence of the said lease, sublet and parted with possession of and was now subletting certain of the godowns, forming part of the said premises to other persons as monthly tenants, and that such persons were now in possession thereof.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that there had been a breach of the covenant in question: and he stated that in his opinion the question was whether or not there had been a waiver of the breach of that covenant. He then concluded as follows: "In my opinion, therefore, there was waiver of forfeiture of the lease, and accordingly the Plaintiff's suit for ejectment must fail and be dismissed."

With much respect to the learned Judge, it seems to me that the conclusion at which the learned Judge arrived was not framed in the correct manner. Waiver of the breach of the covenant and waiver of the forfeiture are not the same things. In my judgment there was no forfeiture, because even though there may have been a breach of covenant the lessor had not done any act which showed his intention to determine the lease, as provided by sec. 111 . . . (g) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and, the learned Counsel who appeared for the Appellant agreed that in this case there was no forfeiture. But I understand that the learned Judge meant to come to the conclusion that the Plaintiff had in fact waived the breach of the covenant and that consequently the Plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

With regard to the two allegations upon which reliance was placed and as to which there is really no question of fact before us, it appears to me that the alleged subletting of the godowns is of no avail to the Plaintiff in this case, because as I understand the case, the position seems to be that the godowns were sublet before the lease was executed and that the ground floor, in the time of the Defendant's predecessor, as well as in the time of the Defendant, had been used as an office for the purpose of conducting the business of the Melitus Estate and that those facts must have been known to every one concerned.

The other matter relating to the subletting of the upper floor to Mr. Stevenson is in a different position: Mr. Stevenson went into possession in April 1921, and remained there until April 1923: and, the learned Judge has found as a fact that the Plaintiff, the Official Trustee, knew either in July or in August 1923 that there had been a subletting to Mr. Stevenson. That finding of fact of the learned Judge has not been contested in this Court.

The question, therefore, remains whether the subletting to Mr. Stevenson in April 1921 is sufficient to prevent the Defendant from relying upon the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act.

Sec. 11 (1) provides as follows: "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, or the Indian Contract Act, 1872, no order or decree for the recovery of possession of any premises shall be made so long as the tenant pays rent to the full extent allowable by this Act, and performs the conditions of the tenancy” In my judgment there was no doubt a technical breach of the covenant committed by the Defendant in April 1921 when he sublet the upper floor of the premises to Mr. Stevenson : and, the technical breach consisted in that he failed to apply for the Plaintiff's consent in writing to that subletting. There is nothing to suggest that if he had applied he would not have got the consent of the lessor or if the consent had been refused it is possible that the Defendant might have let it to Mr. Stevenson without such consent on the ground that he was a responsible and respectable tenant. That is the technical breach and the only breach upon which, in my judgment, the Plaintiff could rely in this case. I have no doubt that that technical breach was waived by the Official Trustee when he heard about it in July or August 1921. It is clear that he received the rent for August and September 1923 after he had obtained that knowledge. He never made the smallest complaint about the upper floor being sublet to Mr. Stevenson in April 1921, and he did not take any steps to terminate the tenancy on the ground of the breach of the covenant to which I have referred. I have no doubt that there was a complete waiver by the Plaintiff of the technical breach of the covenant.

In these circumstances, in my judgment, it cannot be said that the Defendant failed to perform the conditions of the tenancy within the meaning of sec. 11 (1) of the Calcutta Rent Act.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the conclusion at which the learned Judge arrived was correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

RANKIN, J.—I agree. With reference to the words in the first sub-section of sec. 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act, there are some things that those words must import, some things which they may import and there are some things which they cannot import. I do not think that they can possibly mean that because a breach of covenant was committed in 1921 which was perfectly harmless, which never was made a grievance of, and as to which no request for compensation or damage was ever made, therefore, it is impossible for the Court to give the tenant in 1924 the benefit of the Rent Act. Whether the phrase “and performs the conditions of the tenancy” must be read as applying only to the time, during which the tenant's right to possession depends entirely upon the Calcutta Rent Act, has been argued before us. If that position be correct it still remains that by the last words of the proviso to sub-sec. (1) the Court could in a proper case take into account breaches of the conditions of the tenancy committed during the course of the original tenancy. But it is not necessary for the purposes of this case to determine any nice question of construction.

The position is that, so far as it appears, no objection could have been taken to Mr. Stevenson. Had permission been asked and refused it would presumably have been open to the tenant to ignore the covenant altogether. Mr. Stevenson appears to have been in occupation of a part of the premises for two years. He left in April 1923. Whether the Official Trustee at that time knew anything about his occupation, it seems almost certain that the beneficiary Mr. Apar to whose instructions the Official Trustee paid great attention, must have known about this fact. So far from making any grievance of the matter, when it was discussed between the Official Trustee and his beneficiary in July 1923 the correspondence shows that there was no objection at all being taken about this question of sub-letting. The letter of the 2nd of August is not the letter of the man who says "you have been guilty of this breach; I do not think it necessary to forfeit, but at the end of your time you will have to go." His point is that, "The end of your lease is coming. I desire to charge you more rent; and one of the things which makes it reasonable for me to charge you more rent is the amount of rent you have been realising from your sub-tenants to say nothing of the rent that I presume is paid for the use of the office." Suppose for the sake of argument that in 1921 this matter had come to the notice of the Official Trustee and the tenant had said, "I am very sorry. I should have asked for your permission before I sublet," and the lessor had said, "Never mind, it is all right," or suppose the landlord said, "I will not forfeit but I shall charge you as damages one rupee" and that the tenant had paid. It is absurd, in these circumstances, to suppose that, because there was a technical breach in 1921, that it could have been utilized against the tenant at the end of 1923 or the beginning of 1924. The facts in this case are certainly not so strong but they come in my opinion to the same result: they show, in point of fact, a knowledge of the whole transaction after the event without any complaint being entertained in the mind of the landlord in respect of this matter. Had such a complaint been made, anything that could have been asked as compensation might have been paid by the tenant. In my judgment it would be putting an unreasonable construction upon sec. 11 in this case, if we were to hold that the tenant after 1921 was entirely deprived of any benefit of the Calcutta Rent Act. I entirely agree that the mere question of waiver of the right of re-entry is in no way conclusive in this case.

It seems to me that the learned Judge's decision was right in the result, and, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2298 of 1922.

CUMING, J.	TARAPROSAD SAG,
CHAKRAVARTI, J.	Defendant No. 1,
1925,	Appellant,
Heard, 8 and	v.

Judgment,	Plaintiff, Respondent.
29, July.

Hindu law—Hindu widow, debts incurred by—Amount borrowed in excess of necessity—Effect on the transaction—Onus of proof on person challenging transaction to show excess—Nature and scope of enquiry to be made by Court.

In cases where it is shown that the money borrowed by a Hindu widow was more than the necessity justified, the Court should find whether the creditor knew or could have known by means of enquiries then available that the money was in excess of the necessity, and if the finding is in the affirmative then the Court should allow the reversioner to recover the property on payment of the sum really justified by the necessity. If on the other hand the finding of the Court is in the negative, the transaction should be upheld in its entirety.

The onus is on the reversioner who challenges the transaction to show that the sum which the widow borrowed for the necessity which really existed was in excess of the necessity and that there were means available to the creditor for making an enquiry as to the actual amount needed by the lady or that the amount was excessive to his knowledge.

It is impossible to draw a line as to the extent to which an excess should be held not to vitiate the transaction. In the absence of fraud or collusion between the widow and the creditor, when the necessity for the loan is established, mere excess of the amount lent should not be held to vitiate the transaction. When the excess is disproportionately large that itself being evidence of collusion the Court should not uphold the transaction. In cases where the Court finds that the necessity was inadequate for the entire loan the reversioner should be put to terms.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of August 1922, against the decree of G. N. Roy, Esq., 2nd Additional District Judge of Zillah Midnapore, dated the 28th of June 1922, affirming the decree of Babu Nitai Charan Ghosh, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court at Midnapore, dated the 12th of January 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Santosh Kumar Pal for the Appellant.

Babu Apoorba Charan Mukerji for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the reversionary heir of one Gavinda Giri on the death of his widow Kausalya in the year 1916 for a declaration that the Defendant No. 1 had acquired no title by his purchase at the sale in execution of a mortgage decree against the widow.

The facts shortly stated are these : One Gavinda Giri died in the year 1868 sonless leaving a widow Kausalya; she lived with Gavinda's cousin Tulsaram who was her next reversioner, in her husband's house, but Tulsaram drove her away from her home in the year 1891. She brought a suit against Khirode, grandson of Tulsaram and recovered a decree for the share of the land which was left by her husband and it appears that in that suit she was assisted by the present Plaintiff and his brothers who were the sister's sons of Gavinda.

In execution of a decree for mesne profits against Khirode she purchased Khirode's half share in 1896, and was since then in possession of the entire property consisting of 20 bighas 2 cottas and 13 chittaks of land. But she was again disturbed in her possession by the present Plaintiff and his brothers and was dispossessed of 7 bighas out of 10 bighas of lands which were left to her after she had sold other lands. Then she brought a suit for possession of those 7 bighas against the present Plaintiff and his brothers in 1908 and obtained a decree for possession on the 8th December of that year.

Now, it appears that Kausalya mortgaged the lands in suit for Rs. 500 in favour of the Defendant No. 1 in the benami of one Harnarain on the 25th Sraban 1314 B. S. and then a second bond was executed by her in favour of Taraprosad, Defendant No. 1, for Rs. 795 on the 13th Magh 1315 B. S. and out of the money so borrowed the money due under the first bond was paid. Taraprosad obtained a mortgage decree on compromise against Kausalya in August 1909 and the mortgaged properties were sold in execution of the mortgage decree.

This is the sale which the Plaintiff challenges in this suit as not binding on him.

On the death of Kausalya, Madhu Sudan Giri, the only surviving son of Gavinda's sister, brought this suit as the reversionary heir of Gavinda Giri for recovery of possession of the lands sold in execution of the mortgage decree on the allegation that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had kept him out of possession of the lands without any right.

The Defendant No. 1 contested the suit and his main defence was that the mortgages in his favour were executed by Kausalya for legal necessity and therefore the sale thereunder binds the Plaintiff, the reversionary heir, and he further contended that half share of the properties which Kausalya purchased in execution of her decree against Khirode was her stridhan property to which the reversioner had no claim as it was sold in execution of a decree against Kausalya.

The Court of first instance found that there was legal necessity for a portion of the money advanced by the Defendant No. 1 but decreed the suit holding that the Defendant No. 1 was like a mortgagee in possession and as he had rendered no account of the rents and profits he could claim no right to retain possession against the Plaintiff.

On appeal by the Defendant No. 1 the Additional District Judge affirmed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal although he found that the amount for which legal necessity was established was larger than the amount found by the learned Munsif. The Defendant No. 1 has preferred this second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge.

Before I deal with the main question as to whether the learned Additional District Judge has properly applied the principle which applies to a case of legal necessity for alienation by a Hindu widow I shall refer to some of the salient facts which have been found by the Court below.

Kausalya inherited about 10 bighas of land left by her husband and led a peaceful life till she was dispossessed by Tulsaram in the year 1891. She was then plunged in litigation on account of dispossession by her then reversionary heir and it was in 1894 that she recovered a decree for possession and she was again dispossessed by the present Plaintiff at about that time. The learned Munsif, to quote his own words, found that "Kausalya Bewa got possession of a half share after April 1894, and of the remaining half share after 1896. She was, however, not allowed by her husband's nephew to be in peaceful possession of the entire land for any long time. She was dispossessed from 7 bighas out of the 10 bighas that was left to her."

In 1908 the present Plaintiff asserted in the suit brought by Kausalya against him and others that she was in possession of only 3 bighas of land and they were in possession of 7 bighas from 1896 down to 1908. The mortgage bonds in favour of the Defendant No. 1 were executed in 1907 and beginning of 1909. It is clear therefore that before the mortgages she had in her possession only 3 bighas of land even after she had recovered the land from Khirode and she had to carry on litigation with the Plaintiff for the recovery of the 7 bighas in his hand, and she obtained her decree in 1908. It is quite clear therefore that she was kept out of possession of her lands successively by her reversioners. The Plaintiff himself kept her out of possession for about 12 years when she executed her first mortgage bond in favour of Defendant No. 1. The legal necessities for the sum of Rs. 500 covered by the bond of 1907 were first Rs. 130 for payment of earlier debts due under a mortgage which was satisfied by Defendant No. 1 and Rs. 370 taken in cash were said to have been spent :— First, to meet the expenses of litigations, both criminal and civil. Second, medical treatment. Third, pilgrimage to Gaya. Fourth, payment of arrears of rents.

The second bond which the Defendant No. 1 took was for Rs. 795 out of which Rs. 220 were paid in cash and the balance went in satisfaction of the previous bond. The creditor therefore has to establish the legal necessity for Rs. 220 paid in cash. Now the learned Additional District Judge has found that when the first bond was taken Kausalya had been dispossessed of the major part of her lands but has taken no notice of the helpless condition in which the woman found herself on account of the conduct of her reversioners, the Plaintiff being one of them. The learned Additional District Judge has found that all the items of legal necessities except the 4th item did exist but has assessed the amount of such necessities according to his own view as to the amounts which ought to have been spent for the necessities so found.

The total expenses for which the estate was legally chargeable according to the learned Judge amounted to Rs. 350.

Agreeing with the Munsif that the Defendant No. 1 was in possession of the land and had not accounted for the rents and profits thereof, he held that the Plaintiff should get a decree for possession and dismissed the appeal.

The points urged in this appeal are :—
Firstly.—That the Courts below have erred in holding that the Defendant No. 1, the creditor, was bound to show what the actual amount spent by the widow was.

Secondly.—That the Court of Appeal below was in error in holding that the creditor was entitled to credit not for the sum actually spent but which according to the decision of the Court ought to have been spent by the widow.

Thirdly.—That the Court below having found that legal necessity for the loan existed should not have passed an unconditional decree for possession without directing a refund of the money found to have been borrowed for legal necessity.

We think that the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge is vitiated by the erroneous principles which he has applied in the decision of this case.

It is now well-settled that a creditor as in this case must prove that legal necessity did exist or that he made proper and bonâ fide enquiries as to the existence of such necessity and satisfied himself by all reasonable means as to its existence.

The creditor is not bound to see to the application of the money borrowed by a widow when the money was lent for legal necessity, see Kameswar Pershad v. Run Bahadoor (1). On the question of bonâ fide enquiries by the Defendant No. 1 the learned Judge says, "I am not satisfied that the Defendant acted bonâ fide." Then the learned Judge gives his reasons for this view. He thinks that the criminal case could not require Rs. 110 and the Kabiraj who treated Kausalya was not so highly qualified as to deserve a fee of Rs. 50 although the Kabiraj swore that he did receive that sum as his fee. The enquiries which a creditor can make is as to the existence of the necessity and also as to the debts she has incurred for a legal necessity and the amount she is in need of for meeting a necessity. It is impossible for a widow in the position of Kausalya to satisfy the creditor as to the actual amount she must borrow for meeting the future expenses of litigations to which she was driven by the Plaintiff himself. In a case like this the Court should be satisfied that legal necessity existed and that the sum lent was not unreasonably large. The transaction should be shown to be genuine and free from doubts of collusion between the creditor and the widow for raising larger sum than was really needed. The interest of the reversioner should no doubt be protected but at the same time the widow should not be hampered by unreasonable restrictions in raising money when legal necessity exists.

The learned Judge observes that the interest was high but does not take into account the risk which the creditor took and the helpless condition in which the widow was. When the main necessity for the loan was brought about by the wrongful act of the reversioner himself he should not be heard to complain of the high rate of interest more especially when he made no attempt to show that money was available to the widow at a lower rate of interest than was charged in the bond.

The existence of the necessities have been established by the creditor and as the learned Judge does not find that the consideration money was not paid, the creditor in a case like this has prima facie discharged the burden which lay on him.

After finding that the legal necessities alleged by the creditor did exist both Courts enquired not as to what was the money actually needed or was spent by the widow but as to what she ought to have spent. For instance in trying the question as to what was the amount necessary for the litigation to which the lady was driven by the Plaintiff, the learned Judge takes the amount allowed to her in the decree which she eventually got against the Plaintiff for possession of the land as the sum needed for litigation. Everyone acquainted with the costs of litigation in this country knows that the actual amount which a successful litigant gets as costs allowed by the Courts is much less than the actual amount spent by him.

In cases where it is shown that the money borrowed was more than the necessity justified then the Court should find whether the creditor knew or could have known by means of enquiries then available that the money was in excess of the necessity, and if the finding is in the affirmative then the Court should allow the reversioner to recover the property on payment of the sum really justified by the necessity. If on the other hand the finding of the Court is in the negative, the transaction should be upheld in its entirety. In this connection see the cases of Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh (2), Suigam v. Droupadi (3) and Ramdei Kunwar v. Abu Jafar (4).

In the circumstances of the present case the reversioner, the Plaintiff who drove the lady to the litigation for which the money was borrowed, must show that the sum which the lady borrowed for the necessity which really existed was in excess of the necessity and that there were means available to the creditor for making an enquiry as to the actual amount needed by the lady or that the amount was excessive to his knowledge. The mere fact that the amount borrowed is to some extent larger than the sum actually needed ought not to vitiate the mortgage.

TARAPROSAD SAU v. MADHU SUDAN GIRI.

It is impossible to draw a line as to what extent an excess should be held not to vitiate the transaction. In the absence of fraud or collusion between the widow and the creditor, when the necessity for the loan is established, mere excess of the amounts lent should not be held to vitiate the validity of the transaction. When the excess is disproportionately large, that itself is evidence of collusion; then the Court should not uphold the transaction. In cases where the Court finds that the necessity was inadequate for the entire loan, the reversioner should be put to terms. The decree for possession should be subject to payment of the sum paid to the widow without interest, the usufruct of the property being set off against the interest. The lower Appellate Court was in error in treating the Defendant No. 1 as a mortgagee in possession and in awarding an unconditional decree for possession to the Plaintiff.

The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside, the case sent back to that Court so that the appeal may be re-heard in the light of the above observations. The Appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal, the other costs will abide the result.

Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), sec. 72—Risk note, Form B, consignment of goods by—Non-delivery of complete packages—Suit for damages for non-delivery—Onus—Initial onus on Railway to prove loss—"Loss," meaning of—Suit, proper constitution of, as to parties—Defendant described as "Agent, Railway administration," if sufficient—Appearance by Railway Company to contest suit—Misdescription—Amendment.

Where goods were transmitted by Railway at a lower charge than the ordinary tariff rate upon the consignor signing a risk note, Form B, the burden is upon the Plaintiff, consignor, of proving that the case falls within the exception contained in the risk note, viz., that the goods were lost owing to the wilful neglect of its servants, etc. But before the Plaintiff is called upon to prove that the goods were lost by the wilful neglect of, or theft by, the Railway servants, it must be shown that the goods have been lost; and unless the fact of the loss is admitted by the Plaintiff, the onus is, in the first instance, on the Railway administration to prove that the goods have been lost and it will be then for the Plaintiff to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of, or theft by, the Railway servants.

The loss, as contemplated by sec. 72 of the Indian Railways Act, is loss of the goods by the Railway and not loss to the consignor.

This appeal arises out of a suit to recover Rs. 709-10 as compensation for goods consigned by the Plaintiffs' agent for carriage by Railway which were not delivered to the Plaintiffs.

It appears that 13 tins of ghee and one tin of mustard oil, in seven packages, were consigned by the Plaintiffs' agent at Shahgunj, a station on the Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway, to the Plaintiffs at Howrah. Only one package (containing one tin of ghee and one tin of mustard oil) arrived at Howrah and the Plaintiff was asked to take delivery thereof on giving a full acquittance receipt which he refused to do. The other six complete packages did not arrive at Howrah at all and were not delivered to the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff thereupon served a notice under sec. 77 of the Indian Railways Act upon the Defendants and brought the suit for compensation.

The Court of first instance allowed the claim in part. The Court of Appeal below dismissed the claim altogether. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Under sec. 72 of the Railways Act the responsibility of a Railway administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods delivered to the administration to be carried by Railway subject to the other provisions of the Act is that of a bailee under secs. 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, but that responsibility may be limited by an agreement in writing signed by or on behalf of the sender of the goods in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council. The goods in the present case were sent under the risk note, Form B, which is approved by the Governor-General in Council. The risk note, Form B, states that the consignor, in consideration of a lower charge than the ordinary tariff rate chargeable for the consignment, agrees to hold the "Railway administration and all other Railway administrations working in connexion therewith, etc., harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment from any cause whatever except for the loss of or damage to the said consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway administration, to theft by, or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them before, during and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connexion therewith, or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively, for the carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment; provided the term wilful neglect be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any other unforeseen event or accident."

As stated above, six complete packages were not delivered at all, and the seventh package was tendered but the Plaintiff was asked to give a full acquittance receipt. The defence pleaded non-liability under the risk note, Form B. The Court of Appeal below held that the burden of proving that the case falls within the exception contained in the risk note, viz., that the goods were lost owing to the wilful neglect of the Railway administration or to theft by or wilful neglect of its servants, etc., is upon the Plaintiff. That having regard to the authorities must be held to be so. But before the Plaintiff is called upon to prove that the goods were lost by wilful neglect or by theft, it must be shown that the goods have been lost. Unless that initial fact is proved, viz., that the goods have been lost, we do not see how the Plaintiff can be required to prove how the loss occurred.

The goods were made over to the Railway for carriage and they have not been delivered to the consignee. How is the consignor or the consignee to know whether they have been lost? We think that it is for the Railway administration to prove in the first instance that the goods have been lost, and it will be then for the Plaintiff to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of or theft by Railway servants. That also must in almost every case be impossible for the Plaintiff to prove, but that is what he undertakes to do under the risk note, at any rate the decided cases hold that it is for him to prove it.

In the recent case of The East Indian Railway Company v. Jogpat Singh (1), Page, J., considered the question exhaustively and came to the conclusion that except in cases where the Plaintiff admits that the goods have been lost, a Railway Company is not entitled to rely upon the provisions of the risk note which pro tanto exempt it from liability unless and until evidence has been adduced which satisfies the Court that a loss has occurred.

It is contended that that was a case of non-delivery as regards which no issue was raised in the present case. But the present case was also one of non-delivery. It is true, the learned Subordinate Judge refers to the suit as being one for recovery of goods lost in transit. Evidently he misunderstood the Plaintiff's case for which the Plaintiff was not responsible. The Plaintiff's case (as appears from the plaint and even from the statement of the case in the judgment of the trial Court) was that the goods were not delivered to him. The third issue, viz., "Are the Plaintiffs entitled to the amount of damages claimed or any portion thereof" was wide enough, and must be taken to have been framed with reference to the Plaintiff's case as stated in the plaint which was one for non-delivery. Then it is said that in the notice under sec. 77 the Plaintiff admitted the loss of the goods. But we do not find any such admissions. The notice was merely in terms of the section which provides for compensation for "the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods."

We do not think therefore that there was any admission on the part of the Plaintiffs that the goods were lost by the Railway.

It is contended, however, that "loss" means loss to the consignor and not loss of the goods by the Railway. In other words, "non-delivery" of goods is "loss" of goods to the party. But if so, there would have been no necessity for the words "loss, destruction or deterioration" in the risk note, Form B. A non-delivery may be due to loss of the goods, but may be due to other causes, and it is possible to conceive of cases where goods have not been lost but not delivered. For instance one tin of ghee may be mixed up with thousand others in the Railway godown, and no proper search has been made for finding it out. It is unnecessary to consider whether a temporary loss is a loss within the meaning of the section, because in the present case there is not only no evidence that the goods have been lost or what became of them, but there is no suggestion of any temporary loss of the goods in the manner referred to above.

It is contended that the judgment of Page, J., is opposed to that of Smith v. G. W. R. Co. (2). But in that case the loss of the goods was admitted by the Plaintiff although the Railway Company did not offer any explanation as to how the goods were lost, and it was held that the refusal of the Defendants to account for the loss of the goods was not evidence which justified the Court in inferring that the loss arose from the wilful misconduct of the Defendants' servants.

In the case of The E. I. Railway Company v. Jogpat Singh (1), Page, J., has referred to a number of decisions as supporting his view as to the meaning of the expression "loss" and has considered the cases in which a contrary view was taken. We entirely agree with the learned Judge with regard to the meaning of the expression "loss."

It is contended on behalf of the Respondent that the suit is not brought against proper parties, the Defendants being described as "Agent, East Indian Railway" and "Agent, Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway." Reference is made to the cases of Ram Das Sein v. Mr. Cecil Stephenson (3), Nubeen Chunder Paul v. Cecil Stephenson, Agent of the East Indian Railway Company (4), Agent, Bengal Nagpur Railway v. Behari Lal Dutt (5) and East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Lakhan Ram (6).

In the first case the Defendants were "Mr. Cecil Stephenson, Deputy Agent of the East Indian Railway Company and Mr. W. B. Latimar, District Engineer of Rajmehal and Birbhum." Obviously there was no cause of action against Mr. Cecil Stephenson, Deputy Agent, and Mr. Latimar, District Engineer, and they could not represent the Railway Company. In the second also the suit was against Mr. Cecil Stephenson, Agent of the Railway Company. In the third, the Defendant was described as Agent, Bengal Nagpur Railway, and it was held that the plaint could not be allowed to be amended as it was not a case of misdescription, but the substitution of one party for another who had been wrongly sued and the suit would have been barred by limitation at the date of the amendment. In the fourth where a suit was instituted against "The Agent, East Indian Railway" it was held that the Plaintiff was not entitled after the period of limitation, for the suit had expired to amend the plaint by substituting the Railway Company for the Defendant originally sued.

On the other hand in the case of The Saraspur Manufacturing Company v. B. B. and C. I. Railway Company (7), where the Defendant was described as the Agent of the Railway Company and the Defendant Company appeared and filed a written statement raising various pleas in defence the Court held that it was a case of misdescription and allowed amendment. It is to be noted that in the case of Agent, Bengal Nagpur Railway v. Behari Lal Dutt (5), Suhrawardy, J., observed that on the facts of the above case he might hold the same opinion.

In the present case it is true the East Indian Railway in the written statement pleaded that the Plaintiff had no cause of action nor any right to sue the Defendant, but no specific objection was taken by the Defendant, on the ground that the proper party had not been sued, and the Railway Company entered appearance, put in written statement and fought out the case. The question of the proper party not being sued is not even referred to in the judgment of the trial Court. The Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway pleaded that it being a Railway owned and worked by the Government, the Secretary of State should have been sued. But the Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway did not prefer any appeal against the decree of the trial Court, and it was only the East Indian Railway which appealed and it cannot be said that the defence of the two Railways on this point was the same. There is no question of prejudice to the Company, as it knew well the claim made against it and considered itself the party sued. The present case is stronger than the Bombay case, as in the present no specific objection was taken in the trial Court on the ground that the East Indian Railway had not been sued. We think that it is a case of misdescription which can be rectified by a formal amendment as the case has been fought out on the merits by the Railway Companies. By the amendment no new Defendant would be added or substituted so as to attract the provisions of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act. The Appellant has put in a petition for amendment and we allow the amendment.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. Each party will bear his own costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 94. Or. 39, r. 1. Temporary injunction restraining Defendants from interfering with Plaintiffs' possession, if may be granted, on the ground of apprehended interference with collection of rent and breach of the peace Jurisdiction.

Where it was alleged in the plaint that one of the three Plaintiffs was in possession and in the prayers for relief, the Plaintiffs asked for declaration of title and consequential reliefs and also for an injunction to restrain the Defendants from interfering with the possession of Plaintiff No. 1 till the decision of the suit, and an application by the Plaintiffs for a temporary injunction to restrain the Defendants from interfering with the Plaintiff No. 1's possession, upon the allegation that unless the injunction was granted there would be interference with Plaintiffs' collection of rents and there might be an apprehension of a breach of the peace, was granted by the trial Court:

Held—That whatever other remedies the Plaintiffs might have in the matter, there was no case for the issue of a temporary injunction either under Or. 39 or under sec. 94 of the Civil Procedure Code and the order was passed without jurisdiction.

This was an application under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, in the matter of Mis. Appeal No. 75 of 1925, of the Court of the 1st Additional District Judge of the 24-Perganas, (Alipur) and in Title Suit No. 15 of 1925 of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, 24-Perganas, (Alipur).

The facts of the case material for the report will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MUKERJI, J.—It is unnecessary to set out the facts connected with the litigation out of which this application arises as they have been set out in detail in the judgments of the two lower Courts. The application arises out of an order issuing a temporary injunction restraining the Defendants, one of whom the Defendant No. 2 is the Petitioner before us, from interfering with the possession of the Plaintiffs. The sole question before us now is whether the Courts below had jurisdiction to pass the order of temporary injunction complained of in this case. The order has been made in connection with a suit which is now pending in the second Court of the Subordinate Judge of the Twenty-four Perganas. The prayers in the plaint in that suit are substantially as follows: (a) That the right of the Plaintiffs who are three in number, as *shebait*s of certain deities may be declared; (b) that it may be declared that the three Plaintiffs are entitled to the management of the debutter properties for a period of three years commencing from the 1st Magh 1331, B. S., each of the Plaintiffs being entitled to such management for a period of one year; (c) that the Defendants be restrained from interfering with the possession of the Plaintiff No. 1 till the decision of the suit; the prayers (d), (e) and (f), that if necessary a scheme may be framed, need not be referred to as they relate to certain consequential reliefs. It is clear, therefore, that the suit is not for recovery of possession against the Defendants. In cl. (c) to which I have already referred, the Plaintiffs pray for an injunction restraining the Defendants from interfering with their possession only till the decision of the suit. There is, therefore, no prayer for any injunction which may last after the disposal of the suit. The question is whether, upon prayers such as these, a temporary injunction may be issued by the Court in connection with the suit. In order to determine this question, we have to refer to the application upon which this injunction has been granted. The application filed by the Plaintiffs supported by the affidavit of the Plaintiff No. 1 states, first of all, the facts relating to the suit that is now pending. In para. 2 of the application, it is distinctly stated that the Plaintiff No. 1 is now in possession of the properties which form the subject-matter of the suit, having been put in possession thereof by the last manager Kanailal Mitter. In para. 3, it is stated that, if the Defendants be not restrained from interfering with the possession of the Plaintiff No. 1, there will be a serious dislocation of business, the properties will be wasted, the sheba and pūja of the deities will suffer as there will be no realization from the debutter properties and there will be breaches of the peace. Upon these allegations, it is difficult to say how a case justifying an injunction either under the provisions of Or. 39 or sec. 94 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been made out. Indeed, the learned vakil appearing on behalf of the Opposite Party does not profess to contend that the case comes within the purview of Or. 39, C. P. C., but he urges that the injunction granted should not be disturbed inasmuch as it was really issued in accordance with the terms of sec. 94, C. P. C., to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated. The allegations taken at their highest amount to this that, if an injunction is not granted, there will be interference in the Plaintiffs' collection of rents, that there may be apprehension of a breach of the peace and that there may be disturbances of the Plaintiff No. 1's peaceful possession of the properties to which he has been put in possession. These allegations even if established would not, having regard to the nature of the suit and the reliefs prayed for, bring the case within the scope of sec. 94, C. P. C., and it cannot be said that, even if these allegations be true, the refusal to grant a temporary injunction would defeat the ends of justice. Whatever other remedies he may have in the matter, injunction in the present suit is not his remedy. In this view of the matter, I am of opinion that the order that has been passed restraining the Defendants from interfering with the Plaintiffs' possession till the decision of the suit has been passed without jurisdiction. I would, therefore, make the rule absolute and set aside the order passed by the Court below with costs to the Petitioners. the hearing-fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

R. W. VALLIANT v. MRS. ELEAZAR.

—Kidnapping—Elements necessary to constitute the offence.

In order to support a conviction for kidnapping from lawful guardianship the following are the points requiring proof—

(1) That the person kidnapped was then a minor under sixteen years of age if a female. (2) That such person was in the keeping of a lawful guardian. (3) That the accused took or enticed such person out of such keeping. (4) That he did so without the consent of the lawful guardian.

The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardian's keeping. But if the minor abandons her guardian with no intention of returning she cannot be held to continue in the guardian's keeping:

Held, on a consideration of the circumstances of the case—That the offence of kidnapping was not made out.

This was a Rule granted on the 2nd September 1924 against an order of the 3rd Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta (A. Z. Khan, Esq.), dated the 6th August 1924, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 363, I. P. C., and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 200 with detention in Court till its rising.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Langford James and Camel and Babu Satindra Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Khundkar for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioner R. W. Valliant has been convicted by the 3rd Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, of an offence punishable under sec. 363, I. P. C., and sentenced to be detained till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. He has obtained a Rule calling on the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on him should not be set aside on the two following grounds:—

"For that upon the facts found and proved in the case, no offence under sec. 363 has been made out against the accused and the learned Magistrate has erred in law in not holding so."

"For that the reasons given by the learned Magistrate for convicting the accused are unsound and illegal."

The Petitioner has been convicted of having kidnapped Mildred Eleazar aged about 15 years and 5 months from the lawful guardianship of her mother. It appears that about two months before the date of occurrence, the 24th May last, the Petitioner and the girl met and struck up a friendship. This friendship ripened into affection. The girl's mother and brother disapproved of this. There was an episode on the 20th May which led to the girl being chastised by her mother. On the afternoon of the 24th May there was a quarrel between the girl and her brother. They kicked each other and the girl left her home and went to the house of a friend Mrs. Victor. From there she wrote a letter to her mother in which she said she was not coming back. At Mrs. Victor's she was met by the Petitioner and the two went to the house of Miss Christian, a sister of Mrs. Victor. The girl wanted to stay the night there but Miss Christian's brother did not consent to this. The Petitioner who had left the girl in order to fulfil an engagement as a musician at the Saturday Club returned to the Victor's at about 8 P.M., and took her to his mother's house in Kidderpore where she remained for four days. In the meantime the police had been informed of the disappearance of the girl. The Petitioner when questioned about the girl denied knowledge of her whereabouts but after he was arrested he wrote to his father and the girl was produced and made over to her mother.

In order to support a conviction for kidnapping from lawful guardianship the following are the points requiring proof.

(1) That the person kidnapped was then a minor under 16 years of age if a female.

(2) That such person was in the keeping of a lawful guardian.

(3) That the accused took or enticed such person out of such keeping.

(4) That he did so without the consent of the lawful guardian.

In the present case it has been established that the girl Mildred Eleazar was under 16 years of age and that she was in the keeping of her mother who was her lawful guardian prior to her leaving her home on the 24th May. The question we have to decide is whether it has been proved in this case that the Petitioner took or enticed the girl out of the keeping of her mother. Several cases decided by English and Indian Courts were cited before us including those to which reference has been made in the judgment of the lower Court. In these cases the following important principles have been laid down. The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardian's keeping. But if the minor abandons her guardian with no intention of returning she cannot be held to continue in the guardian's keeping. Which principle should be applied to a particular case depends on the facts of that case. We are in some difficulty in the present case as the learned Magistrate has not stated clearly the facts found by him on which he bases his conviction of the Petitioner. The guilt or innocence of the Petitioner depends on whether when the girl left her home she did so of her own accord and had definitely decided not to return or whether her conduct was a mere petulant outburst in consequence of a quarrel with her brother. The girl's evidence gives us no assistance. She has told two totally different stories to the police and to the Magistrate and her attempt to explain away her former statements is too absurd to need discussion. Her mother is not a witness on whom we can place implicit reliance. A most important piece of evidence on the question of the state of the girl's mind when she left home would be the contents of the letter which she wrote to her mother from Mrs. Victor's house. This letter has been withheld by the prosecution and all we know of its contents is that she wrote that she was not coming back. Further the Victors who could have given important evidence on this point have not been produced. The Petitioner acted foolishly in denying knowledge of the girl's whereabouts when questioned by the police. But the explanation he has given in his written statement, that he thought she would be ill-treated if sent back to her mother does not appear to us unreasonable. On a full consideration of the oral and documentary evidence in the case we hold that the prosecution has failed to prove that the Petitioner has committed an offence punishable under sec. 263, I. P. C.

We accordingly make this rule absolute. We set aside the conviction and sentence of the Petitioner and acquit him of the charge on which he was tried. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

MAUNG BYA and anr.,

Appellants,

v.

MAUNG-KYI NYO and

ors., Respondents.

Watercourse—Rights of riparian owners—Artificial and natural watercourse, if differ—Damming up of channel—Resulting loss to neighbouring owner—Liability—English law, applied.

The widening a little, and deepening a little, possibly trimming the banks a little, of an existing ancient fresh-water natural watercourse does not convert it into a canal.

In the case of a natural watercourse, the riparian owners are each entitled to the unimpeded flow of the water in its natural course and to its reasonable enjoyment as it passes through his land, as a natural incident of the ownership of his land. In the case of an artificial watercourse, any right of the owner to the flow of the water must rest on prescription or grant from or contract with the owner of the land from which the water is artificially brought. There is, however, a well-established principle of law that a watercourse originally artificial may have been made in such circumstances and have been used in such a way that an owner of land situated on its bank will have all the rights over it that a riparian owner would have if it had been a natural stream.

A raised road or bund ran transversely across the depressed ground through which flowed an ancient fresh-water channel and was properly provided with a gap for the flow and a bridge over the channel. The bund thus provided with an eye and a bridge to permit the inflow and outflow of water was interfered with by the Defendant who filled up the eye and the channel course thereat and converted an innocuous bund into a dam, which dammed back the water on to the Plaintiff's land:

Held—That the Defendant was responsible for damage thus caused to the Plaintiff's property.

The principles of law as laid down in English decisions applied.

This was an appeal (No. 106 of 1924) from a decree, dated the 31st May 1921, of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, which reversed a decree, dated the 27th September 1919, of the District Court of Pyapon.

The litigation was instituted by the Appellants who claimed to recover from the Respondents damages for losses alleged to have been caused by the erection of a bund by the Appellants.

The result of this erection was, they stated, that their lands were inundated by flood water. The District Judge found that the bund had been erected by the Defendants over a naturally formed canal and had thereby shut out the flow of water through the canal, and that this action by the Defendants had caused the floods and damage alleged. He accordingly made a decree awarding damages of about Rs. 8,000.

The Chief Court were of opinion that the case set up in the pleadings had not been established and they further held that the canal was a natural watercourse, that the bund was built by Government, and that the Plaintiffs had never acquired any right to a free flow of water past the point where the bund was erected.

Messrs. Hon. G. Lawrence, K. G. and Besley for the Appellants.

Messrs. Harney, K. C. and Leach for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal

from a judgment of the Chief Court of Lower Burma (Maung Kin and Duckworth, JJ.), dated 31st May 1921, allowing the appeal of the Respondents against a decree of the District Court of Pyapon (Po Bye, District Judge), dated 27th September 1919, by which the said District Judge ordered the Respondents to pay the Appellants the sum of Rs. 8,821-48 by way of damages and the costs of the suit.

The Appellants in the second paragraph of their case allege that the question raised is whether in Burma a lower agricultural owner is liable to compensate a higher agricultural owner for damage to crops by inundation caused by the blocking of a canal running through the lands of the lower owner by which the water would otherwise have been drained from the land of the higher owner.

In a sense, but only in a limited sense, is that statement accurate. Save in the second and third of the reasons for their appeal it is put forward that the law applicable in Lower Burma to the flow of and flooding by fresh-water rivers or watercourses, whether they be natural or artificial, or trespasses on the bed and soil of such rivers and streams, is different from the law as applied to similar subjects in England. A little consideration of the two cases cited will show that there is no conflict between the two systems of law, and it was not contended in argument on the hearing of the appeal that the general principles of the laws of England touching the matters above-mentioned did not apply to Lower Burma.

The action out of which the appeal has arisen was brought by the two Appellants (who are husband and wife) in the District Court of Pyapon, Lower Burma, to recover damages amounting to Rs. 13,448 for the wrongful flooding by the acts and procurement of the Respondents of a large tract of paddy lands, 68,541 acres in extent, belonging to the Appellants, whereby the productivity of these lands was, in the season in which the acts were done, so reduced that they only yielded 3,867 baskets of paddy instead of their normal yield of about 17,300. The District Judge decided in favour of the Appellants and awarded them Rs. 8,821-48 damages. The Chief Court on appeal reversed the decree of the District Judge, and on grounds which appear to the Board strange, and are indeed unsound, decided in the Respondents' favour.

Several maps of the locality were given in evidence; the two most intelligible and useful were the first, a map marked Ex. A, and the second, dated in the year 1906-7, described as Ex. 2A. With almost perverted ingenuity the draftsman of these and, indeed, of many other maps, has omitted to place upon the face of them any indication of the points of the compass, so that in dealing with them one is obliged to use the words left and right, and top and bottom of the maps in order to endeavour to fix any point or object. A study of these two maps, however, enables one to get an idea of the terrain, especially as the map of 1906 represents what was the nature of the tract of country with which the case is conversant before any of the works were executed, the misuse of which is alleged to have caused the flooding, and as the second map, Ex. 2A, shows what were the features of that tract after these works had been executed. The map of 1906-7 purports to be a plan 126 of Sakangyi circle, Bogale township. It corresponded closely with the map Ex. A.

Many rivulets or watercourses are depicted upon it. They correspond with those depicted upon Ex. A. The main difference between them is that on the latter a prolongation of the watercourse from Singu Chaung is to be found which is absent from 2A of 1906-7.

The watercourse, styled extravagantly the canal, represented on A, and lettered A, B, C, D, G, H, emptying into the sea creek at A is precisely the same watercourse as is represented on the map of 1906-7, coming from Singu Chaung and debouching into the same sea creek at the same place. No doubt the so-called canal is represented as being something broader than the corresponding stretch of watercourse on the map of 1906, but the fact of vital importance is that all the rivulets or watercourses are depicted as of the same width and kind, and resemble each other in all respects. There could be no object in depicting on this map a watercourse as existing where none, in fact, existed when the map was made. The map therefore absolutely refutes the contention put forward with some hardihood on behalf of the Respondents, that before the canal was made its site was a mere depression in the earth surface through which no stream ran; but in which, after heavy rain, stagnant water for a time accumulated. Now what was done in 1913-14 was, in their Lordships' view, the widening a little, and deepening a little, possibly trimming the banks a little, of an existing ancient fresh-water natural watercourse, not in their view the making by excavation and such work of a watercourse, styled a canal, where none such theretofore existed.

The lands of the first Respondent lie to the left-hand side of the map, between the lands of the Appellant and the sea creek Kyonkan Chaung. On the map Ex. A they are numbered 17, 18, 30, 31, 32. The other Respondents are merely cultivators in the village of Kamakalu. The lands of the Appellants are comprised in three kwins lying to the right of the first Respondent's lands and named respectively Kasaung Ngotto (both marked on Ex. A), and Sakangyi South and Kasaung Ngotto (both marked on map B). They are numbered separately 1-14 on map marked B. In addition to the refutation of the Respondents' suggestion as to there never having been formerly a rivulet or watercourse where the canal exists now, one finds that several witnesses depose to there having been a small Yo where the bridge was afterwards erected, that a jungle log was placed across the Yo before the bridge was built, which certainly suggests to their Lordships that this log was designed to fulfil the function of stepping stones to enable people to cross the stream, possibly dry-shodded and in safety.

In the present case the early history of this locus in quo, this large tract of paddy land intersected with rivulets of water, large or small, is very vague. The evidence as to what were the rights and obligations which the inhabitants owed to each other in reference to these watercourses, the local law as to their regulation, their enjoyment and protection, is so confused and contradictory that it has occurred to the Board that it would possibly be better to reverse the usual order of procedure and, before dealing with the evidence of the witnesses, the facts proved, and the rulings of the judges, to demonstrate, by reference to four or five well-known English cases, what the well-established law is touching the flow of and flooding by rivers and watercourses, the diminution of their currents or the diversion of their course, the trespass upon their beds, the incursion of the sea upon one's land, and the measures the owner may take to protect himself, and then by applying a coherent and consistent body of principles to the facts proved, endeavour to solve in harmony with English law the issues raised, considering any local law which may modify the English law.

The first of these cases is Bickett v. Morris (1). It deals with trespass on the alveus or bed of a fresh-water watercourse.

The Appellant obtained, in consideration of £10 paid by him, permission from a riparian owner on the river Kilmarnock, in Ayrshire, to extend a certain wall then standing on the Respondents' premises on to the alveus of the river as far as was indicated by a red line drawn on an identified ordnance map. The Appellant proceeded to build the wall, but, as the Respondents alleged, not in the direction indicated. The Respondents accordingly applied for an interdict against him, and brought an action for a declaration that the Appellant had no right to erect buildings on the solum of the river beyond the red line aforesaid. Lord Cranworth, in delivering judgment, dealt at length with the legal points raised in the discussion. At page 58 of the report he said :—

“By the law of Scotland, as by the law of England, when the lands of two conterminous proprietors are separated from each other by a running stream of water, each proprietor is prima facie owner of the soil of the alveus or bed of the river ad medium filum aque. The soil of the alveus is not the common property of the two proprietors, but the share of each belongs to him in severalty, so that if from any cause the course of the stream should be permanently diverted, the proprietors on either side of the old channel would have a right to use the soil of the alveus, each of them, up to what was the medium filum aque, in the same way as they were entitled to the adjoining land. The appellant contended that as a consequence of this right every riparian proprietor is at liberty at his pleasure to erect buildings on his share of the alveus so long as other proprietors cannot show that damage is thereby occasioned or likely to be occasioned to them. I do not think that is a true exposition of the law.”

Lord Cranworth then dealt with the difficulty, almost the impossibility, of determining in anticipation what damage may result in flood time by the erection of buildings on the alveus of a stream, and speaking of the riparian proprietors, put their case succinctly in these words :—

“They are entitled to say ‘We have all a common interest in the unrestricted flow of the water, and we forbid any interference with it.’ This is a plain, intelligible rule, easily understood and easily followed, and from which I think your Lordships ought not to allow any departure.”

Lord Westbury, at page 61 of the report, thus expresses himself :—

“When, however, it is said that proprietors of the bank of a running stream are entitled to the bed of the stream as their property usque ad medium filum, it does not by any means follow that that property is capable of being used in the ordinary way, in which so much land uncovered with water might be used; but it must be used in such a manner as not to affect the interest of riparian proprietors of the stream. Now the interest of a riparian proprietor in the stream is not only to the extent of preventing it being diverted or diminished, but it would extend also to prevent the course being so interfered with or affected as to direct the current in any different way that might possibly be attended with damage at a future period to another proprietor.”

So much as to interference with the alveus which is stated in the head-note of this case to be sacred.

In Menzies v. Breadalbane (Earl of) (2), it was held that a proprietor on the bank of a river, having commenced the building of a mound, which, according to the opinion and report of an engineer, would, if completed, in times of ordinary flood throw the waters of the river on to the grounds of a proprietor on the opposite bank so as to overflow and injure them, should be restrained by perpetual interdict from the further erection of any bulwark or other work which might have the effect of diverting the stream of the river in time of floods, i.e., ordinary flood, from its accustomed course and throwing the same upon the lands of the Appellant. Lord Eldon, in delivering the judgment of the House, (at page 418) said :—

“ It is unnecessary to trouble your Lordships with any observations on the law of England . . . because it is clear beyond a possibility of doubt that by the law of England such an operation ” (i.e., as that complained of) “ could not be carried on . . . ”

At p. 419 he then said :—

“ But let us see what is said on this subject by the institutional writers on the law of Scotland.”

He then quotes with approval the following passage from Erskine's Institutes :—

“ When a river threatens an alteration of the present channel by which damage may arise to the proprietor of the adjacent or opposite ground it is lawful for him to build a bulwark ripari muniendæ causa to prevent the loss of ground that is threatened by that encroachment.”

Lord Eldon then proceeds :—

“ so that the proprietor whose lands are threatened to be washed away, may, for the purpose of protecting his own property in a case of that description, raise a bank for his own security ; but this bulwark must be so executed as to prejudice neither the navigation nor the grounds on the opposite of the river.”

This right of navigation, however, is not a right of property. It is simply a right of way which must not be interfered with. [Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun (3)].

In Nield v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (4), the Defendants owned a canal which was threatened with an overflow into it of flood water from a neighbouring river, and, fearing damages to their premises situated on the banks of the canal, placed across the canal some planks rising up higher than the level of the water in the canal, which, being obstructed when the flood increased, rose till it flooded the Plaintiff's premises. In an action brought by the Plaintiff to recover damages for this injury, it was held that the Defendants were not liable on the ground that they had not brought on to the Plaintiff's premises the water which did the injury, and that there was no duty on the owners of a canal analogous to that resting on the owners of a natural watercourse not to impede the flow of the water down it.

So much as regards fresh-water streams. As regards the right of an owner of land whose land is exposed to the inroads of the sea, the case of The King v. The Commissioners of Sewers for Pagham (5), many times approved of, is a distinct authority. In delivering his judgment that most able and learned Judge, Bayley, J., stated the rule of law in these words :—

“ Every land owner exposed to an inroad of the sea has a right to protect himself, and is justified in making and erecting such works as are necessary for that purpose, and the Commissioners (i.e., the defendants) may erect such defences as are necessary for the land entrusted to their superintendence. If, indeed, they make unnecessary or improper works, not with a view to the protection of the level, but with a malevolent intention to injure the owner of other lands, they would be amenable to punishment by criminal information or indictment for an abuse of the powers vested in them. But if they act bona fide, doing no more than they honestly think necessary for the protection of the level (i.e., the land they superintend) their acts are justifiable, and those who sustain damage therefrom must protect themselves.”

MAUNG BYA v. MAUNG KYI NYO.

The last English case necessary to refer to on this subject is that of Whaley v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (6). It is somewhat peculiar in its features. The Defendants were proprietors of a railway which ran along from east to west over a flat country on a low embankment. A ditch ran along on each side of this embankment for the purpose of draining the railway. The surrounding land sloped from south-east to north-west, so that the land on the north-west side of the railway embankment, where the damage occurred, was at a lower level than on the south-east side of the embankment. The Plaintiff was a farmer occupying lands on the north-west side, the lower side of the railway, but separated from it by other lands belonging to other persons. By reason of an unprecedented rainfall a quantity of water which accumulated on the south-eastern side of the embankment, was dammed up against it, and ultimately rose to such a height as to expose the embankment to danger. This water, it was apparently considered, might possibly have percolated through the embankment, and in no sense did the Company, as did the Defendant in Rylands v. Fletcher (7), bring the water upon or up to the Company's lands, but when the water had risen to such a height that the Defendants thought it was necessary for the protection of their embankment, they caused trenches to be cut in the embankment, through which the water was enabled to escape to the north-west side of the railway and from thence to flow into the adjoining lands and ultimately to the Plaintiff's land, damaging his crops. The case was tried before Mr. Justice Day and a jury. The jury found that the cutting of the trenches through which the water flowed was reasonably necessary for the protection of the Defendants' property, that it was not done negligently, and that the Plaintiff was injured by the water that so came through the trenches to the extent of £138 beyond what it would have been if the trenches had not been cut. On these findings the learned Judge gave judgment for the Plaintiff for £130. Brett, M.R., deals in his judgment with the facts of the case and the principles applicable to it. At page 137 he said :—

"But then it is suggested that if a person has brought the danger on his land, it makes a difference. So it does. If he has not brought the danger there, and without any act of his it breaks through his land on to his neighbour's land, I take it he is not liable. In that case both have suffered from a common extraordinary danger, but one has suffered before the other; that is all. . . . In this case the water endangered the embankment and, moreover, it would have gone on to the plaintiff's land in any event; but then if it had been left alone and allowed simply to percolate through the embankment, even though all of it would have gone on to the plaintiff's land, it would have gone without doing the injury which was done by reason of its pushing through the cuttings which the defendants made. The defendants did something for the preservation of their own property which transferred the misfortune from their land to that of the plaintiff, and therefore it seems to me that they are liable."

"It appears to me that this case is more analogous to the Scotch case of Menzies v. Earl of Breadalbane (2) and Nield v. L.N.W.R. Company (4).

"It seems to me established by those cases that if an extraordinary flood is seen to be coming upon land the owner of such land may fence off and protect his land from it, and so turn it away without being responsible for the consequences, although his neighbours may be injured by it.

"Rea v. Pagham Commissioners (5) is another step in the same direction We must look at the board question, which is whether a landowner on whose land there is a sudden accumulation of water, brought there without any fault or act of his, is at liberty actively to let it off on the land of his neighbour without making that neighbour any compensation for damages, because the landowner by doing so has been able to save his own property from injury? I can see no authority for that, and it appears to me the general rights and duties of landowners are decidedly against it."

Some point was made in this case to the effect that the stream alleged to have been stopped up was at best merely an artificial watercourse and not a natural one. In the latter case the successive riparian owners have been each entitled to the unimpeded flow of the water in its natural course, and to its reasonable enjoyment as it passes through his land as a natural incident of the ownership of his land. In the former case, however, any right of the owner to the flow of the water must rest on prescription or grant from or contract with the owner of the land from which the water is artificially brought. [Rameshwar Pershad Narain Singh v. Koonji Behari Pattuk (8) and Kensit v. Great Eastern Railway Company (9)].

There is, however, a well-established principle of law directly bearing upon this case and vitally affecting it, namely, that a watercourse originally artificial may have been made under such circumstances, and have been used in such a way that an owner of land situate on its bank will have all the rights over it that a riparian owner would have if it had been a natural stream. [Sutcliffe v. Booth (10), Holker v. Poritt

(11) and Baily & Co. v. Clark, Son and Morland (12)].

It is not necessary in order to apply the principles of these decisions to analyse the evidence in detail. It was proved by a Public Officer, the Superintendent of Land Records, and not contradicted, that this so-called canal went right up to the boundary of the Appellants' land; while in the following five paragraphs of the written statement of the Respondents they practically admitted the facts founding the charge against them, though at the same time they misrepresent the conduct and action of the Appellants. These paragraphs run thus:—

6. The said channel became wider and longer through erosion, with the result that the salt water from Kyonkan Chaung overflowed on the lands of this defendant and of adjoining cultivators and caused damage thereto.

7. In order to prevent such damage in or before the year 1914 the first defendant admits there was a bund erected across the said channel at a point where it flows through the land of this defendant and others. Such erection was said to be by the permission of Maung Thi Hla, the then Township Officer of Bogale.

8. The said bund gave away in or about the year 1916-17, and this defendant with his assistants repaired the bund formerly erected at the same place where the original bund was erected without any objection on the part of the plaintiffs or any one else.

9. On the 1st July, 1917, the first plaintiff and others illegally trespassed on the first defendant's lands originally acquired and lands purchased afterwards and opened the said bund, but the bund was erected again as there was no legal order and report to that effect was made to Thugyi Maung Shwe Loon.

10. On or about the 25th August, 1917, in pursuance of an order of the Deputy Commissioner of Pyapon, the said bund was opened, and after such date it has not been closed.

The evidence and findings of the Judges upon these statements establish, as will presently be shown, that the Defendants themselves erected the bund referred to in the second as well as in the third of these paragraphs. To effect this work they must have gone in upon the alveus of the canal, closed up with this bund, the eye of the bridge what was the outfall of the canal into the sea, and thus have offended against the law as laid down in the English cases. The District Judge framed for himself certain issues and answered them thus: To the second issue he gave the answer that the canal was not a Government constructed work, but was for a long time before 1906-1907 a naturally formed channel. The third issue so framed ran, "Did this canal facilitate the free outflow of rain water from the Plaintiffs' (Appellants') paddy lands?" His answer ran thus: "There cannot be any doubt that as all the parties admitted the canal takes the water into the Kwin from the Kyonkan Creek at flood tide, and takes the water out from the Kwin into the creek at ebb tide, therefore a certain extent of rain water must find its way into the Kyonkan Creek as a natural consequence." And, again, "there cannot be any doubt as to the motive of the Defendants that they erected the bund and closed the canal to protect their own fields from salt water; but there cannot also be any doubt that the stoppage of the outflow at ebb tide caused the excess water to remain in the fields of both the parties." He answers the fifth issue in the following words: the "weight of evidence is clearly in favour of the Plaintiffs," and I would [thus] answer the fifth issue.

He further finds that Map 2A makes it clear that the channel had been in existence before the year 1906-1907, and that there was no canal construction by any one. He ultimately gave a decree in favour of the Appellants for Rs. 8,821-48. No case has been made that these damages were excessive in amount if the legal wrong complained of had been actually committed. There was ample evidence in the case to sustain the findings of the District Judge if he believed the witnesses who gave it, as apparently he did, having seen and heard them. It appears to their Lordships plain that the access of some salt water from the creek through the eye of the bridge into the canal twice in the twenty-four hours in flood tide does not resemble in any way those incursions of the sea dealt with in The King v. The Commissioners of Sewers for Pagham (5), and still less did the closing up of the eye of the bridge, by this bund, and in seasons of heavy rain the ponding up of the fresh water in the canal, so that lands higher up that stream were flooded resemble those necessary precautions which a landowner whose land is at the mercy of these incursions of the sea is entitled to take to protect his property. If the stopping up of the outfall of the canal was justifiable by reason of this access of some salt water at flood then every fresh water tributary to a tidal river could be closed up at its mouth to prevent the like consequences.

Both the cases referred to in the third reason for the Appellants' appeal deal with surface water, the rain which falls on agricultural land not with watercourses of any kind. They are irrelevant therefore to the questions in controversy in this case, and are not in conflict, it appears to their Lordships, with any of the English cases cited.

The Respondents appealed, and on the appeal the learned Judges of the Chief

MAUNG BYA v. MAUNG KYI NYO.

Court of Appeal seem to have taken a course as unwise as it was extraordinary. The Appellants had undoubtedly in paragraph 4 of their plaint stated that the Government had in the year 1913 dug this canal, shown by letters A, B, C, D, on Ex. "A." That was no doubt found to be untrue, but no evidence whatever was given to show that the Government had any jurisdiction or authority to do such a thing, and what is much more important that if they had such authority an action could not be brought for any injurious consequence resulting to individuals from its execution.

That paragraph of the plaint is followed by two others, Nos. 5 and 9.

5. The said canal thus facilitated the free outflow of the rain water from the plaintiff's paddy lands aforesaid into the said Kyonkan Chaung and rendered cultivable all the lands situate in Kasaung Ngotto West Kwin and Sakangyi South (A) and (B) Kwins, which adjoin the said Kamakalu Kwin.

9. The plaintiffs have been informed and verily believe that during the month of Kason or Nayon, 1279 B. E., the first defendant's tenants and servants by order of the first defendant and the defendants Nos. 2 to 8, closed the said canal at the point B shown in red ink in the plan Exhibit A.

The alleged wrong for which the Plaintiffs claim damages was the stopping up by a bund of the outfall of the canal, by which means the water of the canal, having been denied escape at the proper place, was ponded up, flowed back, and flooded their lands. The identity of the body or person which or who actually formed the canal was a matter wholly irrelevant to the matters in issue. It did not form even an ingredient in the cause of action, and there is not an averment in the plaint to show that the Plaintiffs did not rely upon the canal being an old natural watercourse enlarged, but new or artificial. The plaint is entirely consistent with their relying upon the one thing or the other, as suited them best.

Yet, strange to say, one of the learned Judges in the Chief Court (Mr. Justice Duckworth) considered that this statement as to the digging of the canal by the Government was a matter of such vital importance, that the judgment of the District Judge should be reversed, and his decision in the Plaintiffs' favour be overruled because this allegation had not been proved.

In justice to Mr. Justice Duckworth, the following passages from his judgment should be quoted :—

"I have only to add a few remarks. It appears to me that the plaintiff-respondent Maung Bya set up a certain case in his pleadings, by which he must either stand or fall. It is clear, from his plaint, that his case was that, until Government made a canal, the lands which belong to him were unworkable, but that, after Government made a canal connecting the Fishery crocks with the Kyonkan Chaung, his fields became culturable. Further, he contended that owing to the appellant Maung Tet closing this canal, at the Kyonkan Chaung end, by a bund, in 1917 he suffered certain damage through his fields becoming inundated."

It does not appear to their Lordships that this is at all an accurate or fair construction of the plaint of the Appellants.

The learned Judge then proceeds :—

"In fact, treating this channel, as I think we must, as a natural watercourse [see Kaw La v. Maung Ke (13), we find that appellant (defendant) is a riparian proprietor, whereas the respondent (plaintiff) is not.

"This is the only view of the case which can be inferred from the evidence."

This would go to show that the map of 1906 was right, and that what was done in 1913 was to clean up flooded areas and deepen a natural watercourse, and not to create a new one, involving the forfeiture of the riparian owners' rights.

The last paragraph, the different portions of which seem scarcely consistent with each other, runs thus :—

"It is quite unnecessary to consider any other points. The respondent set up a case, which he failed to prove, and obtained a decree before the District Court on a case which he had not pleaded. It is settled law that a plaintiff must not be permitted to succeed on a case which he has not put forward directly or indirectly in his plaint. Further, it is apparent that the learned Judge of the District Court took a mistaken view of the facts, his chief error being his overlooking the fact that respondents' lands drew no advantage whatever from this channel until it had opened a way through the road bund into the Kyongkan Chaung, and that only some four years prior to any cause of action having arisen.

"I concur with my learned brother in allowing the appeal with costs, and in the decree passed by him, including special costs to Messrs. Leach and Lentaigne Junior."

The passage appears to suggest that a Defendant who diverts or stops the flow of a natural watercourse and thereby floods the lands of a riparian owner is not to be held responsible in damages for the wrong unless he, the Defendant, has made a profit by it. In their Lordships' opinion such a doctrine is unsound.

The other learned Judge, Mr. Justice Maung Kin, deals with this point somewhat differently. He says :—

"The finding that the canal was not one made by the Government is not contested before us. It is, however, contended that plaintiff had the right to the undisturbed flow of water from his land through the canal into the Kyongkan Chaung on the ground that the canal is a natural waterway.

"It is doubtful whether the learned District Judge was right in giving a decree upon a case not set up by plaintiff in his plaint. The basis of the suit as described in the plaint is that the canal was dug by the Government for the benefit of the cultivators, and that it, in fact, benefited them, because it drained the surplus rain water from plaintiff's land."

This, as has been already pointed out, is not a true construction of the Appellants' case and contention.

The learned Judge then proceeds to add :—

"I may add that there is no equity in favour of plaintiff. He had not derived any benefit before the depression became sufficiently wide and deep to allow of its carrying water coming from the direction of his land, and when the bund was built by Government, there was no reason for thinking that that water would flow in the direction of the bund. But the defendants have all along enjoyed the benefit of the existence of the bund, because it has prevented brackish water coming to defendants' lands from the Kyonkan Chaung. I do not see any justice in allowing plaintiff's claim to remove the bund for the benefit of his land, unless he has a natural or prescriptive right to make it. I have held that he has no natural right, and sufficient time has not elapsed for a prescriptive right to ripen.

"For the above reasons I would allow the appeals Nos. 183 and 188 of 1919, with costs."

It appears to their Lordships difficult to understand what the learned Judge meant by the first of these paragraphs.

Their Lordships are quite unable to concur with the learned Judges of the Chief Court in the views they have taken of the rights and liabilities of the parties litigant in this case. They think these views are conflicting inter se, unsound and misleading. To gather together the points fully dealt with above it may be said that in their Lordships' view it is clearly established (1) that a raised road or bund ran transversely across the depressed ground through which flowed the channel of water, and was properly provided with a gap for the flow and a bridge over the channel, (2) that the bund thus provided with an eye and a bridge to permit the inflow and outflow of water was interfered with by the Respondent, who filled up the eye and channel course thereat, and converted an innocuous bund into a dam, which dammed back the water on to the Appellant's land, and that in law (3) the Respondents are responsible for the damage thus caused to the Appellant's property. They think the judgment appealed from was erroneous and ought to be set aside, that the decision of the District Judge was right and should be restored, and will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The Respondents must pay the costs of the Appellants in the hearing of the Chief Court and of this appeal.

No. 110 of 1925.

SANDERSON, C. J. RANKIN, J. 1925, Heard, 11, December. Judgment, 14, December.	}	RADHA KISSEN GOENKA, Defendant, Appellant, v. THAKURSIDAS KHEMKA, Plaintiff, Respondent.
--	---	--

Suit under Chap. XIII A of the Rules of the Original Side—Unconditional leave to defend—Practice—Denial of main portion of the Plaintiff's claim—Sale of securities, if without jurisdiction.

Where there is a general denial of the main portion of the Plaintiff's claim, unconditional leave to defend should be given and it is wrong practice under Chap.

XIII A of the Rules of the Original Side (new rules) to make an order for furnishing security merely because the Judge thinks that the Plaintiff has a better prospect of success than the Defendant.

The Court has no jurisdiction under Chap. XIII A to make an order for sale of securities.

JACOBS v. BOOTH'S DISTILLERY CO. (3) followed.

SUKHLAL CHUNDERMULL v. EASTERN BANK, LTD. (1) discussed.

This was an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Ghose under Chap. XIII A (new rules). The Plaintiff alleged that there were various dealings with the Defendant; that after the adjustment of the account a sum of Rs. 20,364 was found due to the Plaintiff and the Defendant admitted the liability and promised to pay it on demand with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum; that at the time of the adjustment the Plaintiff held certain shares and jewelleryes of the Defendant as security and since adjustment the Defendant had paid Rs. 4,995-4-0 and that the sum of Rs. 17,535-1-6 was now due to the Plaintiff with interest, Rs. 5,218-8-9, and the Plaintiff prayed for an order for sale of the securities. After filing the plaint, the Plaintiff took out summons under Or. XIII A for final judgment. The Defendant totally denied that he ever promised to pay interest and stated that the Plaintiff had received various sums from and also on behalf of the Defendant by way of dividends on the shares and asked for an account. The matter came before Ghose, J., on 7th July 1925, and he was pleased to order on the Defendant to give security of Rs. 22,753-10-3 within a fortnight, in default the suit to stand decreed for

Rs. 22,753-10-3 with costs of suit on scale No. I; the securities were directed to be sold by the Registrar and the sale proceeds to be applied in satisfaction of the decree.

Mr. A. K. Roy placed the judgment of the lower Court.

RANKIN, J.—Is there no authority of this Court where it has been held that an appeal does not lie from a default order imposing terms?

Mr. S. N. Bannerji.—The first point I was going to take is that no appeal lies. [Cited Sukhlal Chundermull v. Eastern Bank, Ltd. (1)].

Mr. A. K. Roy (with Mr. P. C. Basu) argued on behalf of the Defendant that this Court has held in Chotulal Misser v. Marwari Commercial Bank, Ltd. and Rai Bahadur Bissesswar Lal Halwisiya (2) that an appeal lies from an order made under Chap. XIII A imposing terms inasmuch as a decree follows forthwith for non-compliance with the said order. In this case there is substantially a denial of the Plaintiff's claim. There is no mention of interest in the document relied on by the Plaintiff. The claim for interest is denied. There is further denial of the second adjustment although the Defendant does not specifically state what sum was due. [Cites Jacobs v. Booth's Distillery Co. (3)].

Mr. S. N. Bannerji (with Mr. S. R. Dass) argued on behalf of the Respondent that Or. 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court are different from the Rules of this Court under Chap. XIII A and placed the Rules. The learned Judge used his discretion and the Court on appeal ought not to interfere with his discretion. The learned Counsel for the Defendant admitted at the trial Court that Rs. 15,000 was due as principal. The learned Judge was justified in accepting the Plaintiff's story when there was that admission as the Defendant does not state what amount was due. By the order for sale of securities the Defendant is not prejudiced as the Plaintiff has the right to sell under sec. 176 of the Indian Contract Act.

Mr. Roy in reply stated that the admission was made to buy peace in full settlement of the Plaintiff's claim. There is the denial of the main portion of the Plaintiff's claim and that there were the issues regarding interest and what amount was due.

RANKIN, J.—This is an appeal from an order made on the 7th of July last by my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose under Chap. XIII A of the Rules of the Original Side which provide the procedure for obtaining summary judgments in cases where a debt or liquidated demand in money is alleged to be payable by the Defendant.

The plaint set out that there had been certain transactions between the parties and that on the 6th of April 1922 an account was adjusted which showed a sum of Rs. 20,304 due by the Defendant to the Plaintiff. It was further alleged that the Defendant acknowledged in writing his liability for this amount and it further alleged that the Defendant promised to pay the same on demand with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The plaint further stated that the Plaintiff held certain shares and certain jewellery as security for the debt : and, finally it stated that the Plaintiff had received on account of the Defendant various sums of money amounting to Rs. 4,995. Para. 5 of the plaint then goes on to state that the account between the parties up to March 1923 was made up and that the sum found due was Rs. 17,535 and that a copy of the account was sent to the Defendant who received the same with no objection thereto. The Plaintiff submits that the same should be taken as accounts adjusted. The Plaintiff in the relief which he claims asks for a decree for Rs. 22,753, for an account, if necessary, of the transactions, for a declaration of charge on the shares and jewellery, and an order for sale and certain further reliefs.

The Plaintiff having taken out a summons for summary judgment the Defendant by his affidavit totally denied that there was any promise to pay on demand or to pay interest. The document exhibited to the plaint contained no mention of any promise to pay interest. He stated further that he had made various payments to the Plaintiff and that the Plaintiff had received certain dividends upon the shares held by him in deposit, which ought to be directed by the Court to be found by an account so as to ascertain the amount due. He denied having received the account sent to him or having in any way agreed to the later adjustment of account set up by the Plaintiff. He goes on to say that if the shares and the jewellery are sold the Plaintiff will be found to be entitled to recover nothing more, but he does not say, apart from sale of the shares and the jewellery, that the sum due is any given sum or that nothing is due. With that exception he gives denial of the money portion of the Plaintiff's claim.

In his affidavit in reply the Plaintiff sets out a short account purporting to say exactly what he has received by way of dividends and payments and purporting to verify his original plaint.

If the matter stood there it is reasonably clear that no judgment should have been passed against the Defendant under this procedure at all. To begin with, the claim for interest was denied and it is entirely a wrong practice under Chap. XIII A for a learned Judge to order security merely because looking at the statements on either side he rather thinks that the Plaintiff has a better prospect of success than the Defendant. There was a specific denial with respect to this agreement and it would be quite impracticable to decide that matter under Chap. XIII A.

As regards the main question, it is clear that the Plaintiff was an accounting party and though he gave a version of an adjustment, he did not profess to be at all sure that it amounted to a promise by the Defendant to pay the sum so found because he submitted that it amounted to an adjusted account and he asked for an account by way of an alternative relief.

So far, therefore, it seems to me that this case is one in which the proper order would have simply been an unconditional leave to defend; but it appears that at the last stage of the summons the parties appeared before the learned Judge and the learned Counsel for the Defendant is recorded to have said that he consented to a decree for Rs. 15,000 "which he contended was the principal sum due." If that Rs. 15,000 had been offered as the purchase price of peace in settlement of the whole matter, it could not have been taken as an admission for any purposes of this sort; but it certainly looks as though that was the Defendant's statement of the amount that he really owed. There may be some doubt about the minutes, and we have enquired to-day as to what figure the RADHA KISSEN GOENKA v. THAKURSIDA'S KHEMKA.

Defendant admits. We are told that he admits at any rate Rs. 13,000.

It seems to me, therefore, that one may on this summons give judgment against the Defendant for Rs. 13,000; but it is to be observed that a part of the Plaintiff's relief which he seeks by going on with the action is an order for sale of the security. Under the practice of Chap. XIII it is one thing to give judgment for a given sum and it is another thing to say whether that judgment should be immediately enforceable having regard to other matters outstanding between the parties.

It seems to me that the order of the learned Judge (a part of which as regards the sale of these properties is entirely without jurisdiction under Chap. XIII) should be altogether set aside and that the proper order to make is that the Plaintiff on this application should have judgment for Rs. 13,000, but that this judgment is not to be executed pending the final determination of the other matters in the suit. The Defendant must have leave to defend as regards the rest of the claim.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I agree. As regards costs, we are of opinion that the Plaintiff must pay the Defendant's costs of the appeal, and there will be no costs of the summons before my learned brother on the Original Side.

The Defendant must file his written statement by Friday next and there will be cross-order for discovery within a week of the filing of the written statement.

This case will be put in the special list of suits.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2087 OF 1922.

CUMING, J.	PROSONNA KUMAR DE

18, May.	v.

	Respondents.

Landlord and tenant—Right of landlord to re-enter on abandonment of holding - Transfer of non-transferable holding and making over possession to transferee - Necessary inference as to abandonment.

For a landlord seeking to re-enter it is not necessary to prove as a fact that the holding has been abandoned but it is a direct inference from the fact that the entire holding was sold and possession given to the purchaser.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th of August 1922 against the decree of Babu Saroda Kumar Sen Gupta, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 18th of May 1922, reversing the decree of Babu Jitendra Nath Chatterji, Munsif, 7th Court at Comilla, dated the 31st of May 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Rabu Susil Kumar Bose for the Appellants.

Babus Gobinda Ch. Dey Roy and Upendra Kumar Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CUMING, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the Plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their brahmattar right to the disputed land and for recovery of khas possession thereof after evicting the Defendants. The Plaintiffs' case was that the pro forma Defendants who had held the land under them in raiyati right had abandoned it without making any provisions for the payment of rent. The Plaintiffs had come to know that the pro formâ Defendants had sold the land to the principal Defendants. As the pro formâ Defendants had no right to transfer without the consent of the landlords the Plaintiffs as landlords claimed to re-enter upon the land.

The defence was that the whole jama had not been transferred, that the pro formâ Defendants were still in possession, that they had tendered rent to the Plaintiffs from time to time, and further that the sale was not an out and out sale but made with the condition attached, that in case of payment of the price within 7 years the property would be re-conveyed to the pro formâ Defendants and further that the sale was made with the consent of Plaintiff No. 1.

The trial Court held that the pro formâ Defendants had not abandoned the land. Hence he dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the District Court and the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the appeal and the Plaintiffs' suit with costs. He held that the pro formâ Defendants had abandoned the land without making any provision for the payment of rent, that the pro formâ Defendants had no transferable interest in the land and that therefore the Plaintiffs had a right to re-enter.

The Defendants, the purchasers, have appealed to this Court. In appeal two points have been argued. First, that the purchase was made with the consent of the landlords, and the lower Appellate Court has not considered this point. As far as can be seen this point was not argued before the lower Appellate Court. The trial Court in dealing with this point stated that the Plaintiff No. 1 had not denied that the purchase was with his consent and the trial Court seems to think that it was for the Plaintiff No. 1 to examine himself and to prove that the purchase was not made with his consent. On the contrary it was for the Defendants to prove that the purchase was made with the consent of the Plaintiffs, and, if they desired, to examine the Plaintiff No. 1 on this point. It was for them to summon him as a witness or to examine him on commission. Probably for this reason the point was not urged in the lower Appellate Court. There is nothing in this contention.

The next point argued was that the transaction was really a mortgage by conditional sale. This point again does not seem to have been argued before the lower Appellate Court; and probably for a very good reason, for the kobala itself does not show that it was a mortgage by conditional sale, but primâ facie it is an out and out sale.

This appeal is really concluded by the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court has found that the Defendants have sold the land and have made no arrangement for the payment of the rent. As the learned Judge points out if they really desired to pay the rent they could have sent the rent by postal money order or have made a deposit in Court. Clearly they did not make any attempt to pay the rent or any arrangement for making the payment of rent. He also finds that the principal Defendants are in possession. It is not necessary to prove as a fact that the holding has been abandoned but it is a direct inference from the fact that the entire holding was sold and possession given to the purchaser. See the case of Sheikh Chand Pramanik v. Romoni Mohan Roy (1).

(1) 17 C. W. N. 1105 (1913).

PROSONNA KUMAR DE v. ANANDA CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE.

The facts proved are sufficient to justify the lower Appellate Court's finding that the pro formâ Defendants have abandoned the lands. This being so, the Plaintiffs clearly have a title to re-enter.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

The cross-objection not being pressed is also dismissed.

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—I agree.

that because the putni instrument did not authorise brick-making it forbade it by implication.

Real nature of putni taluks as distinguished from ordinary leasehold interests pointed out.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Asutosh Pal, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Murshidabad, dated the 31st of July 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, Sir Provash Chandra Mitter and Babu Narendra Krishna Bose for the Appellants.

Dr. S. C. Basak and Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee for the Respondent.

WALMSLEY, J.—This is a novel case. The learned Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad has granted to the zamindar an injunction restraining the putnidar and his lessees, the Defendants, for making bricks anywhere in the putni, and also a nominal sum by way of damages for the mischief caused by the brick-making that has already taken place.

The Defendants appeal and urge that the decision is wrong on three grounds, firstly, because the relation between zamindar and putnidar is such that the former is not entitled to the relief claimed; secondly, because the document creating the putni contains no stipulation against brick-making; and thirdly, because the practice was begun many years ago, and has been continued without objection by the zamindar until this suit was instituted.

It appears to me that the Defendants are entitled to succeed on each of these grounds, matter to be considered is whether the use made of the land affects the landlord's security in the matter of the rent reserved. If the use does not threaten the complete destruction of the property, or if it does not threaten such a change as to endanger the rent, the zamindar has no cause for complaint [see the case of Barada Prosad Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Mukerjee (1)]. In the present instance neither of those dangers is present: where the bricks are made the surface of the land will be changed no doubt, but not irremediably and the evidence is that at present the area affected is about 1 per cent. of the whole.

In regard to the first ground, the only

An attempt has been made to treat the relation between a zamindar and a putnidar as similar to the relation between the English owner in fee simple and the lessee for a term of years, but the relation is really very different, and the comparison does not assist us.

On the second point, the learned Judge seems to think that because the putni instrument does not authorise brick-making it by implication forbids it, and secondly, that a reservation against digging tanks without permission may be construed as a reservation against the excavation involved in brick-making. I do not think that either view is correct. There is no reservation against brick-making, and the zamindar cannot succeed by showing that there is no clause that permits brick-making. As for the clause about digging tanks, brick-making may not be such an old practice as tank-digging, but it was very well-known in 1853 when the putni was created, and if the reservation had been intended to cover brick-making it might have done so expressly.

On the third point the learned Judge has treated the evidence in a very strange manner. The Defendants were able to show payments on account of brick-making as far back as the closing years of last century. These payments are entered in large books of account which appear to wear the marks of being genuine. The Judge, however, says nothing at all about the rokars containing these entries, and he objects to the sumars and cheque muris on the ground that they come from the custody of the putnidar's vendor and were produced late. The first objection confuses with title deeds documents which are valuable for the information they give about incidents connected with the putni, but do not in themselves form any part of the evidence of title. The second objection springs from the same confusion of thought: the present putnidar had to call upon his vendor to produce the papers, and it is not shown to us that he was negligent in seeking the aid of the Court to compel the production: so he cannot be held responsible for the fact that the papers were produced late. Another remark must be made about the Judge's treatment of the evidence on this point: he says that the oral evidence is at variance with the contents of these papers and then deals very hardly with the evidence of Plaintiff's witness Chandra Kanta. The learned Advocate for the Respondent has been unable to show us where the oral evidence conflicts with the papers, and as for Chandra Kanta it would seem as though any suspicion to which his contradictions may give rise should go against the Plaintiff rather than against the Defendants.

My conclusion is that the learned Judge's judgment must be reversed on each of the grounds mentioned, and that the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

In the view which I have taken, the cross-objection preferred by the Plaintiff-Respondent must necessarily be dismissed with costs—hearing-fee, three gold mohurs.

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—I wish only to add a few observations as to the real nature of the putni taluks as I understand it and how they differ from ordinary leasehold interest.

Reg. VIII of 1793, sec. 51 recognised the dependent taluks created by the zamindars before the Permanent Settlement and full protection was granted to them subject to the payment of the fixed rent. A number of these taluks were given the option of getting themselves separated from the zamindary and directly holding under the Government as owners of separate estates and the rent payable for the zamindary. This emphasises the fact that these talukdars, though in one sense lessees, were looked upon as the absolute owners of the lands subject only to payment of the fixed rent. There was no restriction on or limitation to their rights as lessees.

It is in this sense it has been said that these taluks were really transfers of the zamindars' interests, the consideration being payable not in a lump sum but by annual payments in the shape of rent. The analogy of a leasehold interest as defined by the Transfer of Property Act is out of place here. There are some features which are common but the distinctive feature cannot be ignored and the existing mode of enjoyment of these taluks disturbed.

The Permanent Settlement imposed a limitation of 10 years' term to all future leases created by the zamindar but this restriction was removed by Reg. V of 1812 and grant of permanent taluks came into vogue and a number of taluks called putni taluks were created in the image of the istamrari mokarari taluks as known before the Permanent Settlement. Reg. VIII of 1819 called the Putni law was created to grant facilities of the zamindars to create taluks for punctual realisation of rent at stated times with a view to help them to meet the demand of the sun-set law, as the Revenue law was popularly called.

These putni taluks were really grants of the zamindars' interest without restrictions unless specially mentioned in the pottah. Even mokarari tenure was in some respects treated as not a mere lease—see Sonet Kowar v. Himmat Bahadur (2).

It appears to me therefore that it is not possible to apply all the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act by analogy to the putni taluks and I have no hesitation in saying that a putnidar is competent to use or lease out land for the manufacture of bricks and this is wholly consistent with a putnidar's right. The Transfer of Property Act contains a saving clause for the putni governed by Reg. VIII of 1819.

The question now at issue is really governed by the case of Abhiram Goswami v. Shama Charan Nandi (3). The question as to whether the putnidar can by this mode of user destroy the security of the rent payable need not be discussed now. It is not even suggested that the loss of the land used for manufacture of bricks has in the least diminished the value of the putni in question.

The clause restricting the digging of tanks cannot be enforced and cannot by analogy furnish a restrictive covenant against brick-making. I agree with my learned brother that the suit should be

RULE No. 231 OF 1925.

GREAVES, J.

SATYA NERANJUN SHAW and anr., Petitioners,
v.
THE KARNANI INDUS-TRIAL BANK, LTD.,
Opposite Party.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 15 - Tenant whose lease has been validly terminated, if may apply for standardization of rent—Decree for ejectment passed on a subsequent date - Position of tenant during interval that of trespassers—High Court's power of revision.

Where the landlord served a notice on the tenant on 15th August 1923 terminating the lease on the ground of breach of covenants in the lease, and his suit for ejectment on the ground was decreed on 24th April 1925:

Held—That an application for standardization of rent made by the tenant on 1st December 1923 was incompetent and the order of the Rent Controller, dated 11th March 1924, fixing the standard rent was without jurisdiction. The position of the applicant on 1st December 1923 was that of a mere trespasser. The fact that the decree in ejectment was passed after the order of the Controller did not make any difference as the decree did not terminate the tenancy but on the other hand decided that the landlord was justified in terminating the tenancy on 15th August 1923.

The fact that the order of the Rent Controller did not admit of revision by the President of the Tribunal did not preclude interference with the order in revision by the High Court.

This was a Rule granted, against an order of the President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, dated the 31st January 1925, rejecting an application for revision of the order of the Rent Controller, dated the 11th March 1924.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment

Dr. S. C. Basak, Mr. R. C. Sen and Mr. P. C. Sen for the Petitioners.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, Mr. J. N. Roy and Mr. H. L. Ganguly for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—In this Rule we are asked to set aside an order of the Rent Controller fixing standard rent with regard to certain premises, dated the 11th March 1924. The lease is dated the 7th October 1920. On the 15th August 1923 the landlords who are the Petitioners before us served a notice on the Opposite Party determining the lease on the ground, it seems, of breach of covenants in the lease. On the 10th September 1923, the Petitioners brought an action in ejectment on the Original Side of this Court. During the pendency of the suit, on the 1st December 1923, the Opposite Party applied to the Rent Controller under the Rent Act for standardization of rent. The Rent Controller fixed standard rent on the 11th of March 1924, as I have already stated. The Opposite Party vacated the premises on the 24th January 1924. The Petitioners applied for revision of the order of the Rent Controller to the President of the Tribunal on the 22nd March 1924. The duration of the old Rent Act expired on the 31st March 1924. The President rejected the application of the Petitioners by his order, dated the 31st January 1925; following the case of Kundemul Dalima v.

SATYA NERANJUN SHAW v. THE KARNANI INDUSTRIAL BANK, LTD.

Dyer (1), on the ground that the new Act does not authorise him to revise the order of the Rent Controller with regard to the premises in question. The ejectment suit on the Original Side of this Court was decided on the 24th April 1925 in favour of the Plaintiffs decreeing ejectment and the order of the learned Judge was that the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover rent till the 15th August 1923 when the tenancy was terminated by notice to the Opposite Party, and from after that date the position of the Opposite Party was that of trespassers and the Plaintiffs were entitled to mesne profits from the date till possession was delivered to the Petitioners. With regard to the rate of rent the learned Judge did not come to any decision but having regard to the pendency of this Rule, he directed that the rent fixed by the Controller should not be taken by him to have been finally determined as the rent payable in respect of the premises in question. The Petitioners support their application mainly upon the ground that the Opposite Party were not tenants on the 1st December 1923 with regard to the premises in question and, therefore, they were not in a position to present an application for fixing standard rent under sec. 15 of the Rent Act. They, therefore, maintain that the petition was incompetent as the Rent Controller had no jurisdiction in this case to fix a standard rent and, therefore, the decision of the Rent Controller is without jurisdiction and ought to be set aside. Their further objection was that this case does not fall within the ruling in the case of Kundamul v. Dyer (1) referred to above.

We find that the High Court in its judgment on the Original Side in the suit in ejectment found that the tenancy had terminated on account of the breach of conditions in the lease on the 15th August 1923. It is contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that there was some sort of statutory tenancy under the provisions of sec. 11 of the Rent Act. But that section provides only for the continuance of the tenancy if the tenant performs the conditions of the tenancy and in such a case there could not have been a decree in ejectment. As it has now been found in the suit that the Plaintiffs had legally terminated the tenancy on the 15th August 1923 it cannot be said that the Opposite Party continued to remain on the land as tenants after that date. The question is not affected in the least by the fact that the decree of the High Court was passed after the order of the Rent Controller fixing a standard rent, because the decree does not terminate the tenancy. The judgment of the Court only shows that the Plaintiffs were justified in terminating the tenancy on the 15th of August 1923. That being so, the Opposite Party were not entitled under sec. 15 of the Rent Act to make the application for fixing the standard rent when their possession of the premises was that of mere trespassers. This question has been decided by us recently in *Civil Revision Case No. 1202 of 1924. There on a petition for fixing a standard rent by a person whose tenancy had determined the decision of the Rent Controller was held to be without jurisdiction.

It has been contended before us by the Opposite Party that the petition of the landlords before the President of the Tribunal being incompetent this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application for revision. But the jurisdiction of this Court is not conferred by the Rent Act. This Court exercises its jurisdiction under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and sec. 107 of the Government of India Act, and there cannot be any doubt that this Court has the power to revise an order passed by a subordinate tribunal without jurisdiction in the exercise of its revisional powers. That being so, the order of the Rent Controller must be set aside.

In this view, it is not necessary for us to say whether this case falls within the ruling of Kundamul v. Dyer (1).

The Petitioners are entitled to their costs of this Rule. We assess the hearing-fee at five gold mohurs.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 147, cl. (2), as amended by Act XVIII of 1923—Order directing the doing of an act, if legal.

The change in the wording of sec. 147 was made with a view to make it clear that the Magistrate has only the power 'to issue a prohibitory order restraining any person from doing any act interfering with the right of another when the Magistrate finds that it exists, but the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction directing a party to perform a certain act.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., from the District Magistrate of Howrah (Mr. S. C. Mukherjee), dated the 7th January 1925, recommending that so much of the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Howrah (Moulvie A. F. M. Mohsin Ali), dated the 12th December 1924, as directed, under sec. 147 (2), Cr. P. C., the second party to demolish the new wall within a period of one month from the date of the order, be set aside for the reasons set forth in the Reference.

(1) 20 G. W. N. 281 (1924).

The LETTER OF REFERENCE was as follows :—

" This is a case under sec. 147, Cr. P. C. A petition was filed by Hari Mati Dasi, 1st party, alleging that the 2nd party Hari Dasi Dasi had erected a wall blocking the westernmost window on the northern side of the Petitioner's house, thereby shutting out light and ventilation. On receipt of the police report the Town Magistrate, before whom the petition had been filed, took action under sec. 147, Cr. P. C., and directed both parties to appear and put in their written statements. Subsequently the case was made over to F. M. Mohsin Ali, 1st class Magistrate, for disposal. After taking evidence the trying Magistrate decided the case against 2nd party and directed her to demolish the wall within a month of the date of order and not to put up another wall blocking the windows, till adjudgment by a competent Court as to her right to do so.

The grounds upon which the order should be reversed—

1. This portion of the order does not appear to come within the terms of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 147, Cr. P. C., and should therefore be set aside. It is doubtful how far, under the terms of sub-sec. (2), the Magistrate could order the demolition of a wall which had already been put up. Several other grounds had been put forward in the application under sec. 435, HARI MATI DAS v. HARI DAS DAS.

Cr. P. C., before me but it is unnecessary to go into them."

Babu Panchanan Chowdhury for the 1st Party.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Bose, Babus Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Sudhanu Sekhar Mukerjee for the 2nd Party.

This is a Reference under sec. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate of Howrah, recommending that an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate under sec. 147 (2) of the Code be set aside.

The facts are that the first party complained that the second party had raised a wall on her own land blocking the windows in the house of the first party and thereby shut out light and air from the western room in that house. The Deputy Magistrate found that the first party was enjoying the right of access to light and air through the windows in question for the last two years, and as the putting up of the wall by the second party was admitted he held that it was not necessary for him to discuss the evidence in the case. The only point that he considered to be important was whether there was likelihood of a breach of the peace and he held under the circumstances, although there was no direct evidence in support of his finding, that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace. In conclusion he made an order to this effect:—"I therefore direct that the second party Hari Dasi Dasi do demolish the new wall within the period of one month from this date and that she shall not put up another wall blocking the windows in the north wall of Hari Mati's house till she has been adjudged by a competent Court to have the right to do so." The learned Magistrate does not find that the first party had acquired a right of easement under the law to light and air over the land of the second party through the windows in dispute.

The question, however, is whether having regard to the provisions of sec. 147 (2), Cr. P. C., the Magistrate had jurisdiction to order the second party to demolish the wall which she has raised on her own land. The learned vakil for the first party contends that in view of certain rulings of this Court the Magistrate had such jurisdiction, and it is sufficient for us to refer only to the first of the cases cited, Pasupati Nath Bose v. Nanda Lal Bose (1), in support of his contention. In that case it was held that an order directing that an obstruction to the right of taking water by one of the parties by the erection of a bandh should be removed was within the competency of the Magistrate having regard to the words in sec. 147 of the Code of 1898, that the Magistrate could "direct that such things shall not be done." There is some divergence of judicial opinion on the question to which it is unnecessary to refer, as sec. 147 has been amended by Act XVIII of 1923, and the language has been altered. We have to construe the section as it now stands. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 147 runs thus:—"If it appears to such Magistrate that such right exists he may make an order prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such right." It appears to us that these words do not give the Magistrate any power of directing one of the parties to do a positive act by way of mandatory injunction as has been done in this case by directing the second party to demolish the wall that has been built by her. It seems that the

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule granted by my learned brother Mr. Justice Panton and me, calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside, altered or modified and the boat restored to the Petitioner on grounds III and IV.

Ground III was : "That the liability to confiscation of a conveyance arises only when the owner of such conveyance uses the same for transportation and there being no evidence to that effect in this case the order is bad and fit to be set aside."

Ground IV was : "That the said order which was passed without giving an opportunity to the Petitioner who is the owner of the dinghee to show cause is improper and without jurisdiction."

Hanumia Majhee, who was recorded as the Majhee of the boat, was not arrested, but three of the crew were arrested and they were tried before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate and convicted under sec. 9 of Act I of 1878. At the same time the learned Presidency Magistrate made an order confiscating the boat and the opium under the provisions of sec. 11 of the above-mentioned Act.

The material part of sec. 11 is as follows : "In any case in which an offence under sec. 9 has been committed," the opium and other matters "shall be liable to confiscation. The vessels, packages and coverings in which any opium liable to confiscation under this section is found, and the other contents (if any) of the vessel or package in which such opium may be concealed, and the animals and conveyances used in carrying it, shall likewise be liable to confiscation."

It is to be noticed that the Act does not say that the conveyance used in carrying the opium shall be confiscated, but the Act provides that the conveyance "shall likewise be liable to confiscation." In my judgment that leaves it to the discretion of the tribunal which is trying the case to decide whether, having regard to the facts of the particular case, the conveyance used in carrying the opium should be confiscated.

The Petitioner in this case had no opportunity of being heard upon the question whether the boat should be confiscated.

The learned Magistrate in his explanation upon this part of the case said, "There is nothing in the section requiring that the owner should be given an opportunity to show cause. If it was intended that this should be done, there was nothing to prevent it being explicitly laid down in the section."

I am of opinion that in cases like this where there is no improper conduct imputed to the owner and where during the course of the case nothing is proved to show improper conduct on the part of the owner it would be advisable for the Magistrate who is trying the case to give the owner an opportunity of being heard before he comes to the conclusion whether the conveyance should be confiscated.

I am not prepared to make the Rule absolute upon ground III, but I am of opinion that the Rule should be made absolute on the ground that, having regard to the facts of this case, the owner should have had an opportunity of being heard before the order for confiscation was made.

In my judgment, therefore, the Rule should be made absolute: and, the boat, or the sale proceeds, if the boat has been sold, and if the money realized by such sale is still in the hands of the authorities, should be handed to the Petitioner, the owner of the boat.

PEARSON, J.—I agree.

v.

ABBA, Respondent.

Indian Evidence Act (1 of 1872), preamble, sec. 92—Shares, transaction in—Bought and sold notes passed—Transaction, whether sale or mortgage—Surrounding circumstances, references to, to prove ostensible sale a mortgage—Chattel mortgage—Redemption after default, if permissible.

Sec. 92 of the Evidence Act merely prescribes a rule of evidence; it does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances.

BALKISHAN DAS v. IEGGE (1) and sec. 92 of the Evidence Act held not applicable to the present case in which in view of the surrounding circumstances certain bought and sold notes passed in respect of certain shares were held to be mortgages and not sales out and out of the shares.

These were consolidated appeals (Nos. 21, 31 and 32 of 1923) from two decrees of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated the 23rd May 1919, varying two decrees of that Court in its original jurisdiction, dated respectively the 28th February 1917 and the 15th March 1917.

The suits were instituted by Baijnath Singh for the redemption of shares in the Nath Singh Oil Co. on the footing that certain transactions entered into between the Plaintiff and the Defendant, Hajee Mahomed Jamal, were mortgages.

Hajee Abba was an assignee from that Defendant and was substituted for Jamal during the pendency of the litigation. In suit No. 60 of 1916 Hajee Abba was the original transferee and Defendant.

The Defendant contended that the transactions were, as they purported to be, absolute sales to the original Defendant followed by contracts for the resale of the shares to the Plaintiff; that time was of the essence of the contract and that the right to repurchase had been extinguished.

Both Courts in Burma decided that the shares were redeemable and that time was not of the essence of the contract.

The facts and the nature of the various transactions are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

BAIJNATH SINGH v. HAJEE VALLY MAHOMED HAJEE ABBA.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated the 23rd of May 1919, varying two decrees of that Court in its original jurisdiction, one dated the 28th of February 1917, in suit No. 62 of 1916, and the other dated the 15th of March 1917, in suit No. 60 of 1916.

Both suits were brought by Baijnath Singh for the redemption of shares alleged to have been mortgaged by him.

Suit No. 60 of 1916 is against Hajee Vally Mahomed Hajee Abba. Suit No. 62 of 1916 was originally against Hajee Mahomed Jamal, but the plaint was amended by adding the Defendant Abdul Kareem Abdul Shakoor Jamal. Later, during the pendency of the suit, Hajee Vally Mahomed Hajee Abba was substituted as Defendant in their place, and he is now the sole Defendant in both suits.

The Plaintiff's right to redeem is denied on the ground that the several transactions on which the Plaintiff relies were not mortgages, but sales with a right of repurchase that has expired.

The trial Judge upheld the Plaintiff's contention in both suits. On appeal, the Chief Judge decided that the transactions were mortgages. Ormond, J., held that they were sales with contracts for repurchase, but that time was not of the essence of the contracts. In the result a decree was passed by the Appeal Court in each suit that on payment by the Plaintiff of the sum found due the shares claimed should be transferred to the Plaintiff.

Of the disputed transactions one (which will be called the Abba transaction) is the subject-matter of suit No. 60 of 1916, the others (which will be called the Jamal transactions) are the subject-matter of suit No. 62 of 1916.

They have been conveniently tabulated in the judgment of the Chief Judge in the following form :—

No. of shares transferred.	To—	On—	Amount paid by transferee.	Series.
80,000	Abba	16th January 1912 ..	Rs. 60,000	J series of exhibits.
70,000	Jamal	16th November 1912 ..	180,000	A do.
10,000	do.	10th December 1913 ..	20,000	B do.
17,000	do.	31st January 1918 ..	42,500	C do.
80,000	do.	18th March 1918 ..	75,000	D do.
8,520	do.	6th January 1914 ..	21,000	E do.

The first transaction, it will be seen, was in January 1912.

At that time, Baijnath owned 181,020 fully paid shares of Rs. 10 each in the Nath Singh Oil Company, Ltd. The certificates of these shares had been lodged with the Bank of Bengal as security for a cash credit account, and in November 1911, the shares had been transferred, still by way of security, into the names of two nominees of the Bank. In January 1912, the sum due from Baijnath to the Bank was two lacs and ten thousand rupees, and the Bank was pressing for reduction of this debt.

The case alleged in the plaint is that Baijnath approached Abba for a loan and Abba offered to lend and advance to Baijnath for payment to the Bank a sum of Rs. 60,000 on the security of 30,000 of the Oil Company's shares, with interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum up to 17th May 1912. It is further alleged that Baijnath agreed to these terms; that Abba at Baijnath's request paid a sum of Rs. 60,000 to the Bank of Bengal in part payment of Baijnath's indebtedness to the Bank; and that as security for the loan the Bank, on the 17th January 1912, handed over the certificates for the shares to Abba and executed a transfer of them in his favour. In the 5th paragraph of the plaint it is said that prior to the transfer Abba represented to Baijnath that being a Mohammedan it was contrary to the precepts of his religion to lend money at interest, and that as he was anxious it should not be known that he was charging interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum, Baijnath and Abba should execute bought and sold notes by which it would be made to appear that Abba had sold and Baijnath had bought 30,000 fully paid up shares for Rs. 75,000, delivery on or before the 17th of May 1912. Though Abba does not admit the correctness of this version, it is not disputed that there was an arrangement between him and Baijnath which resulted in the first transaction of January 1912. In performance of it the sum of Rs. 60,000 found by Abba was paid to the Bank on Baijnath's account; 30,000 of the Oil Company's shares held by the Bank's nominees as security for Baijnath's cash credit were transferred to Abba, who knew that the shares were mortgaged to the Bank; and the bought and sold notes were executed.

These notes purported to be a sale by Abba and a purchase by Baijnath of the 30,000 shares at the rate of Rs. 2/8 cum all rights and dividends, delivery on or before the 17th of May 1912, at buyer's option.

The rate thus stipulated came to Rs. 75,000, made up of the sum originally paid and interest thereon at 75 per cent.

On the 17th of May, Baijnath was unable to pay this sum and so a renewal was arranged at the same rate of interest, and bought and sold notes were executed for the sum of Rs. 95,625 for delivery on the 31st December 1912.

On the 14th of January 1913, a further sum of Rs. 4,375 was paid by Abba and this, with the sum alleged to be due on the 31st of December 1912, amounted to one lac. The rate of interest was reduced to 30 per cent. and bought and sold notes were executed providing for the repurchase of the 30,000 shares on the 22nd of December 1913, at the price of Rs. 1,30,000, or in other words, a lac of rupees and a year's interest on it at 30 per cent. On the due date, fresh bought and sold notes were executed providing for the purchase on the 22nd December 1914, at Rs. 1,78,750, that is to say, the sum of Rs. 1,30,000 with interest to the 22nd of December 1914, at 37½ per cent. to which the rate was then enhanced. No further bought and sold notes were executed in connection with this transaction. According to Baijnath, this was in consequence of an oral agreement in November or December 1914, providing for the reduction of interest to 9 per cent. The proof of this agreement will be considered later.

In both the lower Courts it was contended by Abba that this transaction was a sale and repurchase, and that time being of the essence of the contract, Baijnath's right to repurchase had expired. The decision was against this contention and Abba appealed to His Majesty in Council. But he has withdrawn that appeal, stating that he no longer objects to the redemption of the shares. In suit No. 60, therefore, the decision that Baijnath is entitled to redeem the shares in the Abba transaction stands and cannot be controverted.

Abba maintains that this cannot affect his contention that the Jamal transactions, to which suit No. 62 relates, give Baijnath no right of redemption. The learned trial Judge, however, points out that the transaction of the 16th of January 1912, was the commencement of a series of similar transactions, that a certain course of procedure was then settled, and that this influenced and possibly accounted for the procedure adopted in the later transactions.

Having regard to the part Abba took in arranging the later transactions, and his pecuniary participation in two of them, their Lordships agree with this view.

The first of the Jamal transactions was on the 15th of November 1912, and in form, it follows precisely the lines of the Abba transaction of January 1912.

The number of shares transferred was 70,000, the transferee was Jamal, the amount treated as paid was Rs. 1,30,000, and the transfer was from the nominees of the Bank of Bengal by whom (to the transferee's knowledge) the shares were held as security for Baijnath's cash credit. Though Abba's name does not appear, he was interested in 27,500 of the 70,000 shares transferred.

Of this sum of Rs. 1,30,000 the amount then advanced was one lac; the balance of Rs. 30,000 represented a sum already due from Baijnath to Jamal.

Bought and sold notes were executed as in the case of the Abba transaction, the date of delivery was the 15th November 1913, the rate of interest was $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and the purchase price was Rs. 1,78,750. On renewal, further bought and sold notes were executed in November 1913, the date of delivery being the 15th November 1914. The price was Rs. 2,45,781-4-0, which represented the previous amount of Rs. 1,78,750 with interest for one year at $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. calculated from the expiration of the previous bought and sold notes. There were no further renewals and this is attributed, as in the Abba transaction, to the agreement for reduction of interest.

It is true, as was laid down in Balkishan

Das v. Legge (1), that under sec. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, as between the parties to an instrument, oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose, either of construing deeds or of proving the intention of the parties. But in the view their Lordships take of the circumstances of this case the section and the ruling have no application to it.

The preamble to the Evidence Act recites that "it is expedient to consolidate, define and amend the Law of Evidence"; and sec. 92 merely prescribes a rule of evidence; it does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. To these circumstances their Lordships will briefly advert.

At the date of their transfer the shares were held, as the transferee knew, as security for Baijnath's debt to the Bank, and it does not appear that the transfer was effected in exercise of any power of sale in the Bank. The money paid on that transfer went in reduction of the Bank's debt and there is nothing to indicate that the transferee acquired a greater right than was vested in the transferor. The amount paid by the transferee was Rs. 1,30,000, a sum which, as the Chief Judge remarks, had no relation to the market price of the shares, but was made up of Rs. 1,00,000 advanced at the time at $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest and Rs. 30,000, a debt already due. The same remark applies to the purchase price in the succeeding bought and sold notes, the price being made up of that entered in the preceding notes with the addition of interest calculated in advance to the new date for delivery. Then, again, the recognition of Baijnath's claim to dividends, whether he paid the price in the notes or not, points, if anything, to the shares being held by the transferee as a security and not as a purchaser, as does the fact that the transfer fees were paid by Baijnath and that no brokerage was paid.

These are all indications of the true nature of the transaction; they may properly be taken into consideration and their effect is to favour Baijnath's contention.

Of the other Jamal transactions, three only are now in dispute, for the 30,000 shares transferred on the 18th March 1913 have been retransferred to Baijnath: these three need not be separately examined, for it is not suggested that they can be differentiated from the first, which has been discussed in detail.

Over and above the several matters to which attention has been drawn as indications that the Jamal transactions must, like the Abba transaction, be treated as a mortgage, in support of Baijnath's contention, great reliance is placed on two documents, Exs. F and G.

Ex. F is an instrument of the 12th June 1913, made between Baijnath of the one part and Jamal and Abba of the other part. After a recital that Baijnath had transferred several wells and well sites to the Oil Company, for which he had not been allotted shares, it was agreed that in consideration of Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest money, Baijnath would sell and transfer to Jamal and Abba every share which might be allotted to him at any time thereafter in the Oil Company for any well or well sites transferred by him at the price of one rupee per share.

The genuineness of this agreement is not disputed and it is common ground that it was entered into for the purpose of preventing Baijnath from flooding the market with new shares. The draft was handed to Baijnath. He took it to his legal adviser, Mr. Halkar, who told Baijnath "that it would not be good to sign the agreement." The reason is obvious. By the terms of Ex. F, Baijnath bound himself to transfer shares that might be allotted to him in the Oil Company at Re. 1 each, though at the time he was buying back 30,000 shares at Rs. 4-5-4 per share. The agreement was unqualified and did not even contain a provision for repurchase, though, admittedly, the object was merely to protect the value of the shares that had been transferred in the several transactions. In accordance with his advice, Mr. Halkar prepared another draft. Baijnath deposes that it was given to Abdul Sattar, and after being kept by him for a day was returned with the assurance that it was all right and could be typed. The draft was accordingly typed by Mr. Halkar and the typed copy is Ex. G.

It is expressed to be dated the 12th June 1913, and to be between Jamal and Abba of the one part and Baijnath of the other. After recitals that Baijnath had transferred his 1,57,000 shares of the Oil Company to the names of Jamal and Abba as security for a loan on account, and that the shares were in their possession and names on which they had a lien for the amount advanced, and that Baijnath was to get a further allotment of shares in the Company which were to be sold by him to Jamal and Abba, in the witnessing part it is declared that Jamal and Abba had a mere lien on the shares and were not the owners of the shares, and that they should retransfer the shares to the name of Baijnath on his repaying the loans.

On the document are what purport to be the signatures of Jamal and Abba as executants and of A. H. N. Jamal, otherwise known as Abdul Sattar, as an attesting witness, and their close resemblance to the genuine signatures of these three persons is not contested. Baijnath swears to the execution of the document, but Jamal and Abba declare it is a forgery. Abdul Sattar, whose name appears as the attesting witness, is a son of Jamal, and though he came with his father to Court, he did not go into the witness box to deny his signature.

The trial Judge held the signatures of Jamal and Abba and of the attesting witness to be genuine.

The learned Judges on appeal came to a different conclusion. The Chief Judge was not satisfied that Jamal and Abba signed Ex. G and thought it probable that the document was concocted not long before the filing of the suit in 1916. Ormond, J., thought it was prepared after Jamal had taken up the position that the shares could no longer be redeemed or repurchased because the due dates had expired.

In their Lordships' opinion the view of the Appellate Court as to the time at which the document was prepared is disproved by the evidence of Mr. Halkar. He deposes that he prepared the document in June 1913, in the circumstances already stated, and he is able to identify it by a correction in it initialled by him at the time. In suit No. 60, he gave evidence to the effect that he actually had a conversation with Abba about this agreement in June 1915. Their Lordships are satisfied that Ex. G was prepared in June 1913, and that the Appellate Court's view as to the date and purpose of its preparation is erroneous.

The Chief Judge, in arriving at his conclusion, adverse to the execution of Ex. G, remarks on the fact that while in Ex. F the signature of Abba has the word Mohamed in full, in Ex. G it has only the first syllable. But it has been shown in the argument that on other documents Abba has written his signature as in Ex. G, so that the Chief Judge's comment loses its force.

The learned trial Judge examined the evidence given before him with critical care. After commenting on the manner in which it was given and weighing the probabilities, he came to the conclusion that the denial before him of the signatures was not true, with the result, as he expresses it, that he was entirely satisfied that Jamal and Abba did execute G. The judgments in the Appellate Court disclose no sufficient ground for disturbing the first Court's appreciation of the evidence, and the finding that Ex. G was duly executed will therefore stand.

Apart from Ex. G their Lordships would be prepared to hold that the transactions in suit are mortgages; if this document be accepted this conclusion is placed beyond controversy.

But then it has been contended that even if the transactions were mortgages the English rule of law that a mortgage is redeemable after default has no application to mortgages of chattels or choses in action by Hindus and Mohammedans and that consequently the right of redemption was lost. Even if this were a correct statement of the law in Burma (a point on which their Lordships express no opinion), the lower Courts have rightly held that in the circumstances of this case the period for redemption cannot be held to have expired.

The only other point is as to the rate and period of interest to be allowed. Para. 26 of the plaint in suit No. 62 of 1916 alleges that about the end of 1914 Baijnath was desirous of paying off the amount of his indebtedness by borrowing from other persons; that the Defendant requested Baijnath not to make any definite arrangement to raise loans as the Company had commenced to pay large dividends, and that the amount due would shortly be repaid out of the dividends; but the Defendant undertook to charge Baijnath after the periods agreed to between the parties interest at 9 per cent. per annum for further interest and agreed to credit all interest received by him towards the amount due; and that Baijnath agreed to the Defendants' proposal and consented to allow the amount due to be repaid at Baijnath's convenience.

The plaint in suit No. 60 of 1916 contained allegations to the same effect. In both suits there was an issue as to whether there was any such agreement, and, if so, what was its effect. The first Court decided this issue in Baijnath's favour: the Appeal Court decided against him.

The Judge of the trial Court on the evidence found that Baijnath could have raised the money at 9 per cent. per annum, and he gives an account of how this part of the case was treated before him, which leaves no doubt as to the correctness of his finding.

Accepting it as their Lordships do, it is inconceivable that Baijnath would have continued his liability for the extortionate interest payable under the original transactions, and the finding of the first Court must prevail.

Baijnath has objected that as the delay in payment off of the mortgages was due to the wrongful repudiation of his right to redeem, Abba is not entitled to subsequent interest. The answer is that this objection is opposed to the decision of the first Court, and from that decree no appeal was preferred by Baijnath. Therefore, the objection cannot now be entertained.

The result, then, is that Abba has failed in his contention that the transactions in suit No. 62 are not mortgages, and also so far as interest in excess of 9 per cent. per annum was awarded from the date of the agreement for reduction of interest. Payments have been made into Court by Baijnath under the decrees of the lower Court, but it does not appear clearly how the money has been dealt with or whether any further account or payment by way of restitution or otherwise is necessary. These are matters for determination (if necessary) by the Court in Burma.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the decrees of the Appellate Court must be set aside and that the appeals from the Court of first instance ought to have been dismissed with costs by the Appellate Court, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. Abba will pay the costs of these consolidated appeals.

LIEUT. JACOB,
Appellant,

v.

DAVID ALEXANDER
WILLS, Respondent.

Breach of promise of marriage—Onus to prove contract discharged—Promise to marry lady of German extraction—Marriage deferred till termination of war—Silence till then, if sufficient to discharge contract.

LUCIA JACOB v. DAVID ALEXANDER WILLS.

In a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage, if the contract of marriage is proved, it is for the defence to establish that the contract was rescinded and dissolved by agreement of both the parties to the contract. In certain circumstances silence, absence, conduct, expressions in letters may be amply sufficient to lead a Court of Law to such a conclusion, but silence for years, in the extraordinary circumstances of the present case, was held not to be sufficient.

This was an appeal (No. 120 of 1924) from a decree, dated the 5th January 1923, of the High Court in Calcutta in its Appellate Jurisdiction, which reversed a decree, dated the 11th August 1922, of the said Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was instituted by the Appellant claiming damages for breach of promise of marriage.

The Respondent admitted that he promised to marry the Appellant and the question for determination on the appeal was whether at the date of the alleged breach the Appellant had exonerated or discharged the Respondent from the performance of his promise.

The Appellant was of German extraction but came to England at the age of 17 and shortly afterwards in 1892, she was married to a European British subject named Jacob, with whom she lived as his wife until her husband's death in 1918.

In the year 1915 the Appellant was in Simla and in June 1915 the Respondent proposed marriage to her and was accepted, and it was arranged that the marriage should take place at Simla on the 9th October.

In July 1915 the Appellant was notified by the Government of India that they intended to repatriate her to Germany, and in the following September she was interned at Belgaum. Correspondence between the parties was continued up to November 1915 when the Respondent wrote to the Appellant in the following terms :—

“ It was unfortunate that your first letter was addressed to the office. I had previously announced my engagement to you to my office men and they were acquainted with your handwriting from the letters you sent me from Simla. I had not told them that you were interned and they promptly commented on my receiving a letter from Belgaum and they enquired if the letter was from you and if you were interned. When I am in the office all letters received come directly to me which is the reason they were not aware of your other letters from Belgaum. In reply to my office men I had to tell them the letter was not from you and that you were not interned. I am sorry that I had to tell this untruth but the feeling of late and it is becoming worse from day to day against anyone even distantly connected with Germany is very very bitter more specially so since the dastardly murder of Miss Cavell. Had I visited you at Belgaum, it would have confirmed the present suspicion that you are interned and I am much afraid that this would have come back on me in some manner. I had therefore to think long before definitely deciding to visit you and I think you will now understand my reasons for not doing so.

“ I have now come to the position that I really do not know what to do. To continue corresponding with you will confirm that you are interned. Perhaps you are not acquainted with the manner your envelopes reach me. I send one herewith from which you will see the publicity given as to the source of the letter. In writing you so fully I know that you will understand the awkward position in which I am placed. I have no desire to hurt you dearest but I feel that you would prefer I am straightforward with you by putting all the facts before you rather than cease corresponding altogether and make no explanations.

"In view of the above I have been thinking daily, nay hourly, as to what is to be done, but I will first await your reply before deciding definitely. It is my wish to keep my promise to you but it seems to me that in doing so I will have a hard fight with the rest of mankind."

At Christmas of that year the Appellant received the following telegram in answer to one that she had sent to the Respondent:—

"To Mrs. Jacob,
Civil Camp,
Belgium.

Many thanks for kindly Greetings which I heartily reciprocate. Trust New Year will bring both you and my heart's desire. Wrote you early November. Why don't you reply this suspense is awful?

Wills."

No further communication between the parties was proved to have taken place until November 1920 after the Appellant was released from internment and had been compensated by Government for being illegally detained.

The Respondent had then been married in England and was unable to perform his promise.

The Appellant contended that the parties had mutually agreed to postpone their marriage until the war between Germany and England was at an end.

The Respondent submitted that he was justified in considering that the engagement was at an end from the long continued silence which subsisted between X'mas 1915 and November 1920.

In August 1921 the Appellant instituted her suit which was heard and decided in August 1922 by Buckland, J., who awarded the Appellant Rs. 35,000 damages.

An appeal was preferred and was decided by Sanderson, C. J., and Richardson, J., in favour of the Respondent. They were of opinion that the correspondence showed that there was no definite agreement to marry after the war and that the conduct of the Appellant showed that she herself considered that the engagement had been broken off.

From the decree of the appeal Court the Appellant obtained special leave to appeal in forma pauperis to the Privy Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Messrs. Barrington Ward, K. C. and Nissim (with them Mr. S. Hyam) for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DARLING.—This appeal arises out of an action to recover damages for breach of a promise to marry. Mr. Justice Buckland, the Judge at the trial, decided in favour of Plaintiff and awarded damages against Defendant. This decision was reversed on appeal by the High Court of Calcutta, on the ground that the parties to the contract had expressly, or by their conduct, rescinded the contract and had released each other from its performance.

The Appellant, a German by birth, had in 1892 become a British subject by reason of her marriage with Mr. Jacob, a barrister. He died in England in 1913.

The Respondent and Mrs. Jacob, the widow, in May of 1915 engaged to marry one another, and it was contemplated that the wedding should take place in October 1915.

Difficulties arose owing to the Indian Government insisting on treating Mrs. Jacob as a suspected person and an alien. It was proposed to send her to Germany, but in September 1915, she was interned at Belgaum; and there she was detained until the end of March 1920.

In the course of their engagement many letters passed between Mrs. Jacob and Mr. Wills. The last letter received by her from him is dated the 3rd November 1915, but he sent her a telegram at Christmas of that year.

Mrs. Jacob gave evidence to the effect that she believed she had telegraphed in reply, explaining that she did not write for reasons already known to Mr. Wills; that is, lest she should prejudice him in his business and social relations.

Respondent did not produce any letters or telegrams received from Appellant, but said that he had destroyed them all. On the 21st August 1920, whilst ignorant that Appellant had been released from internment, he had married in England, thus—were his promise to marry Mrs. Jacob still binding—putting it out of his power to perform it.

Although useful, the oral testimony in this case is of less importance than the correspondence which passed between the parties.

Appellant maintains that, when it appeared that Respondent's marriage to her might prejudicially affect his business in India, they agreed to postpone it until the war between Germany and England was at an end. This contention is supported by the letter of Respondent to Appellant, dated the 31st July 1915, especially by this passage in it :—

"If it is a fact that the officials are prohibited from associating with you, I am afraid the only alternative left to us is to get married after the war. I am agreeable to wait all my life for you. Oh, but it will be so hard that I do not like to look upon the coming years. Will my darling wait for me also? I have not lost hope of marrying you this October, as I still think you have not correctly understood what took place at this interview."

She had misunderstood nothing of that matter, as her subsequent treatment proves, and in her evidence (p. 8) she states that she agreed to wait "all Eternity." This answer, although hyperbolic, as is usual in the language of lovers, amounts to an assent to Respondent's proposal. In Appellant's letter to Respondent, dated the 20th December 1920, she states the position thus :—

"I have received none of the letters you say you have written me later on. We had agreed to wait with being married until the war was over. You said you thought it would last three or four years in one of your letters, and I believed that then impossible, but you were right. It lasted just that time."

It seems likely that she here alludes to this passage in his letter of the 28th July 1915 :—

"I have already told you, darling, that I think the war has only just begun, and it will be a few years before it ends. Well, until it ends I must avoid all temptations so as not to betray your trust. Being a man, I have set myself a hard task, but I am sure that my darling's prayers added to mine will assist me. Is my meaning quite clear to you, dear heart?"

The meaning of this can hardly be other than that he desires and hopes to lead a life of chastity pending the interval between the date of that letter and the end of the war—when he and Mrs. Jacob will marry.

It further appears to have been agreed between the parties that the marriage should be postponed so long as Mrs. Jacob was subject to the imputation of being a German subject. The evidence of Mr. Wills as to the period to which the marriage might be relegated is not definite. But he was asked (Question 123) whether he would have felt bound by his engagement had Mrs. Jacob, whilst still a prisoner of war, written asking him to come to Belgaum and to marry her. His answer was :—

"That would be contrary to her own wishes—absolutely contrary to her own wishes; she was very magnanimous, and she admitted that so long as she had this slur on her it would do irreparable harm to my business to marry her."

Question: "And you agreed?" Answer: "Yes."

Further questions and answers satisfy their Lordships that Respondent regarded the contract as binding upon him until Appellant should be "free of the slur": which he agrees was not until her release in March 1920.

Their Lordships are of opinion that Mr. Wills and Mrs. Jacob had agreed to marry one another when the war was over, provided she was then "free of the slur," so likely to be injurious to him in his business, of her being suspected by the Indian Government of being a German subject.

This suspicion was not dispelled until March 1920, at the earliest, when Mrs. Jacob was released from internment; and perhaps was not fully removed until November of that year, when the Government admitted that she had been wronged, and paid her a considerable sum as compensation.

Since the Respondent had in August 1920, by marriage to another, rendered the performance of his contract with Appellant impossible, it is the opinion of their Lordships that she is entitled to succeed in this appeal, unless it be proved that the mutual promises of Mr. Wills and Mrs. Jacob had been withdrawn by each of them, and the contract to marry rescinded by consent. The burden of proving this rests upon the Respondent.

He contends that the silence of Appellant, lasting during practically the whole term of her seclusion, from December 1915, to the 24th November 1920, justified him in thinking that she had released him from his promise, and much stress was laid by his Counsel upon this telegram of the 28th December 1915 :—

"To Mrs. Jacob, Civil Camp, Belgaum. Many thanks for kindly greetings, which I heartily reciprocate. Trust new year will bring both you and my heart's desire. Wrote you early November. Why don't you reply? This suspense is awful.—Wills."

From this it is evident that Respondent did not anticipate an early arrival of the time when he and Mrs. Jacob might marry. He explains in his evidence (see Questions 255-265) that the words "this suspense is awful" refer to the illness of Mrs. Jacob, of which he had become aware at the end of October 1915.

After this there is no correspondence between the parties until Mrs. Jacob, being then free, wrote her letter of the 24th November 1920. The explanation of Mrs. Jacob is given in her evidence at p. 21, and is to the effect that, although surprised and grieved by the silence of Respondent, she had "come to the conclusion that Wills was quite content with the agreement made between us. . . . He had accepted and I had agreed, and I abided by that."

On the 24th November 1920, Appellant wrote to Respondent a letter containing these words :—

"My dear Alic, I am free to do as I please again at last. You must have wondered, the war having finished so long ago, why you have not heard from me before. The reason is I had to wait all this time until my case against the Government was settled. It was only settled last week. I have been declared to be a British subject, and have received damages from the Government for their attempt to repatriate me. . . . I nearly sent you a wire, but I thought it might be too great a shock. And now Alic, what do you wish me to do with regard to the rings. I am still in a state of bewilderment, therefore I can't write any more. . . ."

To this letter Respondent, on the 14th

LUCIA JACOB v. DAVID ALEXANDER WILLS.

December 1920, sent his reply, in which occurs this passage :—

"Then in 1916 I wrote you either two or three letters—I cannot quite remember the number. To all of these letters I had no reply, and as is usual in cases of this sort I assumed the worst had happened to you, more especially as your last letter conveyed the news of your serious state of health. On the signing of the Armistice in 1918, and the whole of 1919 passing and still no news from you, I was more than ever convinced my assumption was correct."

He then announces that he had married in August of 1920.

To this letter Appellant replied on the 20th December 1920, and used the expressions already quoted, and she added :—

"But why, oh, Alic, should you have thought I was dead when an ordinary letter to any one here in this place (Belgaum) would have given you that news about me. Why I did not get your letters I do not know. . . . It may interest you to know I had two offers of marriage during my stay here. Of course I told each of them I was engaged to you, and both accepted my answer as final."

It appears to their Lordships unnecessary to deal minutely with the arguments addressed to them by Counsel, and founded upon various expressions used in the letters between the parties; nor need they comment upon the considerations which appear in the judgments of the Court of first instance and in the Court of Appeal, considerations which led those Courts to opposite conclusions.

All that their Lordships have now to decide is whether the Respondent has proved—as it was for him to do—that the contract made between him and the Appellant was rescinded and dissolved by the agreement of them both. In certain circumstances silence, absence, conduct, expressions in letters may be amply sufficient to lead a Court of Law to such a conclusion. But here is a case whose circumstances are altogether extraordinary. The parties to this suit were entangled, and embarrassed—like so many others during the war—by difficulties not of their making, and quite beyond their control. The situation in which the Respondent found himself seems to have been beyond his strength to endure, as he himself had come near to foreseeing.

But, when every allowance for the weakness of human nature has been liberally accorded, there remains the legal liability to perform the contract of marriage if it were subsisting. It must never be forgotten that to prove that this contract was rescinded by mutual agreement is a burden of which the Respondent must discharge himself, if he is to succeed in this appeal. It is a mere question of fact whether he has done so; and their Lordships cannot find proof of this. Therefore his obligation remains—but as he cannot, because of his marriage, fulfil it, he must make amends to Mrs. Jacob.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the High Court in appeal set aside with costs and the decree of Mr. Justice Buckland in favour of Appellant restored.

The Appellant, having been granted special leave to appeal in forma pauperis, will have the costs of the appeal, to be taxed upon the scale usual in such cases.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 253 OF 1923.

SUBHAWARDY, J. | BRAJABALLAV GHOSE
MUKERJI, J. and anr., Defendants,
1925, Appellants,

Heard, 13 and

v.

16, November. AKHOY BAGDI and ors.,
Judgment, pro forma Defendants,
16, November. Respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 33—Requirements laid down in section—Proviso 2, scope and effect of—Suit to recover possession by party dispossessed under sec. 145, Cr. P. C.—Evidence given in the criminal proceeding by one of the Defendants as a witness for the other Defendant, if admissible under sec. 33—Admission made in the previous deposition, if may be used against co-Defendant—Sec. 18, effect of—Kobala, purporting to deal with property in suit, not completed and registered—Legitimate purpose for which such document may be admitted in evidence—Sec. 91.

The Plaintiff sued to recover possession of property from which he had been dispossessed by the Defendant by virtue of an order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. In that proceeding one U, a co-Defendant in the present suit, was examined as a witness on behalf of the Defendant and a certified copy of his deposition was put in by the Plaintiff at the time of the argument and admitted in evidence. On behalf of the Plaintiff a kobala purporting to have been executed by the Plaintiff's vendor in Defendant's favour in respect of the property in suit valued at Rs. 99 but which was not completed and registered was also put in evidence:

Held—That notwithstanding that the value of the property which the document purported to convey was less than Rs. 100, a sale of the property if it was made by a document could only be made by a registered instrument under sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, but having regard to sec. 91 of the Evidence Act, it might be used as evidence of the nature and terms of the transaction which fell through to corroborate the Plaintiff's story that the Defendant negotiated for the purchase of the property from the vendor of the Plaintiff who had title to the property.

That a certified copy of the deposition of a witness would not come in by itself; in any case it would be necessary to adduce evidence proving the identity of the person who gave the deposition.

Evidence is admissible under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act only when the requirements of that section are fulfilled. The mere fact that a witness did not appear as a witness when cited on behalf of the Plaintiff or that he appeared as a witness on behalf of the Defendant on one occasion but was not examined, it being found that he was not kept out of the way by the Defendant, would not be a ground for admitting the deposition under sec. 33 of the Act.

The conditions laid down in sec. 33 being absent and the second proviso to that section to the effect that the adverse party in the first proceeding should have had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the witness not having been satisfied the deposition could not go in under the section.

The admission made by U in the proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., when examined as a witness therein is evidence against him as a piece of admission but as to the admissibility of the admission against the co-Defendant the words of sec. 18 of the Evidence Act were perfectly clear and inasmuch as U made the statement when he had parted with his interest in favour of his co-Defendant in the present suit, the admission made by him could not be treated as evidence of admission as against the co-Defendant.

This was an appeal preferred on the

BRAJABALLAV GHOSE v. AKHOY BAGDI.

12th of December 1922 against the decree of Babu Nani Gopal Mukherji, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 6th September 1922, affirming the decree of Babu Gajanan Banerjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Katwa, dated the 22nd December 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Bankim Chandra Mukherjee and Babu Charu Chandra Ganguly for the Appellants.

Babu Gopendra Nath Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MUKERJI, J.—The Defendant No. 1 is the Appellant in this appeal. The appeal arises out of a suit to recover possession of a tank and some paddy land on a declaration of the Plaintiff's title thereto. The Plaintiff's case was that he had purchased the same from the Bariks who were pro forma Defendants in the suit and that after such purchase he was dispossessed by the principal Defendants on the strength of an order obtained by them in their favour in a proceeding under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The defence of the principal Defendants was that the property did not belong to the Bariks and neither they nor the Plaintiffs were in possession thereof. The Courts below have decreed the suit.

On behalf of the Defendants-Appellants two grounds have been urged in support of the appeal. The first ground relates to the reception in evidence of a kobala, dated the 21st Joistha 1326. It is contended on behalf of the Appellants that this document requires registration and that inasmuch as it was not a registered document, it was not admissible in evidence. It appears that the document purports to have been executed by the Plaintiff's vendor in favour of the Defendant but that for some reason or other it was not completed nor was it registered. The case of the Defendant is that negotiations in connexion with this transaction fell through and therefore the document was left unregistered. There is some oral evidence on this point and the document, as far as we can make out from the proceedings, was proved in the case for the purpose of corroborating the oral evidence. The value of the property which the document purported to convey was Rs. 99; still a sale of the property, if it was made by a document, could only be made by a registered document under the provisions of sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. The sale, however, never took place and the document was proved only to corroborate the Plaintiff's story that the Defendant negotiated for the purchase of the property from the Plaintiff's vendor, a fact which would suggest that the latter had title to the property. The learned Subordinate Judge states in his judgment that he agrees in the appraisal of the evidentiary value of this document as made by the learned Munsif and the learned Munsif in one part of his judgment states that the kobala is not at all a strong piece of evidence of the Plaintiff's vendor's title. The real use therefore that has been made of the document is not to show the Plaintiff's vendor's title but to prove the nature and the terms of the transaction which as a matter of fact was not completed but fell through. That is a legitimate use that may be made of this document. As has been laid down in the case of Sheikh Juman v. Mohammad Nobineoaz (1), such a document does not confer title and is merely evidentiary, but having regard to sec. 91 of the Evidence Act, it may be used as evidence of the nature and terms of the transaction. This ground therefore is of no substance and must fail.

(1) 21 C. W. N. 1140 (1917).

The other ground taken by the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the Appellants is of much substance. That ground relates to the reception in evidence of a certified copy of the deposition of one Umapada who was not examined as a witness in the present suit but was examined as a witness in the criminal proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., to which I have already referred. Umapada was a pro forma Defendant in the present suit. In the proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the Defendant No. 1 (the Appellant before us) was the first party and the Plaintiff was the second party. Umapada was examined as a witness in those proceedings on behalf of the present Appellant. In the present suit, Umapada was cited as a witness by the Plaintiff but he did not appear. Subsequently as appears from a hajira to be found on the record, his name was put forward as being present on a particular day as a witness on behalf of the Defendant-Appellant. He was, however, not examined; and at the time of the argument a certified copy of the deposition of Umapada as given by him in the proceedings under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, mentioned above, was put in on behalf of the Plaintiff and was marked as an exhibit in the case. The Appellant contends that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in considering this deposition as a piece of evidence in the case. The learned Judge, as appears from his judgment, has relied upon this piece of evidence a good deal and in fact the major portion of his judgment deals with the admissibility and evidentiary value of the deposition of Umapada. He has held that this evidence is admissible under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act and that even if it be conceded that it does not come under that section then it may be used in evidence as an admission as against the present Appellant. Before dealing with those two matters I should like to observe at the outset that whatever view may be taken of them, the deposition has not been proved at all. A certified copy of the deposition of a witness would not come in by itself. In any case it will be necessary to adduce evidence proving the identity of the person who gave the deposition. That does not appear to have been proved in the present case and it was only in the course of the argument that a certified copy was put in and marked as an exhibit. Now turning to the learned Judge's reasoning that the deposition is admissible under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act, I find that the learned Judge seems to be of opinion that although it has not been proved that Umapada had been kept away by the Defendant-Appellant his evidence is admissible under that section because he actually appeared on behalf of the Defendant as a witness on one particular occasion and that therefore it should be inferred that it would be useless for the Plaintiff to have spent money in order to bring Umapada to Court as a witness. Sec. 33, however, is perfectly clear on the point. Evidence will be admissible under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act, when the witness is dead, when he cannot be found, when he is unable to give evidence or is kept out of the way by the adverse party or if his presence cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which the Court considers unreasonable. The requirements of none of these clauses mentioned in sec. 33 of the Evidence Act have been satisfied in the present case. The mere fact that he did not appear as a witness when cited on behalf of the Plaintiff or that he appeared as a witness on behalf of the Defendant on one occasion but was not examined when it has been distinctly found that he was not kept out of the way by the Defendant would not be a ground for admitting the deposition under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act. As regards the question of expense what the learned Subordinate Judge says with reference to it does not show that the presence of Umapada could not be obtained without an amount of expense which would be considered unreasonable by the Court. Then again there are three provisos to that section. The second proviso is to the effect "that the adverse party in the first proceeding should have the right and opportunity to cross-examine the witness." Umapada had been examined in the proceedings under sec. 145 as a witness on behalf of the Defendant who was the first party therein. The Defendant had no opportunity nor the right to cross-examine Umapada; and, in these circumstances it is impossible to hold that this proviso has been complied with in the present case. I am clearly of opinion therefore that the deposition of Umapada could not go in under the provisions of sec. 33 of the Evidence Act. The learned Subordinate Judge then says that even if sec. 33 did not apply, the deposition could be used as evidence of admission as against the present Appellants. Umapada is a co-Defendant in the present suit with Defendant No. 1 (Appellant). The admission made by him in the proceeding under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, when examined as a witness therein is undoubtedly evidence as against him. In the case of Soojan Bibi v. Achmut Ali (2), Sir Richard Couch, C. J., dealt with this

"Sec. 33 does not apply to the deposition of a witness in a former suit when the witness is himself a Defendant in the subsequent suit, and the deposition is sought to be used against him, not as evidence given between the parties one of whom called him as a witness, but as a statement made by him, which would be evidence against him whether he made it as a witness or on any other occasion. It is used against him as an admission; sec. 33 has no application to such a case as the present. The sections of the Evidence Act which do apply are the sections relating to admissions." The same view has been taken in the case of Ali Mahommed Khan v. Sheikh Moharaj Bepari (3), where it has been laid down that such a statement can be evidence against the maker of it as a piece of admission. The question that next arises is whether when the statement may be used as an admission as against Umapada it may not also be used as against Umapada's co-Defendant, viz., the present Appellant. That question has been considered in several cases decided by this Court of which I shall refer to two. In the case of Meajan Matubar v. Alimuddi Mian (4), when dealing with the question of admissibility of an admission as against a co-Defendant it was laid down that when several persons are jointly interested in the subject-matter of a suit, an admission by one of them is receivable in evidence not only against himself but also against the other Defendants, whether they be all jointly suing or sued, provided that the admission relates to the subject-matter in dispute and is made by the declarant in his character of a person jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered. In a later decision of this Court in the case of Ambar Ali v. Lutfe Ali (5), it was pointed out that in such a case it was absolutely necessary that the admission should relate to the subject-matter in dispute and that it should be made by the declarant in his character of a person jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered and that the requirement of the identity in legal interest between the joint owners is of fundamental importance. It was further pointed out that to hold otherwise would be to permit a litigant to discredit an opponent's claim merely by joining any person as the opponent's co-party and then employing that person's statements as admission. Indeed, it is not necessary to refer to any cases on the point because the words of sec. 18 of the Evidence Act are perfectly plain. They are these:— "If they are made during the continuance of the interest of the persons making the statements." In the present case Umapada made the statements when he had parted with the interest in favour of the lessee, the Defendant No. 1. In this view of the matter I am not prepared to accept the reason given by the learned Subordinate Judge that the statement of Umapada as contained in the aforesaid deposition can be treated as evidence of admission as against the present Appellant.

The learned vakil for the Respondents has argued that even if this evidence be held to be inadmissible we should not interfere with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. He has referred us to the observation which is to be found in the portion of the learned Judge's judgment which runs in these words: "I only wish to mention here that even if this deposition be entirely thrown out of the Court, my finding would remain unchanged. Only what can be easily held on this tangible admission will have to be based on the balance of other evidence and probabilities of the case." We have considered this argument of the Respondents very carefully; but having regard to the fact that the major portion of the judgment of the learned Judge is based upon the deposition of Umapada and also to the fact that the learned Judge does not state what the balance of other evidence is nor what the probabilities of the case are and further because we find that the learned Judge in point of fact based his decision mainly, if not entirely, upon this deposition of Umapada, we are unable to hold that this is a case in which we should decline to interfere merely because at the conclusion of the judgment the learned Subordinate Judge has recorded the observation to which I have referred. I am clearly of opinion that this is a case in which we should interfere. Accordingly I set aside the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and remit the appeal to his Court so that the deposition of Umapada may be excluded and a decision arrived at on the appeal on the other materials on the record and in the light of the observations made above. The costs will abide the result.

No. 674 OF 1923.

SUHRAWARDY, J. R. M. SAJJ RAI and anr., MUKERJI, J. Defendants, Appellants,
 1925, v.
 Heard, DAKSHINESWAR RAI and 11, November. ors., Plaintiffs, Judgment, Respondents.
 13, November.

Limitation—Title by adverse possession for over twelve years—Usufructuary mortgagee, possession of—Usufructuary mortgagee, if can retain possession after payment of his mortgage money in full before the expiry of the period.

The suit land was mortgaged to one Rooke in 1876 then to Khelaram in 1888 by way of usufructuary mortgage to retain possession till April 1908 and then to Respondents' father in 1889 who bought it in February 1901, paid Khelaram the entire mortgage money found due to him up to April 1908 and entered into possession then. The Appellants dispossessed the Respondents in December 1917 and alleged title by purchase from the transferees of Rooke who had in 1891 bought under his own mortgage decree, to which Khelaram was no party. At the time of Rooke's purchase and thereafter the land was in Khelaram's possession. Rooke never obtained possession:

Held—That the Respondents acquired title to the disputed land by adverse possession from February 1901 till dispossessed by the Appellants in December 1917.

The usufructuary mortgage terminated in 1901 when the mortgagee Khelaram was paid off in full. Khelaram had no right to retain possession since February 1901 when the usufructuary mortgage was redeemed upon payment in full of the mortgage money; adverse possession as against Khelaram, Rooke and his transferees began in February 1901 and not from April 1908.

RAM NARAIN SAHOO v. BANDI PRASAD
 (1) distinguished.

Per MUKERJI, J.—A paper-book containing translations of the Appellants' documents of title relied upon by them was not itself secondary evidence of their contents, but if a proper case were made out for the reception of such evidence then in conjunction with the requisite oral evidence it would prove the said contents.

Correct practice in dealing with such evidence when tendered, indicated.

This was an appeal preferred on the 8th of February 1923 against the decree of Babu Bejoy Gopal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Asansol in Zillah Burdwan, dated the 4th of November 1922, affirming the decree of Babu Gopal Chandra Basu, Munsif of Asansol, dated the 17th of December 1921.

The land in suit belonged to one Rakhai who mortgaged it to Rooke in 1876 then to Khelaram in 1888 by way of usufructuary mortgage under the terms whereof the mortgagee was to remain in possession till April 1908 and then to the Plaintiffs' father Chintaram in 1889 who bought it from Rakhai on 25th February 1901 in satisfaction of the debt due to himself by Rakhai under his mortgage of 1889. Chintaram paid to the usufructuary mortgagee Khelaram in February 1901 the entire amount found due to the latter till April 1908 and got possession thus. The Plaintiffs remained in possession of the suit land from February 1901 till their dispossession by the Defendants in December 1917.

On this finding both the trial and the lower Appellate Courts decreed the Plaintiffs-Respondents' suit for recovery of possession.

The point for decision in second appeal was whether the Respondents' possession was adverse from February 1901 or from April 1908 till their dispossession by Appellants in December 1917.

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 737 (1904).

The contention of the learned Advocate for the Appellants was that the Plaintiffs-Respondents' adverse possession could not run as against Rooke or the Defendants his transferees or Khelaram so long as Khelaram's usufructuary mortgage subsisted, i.e., till after April 1908. Plaintiffs' possession was not adverse from February 1901 but from after April 1908.

Khelaram having been no party to Rooke's mortgage suit his rights of redemption under his usufructuary mortgage remained unaffected; and Plaintiffs' possession was not adverse as against him till after April 1908.

Ram Narain Sahoo v. Bandi Prasad (1) and Bunwari Jha v. Ramji Thakur (2).

All necessary facts appear from the judgment.

Mr. Bankim Ch. Mukherji and Babu Charu Chandra Ganguli for the Appellants.

Babu Jyotis Chandra Sarkar for the Respondents.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—In this case the Defendants are Appellants. Both the Courts below decreed the Plaintiffs' suit which was one for establishment of their title to and recovery of possession of 15 cottahs of the land in suit. The property originally belonged to one Rakhal. The Plaintiffs' case is that on the 25th February 1901 the Plaintiffs' father purchased it along with other plots from Rakhal. The kobala recites that the property was sold in order to pay off a mortgage executed by Rakhal in favour of the Plaintiffs' father in 1889.

It further appears that in 1888 Rakhal had mortgaged this plot to one Khelaram by way of usufructuary mortgage and put him in possession of it under which the mortgagee was to remain in possession up to 1314. The Plaintiffs' father, after having purchased the land, paid off Khelaram and entered into possession of it in 1901. The Plaintiffs allege that they were in possession all along from that date till December 1917 when they were dispossessed by the Defendants. There were proceedings started under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., which terminated in favour of the Defendants and hence this suit. The Defendants' case is that the property in suit belonged to Rakhal who in 1284 mortgaged it to one, e.g., Rooke who obtained a decree on the mortgage and purchased the property in 1891. In 1892 Rooke sold it to Dinesh from whom Ramesh, who held a mokunari interest in the property bought by Rooke, purchased it in 1900. Ramesh mortgaged the property to one Bhowmi Ranjan Sen who obtained a decree on the mortgage and in execution of the decree the property was purchased by one Harmukh Marwari from whom the Defendants purchased it on the 28th Kartick 1313 and since then they are in possession of it. The Defendants did not produce their documents of title but stated that they were filed in a certain case in the High Court. No attempt was made to call for the documents from the High Court but the paper-book prepared in the High Court in which translations of those documents were inserted was put in on behalf of the Defendants. The Plaintiffs objected but the trial Court marked the paper-book as an exhibit in the case with the remark "after objection." At the hearing the trial Court did not take into consideration the documents in the paper-book as the original documents were not placed before it. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the paper-book was not admissible in evidence but he looked into the paper-book and on a consideration of certain facts he found against the Defendants.

The first point that is argued before us is that when the Court below was of opinion that the paper-book should not have been admitted in evidence, the Defendants should have been given an opportunity of producing the original documents. They allege that the trial Court having admitted the paper-book they did not consider it necessary to produce the original documents and the Appellate Court being of opinion that the original documents should have been produced and that the paper-book was no evidence, opportunity should have been given to them to produce the original documents. This question raises a question of some intricacy inasmuch as the paper-book is, in my opinion, no evidence at all, either primary or secondary. It may be, however, conceded that in the interest of justice, one Court having committed a mistake in admitting the document, another Court when it was of opinion that such a document should not have been admitted should have given an opportunity to the Appellants to produce the original documents. It is not necessary to enter into this matter further as in my opinion the appeal fails on the ground of limitation. It is found that the Plaintiffs came into possession of this land in 1901. They were dispossessed in 1917. On these facts the Munsif found that the Plaintiffs succeeded, irrespective of the title which they have proved, in proving adverse possession against the Defendants and their predecessors. The learned Subordinate Judge is also of opinion that the evidence of possession aduced on behalf of the Plaintiffs is preferable to that produced on behalf of the Defendants and he has found that the land was in possession of the Plaintiffs from 1901 till their dispossession in 1917. In view of these findings he dismissed the appeal. In this connection, it is argued before us, that the Plaintiffs' possession in 1901 need not be adverse against Rakhai and therefore against the Defendants who derived their title from Rakhai. It is said that in 1901, the property was in possession of Khelaram by virtue of the usufructuary mortgage executed in his favour by Rakhai. Rakhai and his successors in title, the Defendants or their predecessor, were therefore not entitled to take possession of the property until the termination of the usufructuary mortgage in favour of Khelaram until the end of 1314 or April 1908. I am unable to accept this contention. The Plaintiffs' father redeemed the mortgage in favour of Khelaram and took actual possession of this property by virtue of his purchase. According to the Defendants' case in 1901 when Rakhai sold this property to the Plaintiffs' father he had no interest left in it. The Plaintiffs' father was then for all intents and purposes a trespasser so far as the Defendants were concerned. He came into possession of the property as a trespasser and by paying off Khelaram he obtained actual possession of it. Khelaram's mortgage having come to an end in 1901, he being paid off, Rakhai or the Defendants who allege to have derived their title from him, cannot say that they had no right at all to take direct possession of the property in 1901. The only bar to their taking khas possession of the property was the usufructuary mortgage executed in favour of Khelaram. When that mortgage was extinguished or the operation of it terminated, by any means whatsoever, the Defendants cannot say that Khelaram was still entitled to possession and their title to khas possession was delayed till the entire period of usufructuary mortgage. In this view of the matter, the finding of the Courts below being that the Plaintiffs were in possession from 1901 to 1917, it must be held that they acquired a good title by adverse possession against the Defendants. I am accordingly of opinion that this appeal fails on the second ground mentioned above and should be dismissed with costs.

MUKERJI, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs and desire to add a few words.

But for the opinion which I have formed on the question of possession I should have felt bound to remand the case to enable the Defendants-Appellants a further opportunity of adducing documentary evidence. They put in a High Court paper-book in a certain first appeal as secondary evidence of the contents of some documents. The paper-book by itself would not be secondary evidence of the contents of those documents, but if a proper case were made out for the reception of such evidence then in conjunction with the requisite oral evidence it would prove the said contents. Objection to the reception of the paper-book in evidence was taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs but that objection was not dealt with at the time. The paper-book was marked as an exhibit with the endorsement that it was objected to. The order sheet contains a simple order that it was marked as an exhibit, while the list of exhibits shows that it was admitted subject to objection. It will be observed that the column provided for the remarks in the said list is headed "whether admitted after or without objection." This is as it should be, for all objections as to the admissibility of evidence should be dealt with at the time of its reception or at any rate at the earliest possible opportunity,—a rule which has been repeatedly enjoined in reported decisions. The reason of the rule is that if the Court allows the objection, the party tendering the evidence may take such steps as he may be advised to get the lacunæ remedied. The expression "subject to objection" means that the objection remains undecided. It may be that in some cases, evidence has to be received subject to objection in anticipation of other evidence which, it is hoped, will be forthcoming and which if produced will remove the objection. In such cases a final decision on the objection must be recorded before the Court proceeds to judgment. Omission in this respect is likely to prejudice the party producing the evidence by letting the matter remain in a dubious state and then depriving the party tendering the evidence of an opportunity of making up the defects which in many cases he would be ready to do if he is told that the objection is allowed. In the present case it is only in the judgment of the trial Court that there is any indication that the Court is not satisfied as to the admissibility of the evidence. This is a procedure which deserves to be condemned.

On the question of possession, however, I am decidedly against the Appellants' contention. The mortgages in order of sequence were as follows:—(1) Simple mortgage in favour of Rooke, (2) usufructuary mortgage in favour of Khelaram and, (3) simple mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff's father. At the date of the suit on Rooke's mortgage the other two mortgages were in existence, but the said mortgages were not made parties to the suit and the right of the puisne mortgagees who were not parties to the suit remained unaffected by the decree and the proceedings in execution thereof. The Appellants' chief contention is that so long as the usufructuary mortgage in favour of Khelaram subsisted, adverse possession could not run as against Rooke or his transferees—the Appellants being such transferees—and as an authority for this proposition reliance is placed upon certain decisions, notably that of this Court in the case of Ram Narain Sahoo v. Bandi Prasad (1), in which it is observed that a first mortgagee in possession under a prior sale may always shield himself under his mortgage and his purchase, although his right to possession may be defective and that the puisne mortgagee's right is limited to a right of redemption or sale of the mortgaged premises subject to the lien of the first mortgagee or auction-purchaser on a decree obtained by the latter. If Rooke could obtain possession under his purchase the rights of the parties would have been regulated by this rule. The findings of the Courts below indicate, and indeed it is stated to be one of the admitted features of the case, that the property was at the time of Rooke's purchase and thereafter in the possession of Khelaram, the usufructuary mortgagee. The Plaintiffs' father treated this decree as a nullity, ignored the rights of Rooke, purchased the property in satisfaction of his own mortgage, and also paid off Khelaram and came into possession. He acquired no title under his purchase and came in as an outsider and possibly a trespasser; and the fact that he chose to pay off Khelaram makes no difference. From the point of time that he came to be in possession, he was in adverse possession. This was in 1308, and from that time till 1324 when the Plaintiff was dispossessed, the Plaintiffs' father and then the Plaintiffs were in possession adversely to the Defendants. What rights Rooke had after his purchase as against Khelaram and the Plaintiffs' father as puisne mortgagees is a question which has hardly any bearing on the question of possession.

Minor—Contract for sale by guardian to pay off debts, if specifically enforceable—Contract, if enforceable against adult parties in respect of their interest.

Although a sale by a guardian of a minor of the latter's property to pay off the debts of his father is binding on the minor, a contract for such a sale stands on a different footing; and a contract by the guardian to sell the minor's property for the payment of his father's debts is not specifically enforceable.

MIR SARWAR JAN v. FAKHRUDDIN MOHAMED CHOUDHURY (1) referred to.

The contract may be enforced with variation in respect of the shares of the adult co-executants, though it fails in respect of the share of the minor.

This was an appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge of Zillah 24-Perganas (Mr. S. K. Ghosh), dated the 9th June 1923, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that District (Babu Kunja Behary Biswas), dated the 18th August 1921.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendants against a decision of the second Additional District Judge of 24-Perganas reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge. The suit out of which this appeal arises was a suit by the Plaintiff to enforce specific performance of an agreement for sale of certain premises, dated the 10th December 1919 . . . whereby certain persons agreed to sell premises No. 18, Haldarbagān Lane, as therein mentioned to the Plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 5,000. The contract was entered into by Srinath Bhattacharya, Krishna Lal Bhattacharya, Makham Lal Bhattacharya, Ananta Lal Bhattacharya, Narain Chandra Bhattacharya and Balai Chandra Bhattacharya, a minor, by his guardian Sreemutty Bhajahari Devi who was Balai's mother. The contract was executed by all the parties other than Narain and it was duly registered. Subsequently, an unregistered document was entered into by Makham Lal, dated the 26th of December 1919 whereby he purported to convey his interest in the property to the Plaintiff. The document in form is a conveyance and in the document there is an undertaking to execute a conveyance on proper stamp paper and to get the title-deed registered within certain time. Then there is a further unregistered document, dated the 28th of December 1919, executed by Narain, Ananta and Balai by his guardian whereby they purported to convey their interest to the Plaintiff. Here again the document in form is a conveyance of sale and contains a covenant to execute the sale-deed on proper stamp paper and to get it registered. The first Court dismissed the suit for specific performance finding that the Plaintiff was guilty of fraud, misconduct and dishonesty as he wanted to take undue advantage over the Defendants who were all illiterate or half literate. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the finding of the first Court and has decreed specific performance in favour of the Plaintiff of the whole property.

Three points have been urged before us on behalf of the Appellants against the decree of the Additional District Judge. First, it is stated that one of the Defendants, namely, Balai was a minor and that the guardian could not bind Balai and that there could be no decree for specific performance against him. Secondly, it is stated that Defendant No. 4 Narain was not bound as he did not sign Ex. 1 and that Ex. 3 being a conveyance of a property worth more than Rs. 100 is not admissible in evidence as it is not registered. Thirdly, it is urged that the contract is one and indivisible and that inasmuch as the share of Balai is not bound and that of Defendant No. 4 also, there could be no decree for specific performance.

So far as the first point is concerned, we think that the point is a good one. There is no doubt that the learned Judge has found in this case that the property was sold for the debts of the father of the minor and there is no doubt that there are decisions of this Court whereby a conveyance, executed by the guardian of a minor in respect of the debts of his father, has been held to be binding on the minor; but a conveyance stands in a different position from a contract for sale. In a conveyance the whole matter is complete and there is no doubt that a minor would be bound by a conveyance of property executed by his guardian to pay off his father's debts and that he could not get it set aside merely on the ground of his minority. But different considerations apply with regard to a contract for sale where the transaction is not complete. In cases of this nature there may be a change in the value of the property; and after all, the remedy of specific performance is a discretionary remedy and the Court may well say that having regard to possible fluctuations in value specific performance should never be decreed against a minor. There are decisions in this Court in which specific performance under similar circumstances has apparently been decreed. But those decisions were before the decision of the case of Mir Sarwar Jan v. Fakhruddin Mohomed Choudhury (1), where their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down that it was not within the competence of the guardian of a minor to bind the minor or minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property. In the case of Mir Sarwar Jan v. Fakhruddin Mohomed Choudhury (1), the suit was one for specific performance by a minor of an agreement for the purchase and sale to him of certain immoveable property entered into by the manager of the minor's estate and his guardian on his behalf . . . and as I have already stated their Lordships held that there should be no decree for specific performance of the contract because they stated that there was no mutuality. We were asked to distinguish this case on the ground that it deals with an agreement for the purchase of an immoveable property by a minor and it is stated that the same considerations which apply to a purchase do not apply to a case of this nature where it is sought to enforce an agreement for sale entered into by a minor of his property by his guardian for the purpose of, I assume, payment of his father's debts for which he is liable. We cannot see, however, that there is any such distinction to be found from the perusal of the judgment to which I have referred. The ruling, it seems to us, lays down the law in unequivocal terms and is binding on us. We think therefore that having regard to this decision the first point must prevail and that there could be no specific performance of the contract so far as Defendant No. 6 is concerned.

So far as the second point is concerned, namely, that Defendant No. 4 Narain is not bound we are not prepared to say that this contention is well-founded. Ex. 3 seems to us to be really in the nature of an agreement to sell though in form it is undoubtedly a conveyance. But having regard to the expression therein to which I have already referred, namely, the undertaking to execute a subsequent conveyance we think that it was intended by the parties that it should be treated merely as a contract. The result is that we think that Narain was bound by the agreement of the 10th December 1919.

So far as the third point is concerned, there does not seem to be anything in this. It is difficult to say that because Balai may not be bound the other parties to the contract should not be bound. The Plaintiff states that he is willing to purchase the shares of the parties in the property other than the share of Balai who is not bound by the contract. Accordingly, there will be this variation in the decree of the lower Appellate Court, namely, that we declare that the share of

Balai is not bound by the contract of the 10th December 1919 but subject to this the decree of the lower Appellate Court will stand and there will be a decree for specific performance against the Defendants other than Defendant No. 6 in respect of their shares and interests in the property in suit.

We make no order as to costs. The property of the minor will not be bound by any decree for costs that has been passed against him.

MUKERJI, J.—I agree.

HOWESON BROTHERS,

Respondents.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 130—Surety for Receiver appointed by Court—Continuing guarantee, if can be discharged by notice—Consent of Court necessary.

Notwithstanding sec. 130 of the Contract Act, it is not competent for a surety to a Receiver appointed by Court, who has been accepted by Court as such, without the consent of the Court to discharge himself from liability for future transactions by merely giving notice to the decree-holder or other person at whose instance or for whose benefit the Receiver was appointed.

RAJNARAYAN MUKERJI v. PHULKUMARI DAS (1) considered in the judgments of the High Court which were affirmed by the Judicial Committee.

(1) I. L. R. 29 Cal. 68 (1902).

This was an appeal (No. 150 of 1924) from an order of the High Court at Bengal, dated the 8th May 1923, which affirmed an order of the said Court, dated the 2nd January 1923, in its Original Jurisdiction.

The said order was made against the Appellant as surety for the payment by him of a sum of Rs. 32,806 found due from the principal debtor, and which the latter had failed to discharge.

The facts which were not in dispute were shortly as follows:—

The Respondents obtained a preliminary mortgage decree against the Harveys on the 29th July 1920.

Under that decree W. S. G. Harvey was appointed Receiver of the mortgaged premises and the Appellant was accepted as his surety and executed a bond in the usual form. On the 22nd July 1921, the Appellant applied to be released from his bond but no order was made on the application.

On the 6th August 1921 the Appellant wrote to the Respondents informing them that he wished to be released from his suretyship. The letter continued—

“ My client accordingly does not desire to continue to guarantee the acts of Mr. Harvey in whom he can therefore place no confidence and desires to be released from further acting; but, of course, will hold himself under the bond already executed for all acts and omissions of the said Mr. Harvey till such date as my client may be released from further acting by order of the Court which my client will now seek to obtain”

On the 12th December Harvey was removed from his appointment as Receiver. An enquiry was held and a report made showing the sum of Rs. 32,806 due from Harvey and an order was made on the 15th July 1922 for the payment of that amount within a week. Harvey defaulted and the present application was made on the 4th December 1922 under sec. 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for execution against the Appellant as surety.

The application was opposed on various grounds, of which the most material was—That the Appellant had on the 22nd July 1921 given notice to the Respondents and to the Court within the meaning of sec. 130 of the Contract Act and had thus revoked his liability as guarantor.

This contention was negatived by the trial Judge (GREAVES, J.) who made the order asked for by the Respondent Company.

In his judgment the learned Judge held that the passage in the judgment of Banerji, J., in Rajnarayan Mukerji v. Phulkumari Dasi (1) was obiter dictum and that the provisions of sec. 130 of the Contract Act had no application to a continuing guarantee given on behalf of a Receiver as in the case before him.

An appeal from this order was heard by a Division Bench of the High Court consisting of MOOKERJEE and RANKIN, JJ., who dismissed the appeal with costs.

In their judgment they stated as follows :—

“ On behalf of the surety, reliance was placed upon sec. 130 of the Indian Contract Act, and the decision in Rajnarayan Mukerji v. Phulkumari Dasi (1). This decision was doubted by the Madras High Court in Subroya Chetty v. Ragammall (2), which was accepted by the Allahabad High Court as a correct exposition of the law in Kandhya Lal v. Manki (3). We are of opinion that the view taken by Mr. Justice Greaves is correct. In Rajnarayan v. Phulkumari (1), it was ruled that

sec. 130 of the Indian Contract Act enabled a person who had become surety in an administration proceeding to discharge himself by suitable notice. The judgment of Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., was cautiously phrased and does not support a more extended rule, although the language used by Mr. Justice Banerji seems to go further. We are of opinion that notwithstanding sec. 130, which holds that a continuing guarantee may at any time be revoked by the surety as to future transactions by notice to the creditor, it is not competent to the surety for a Receiver, who has been appointed an officer of the Court, to discharge himself merely by notice to the decree-holder, or other person at whose instance or for whose benefit the Receiver was appointed; O'keefe v. Armstrong (4). A person does not become a surety till he has been accepted as such by the Court and we cannot hold on principle that he can discharge himself without the consent of the Court. Disastrous consequences may, indeed, result to the estate in charge of the Receiver, if the surety be held competent to relieve himself from the moment he has given notice to the person interested. It is worthy of remark that this extreme position was not at first taken up by the surety in the case before us; as already stated, he realised at quite an early stage of the proceedings that he could secure his discharge only with the consent of the Court. We need not in this view examine the decision in Subroya v. Ragammall (2), which is in harmony with Bai Somi v. Chokshi (5) and Kandhya Lal v. Manki (3) and is supported by the analogy of Re Stark (6), Calvert

v. Gordon (7) and Lloyd's v. Harper (8). The case last mentioned does not assist the contention of the Appellant that he was discharged from liability the moment he served notice upon the decree-holder. It may be conceded that a continuing guarantee, not under seal, for future advances or supplies, in consideration of the granting of such advances or supplies, does not become binding until the person to whom it is given acts upon it, and may consequently be revoked before it is acted upon; further, even if it has been acted upon, it may, if it contain no stipulation to the contrary, be revoked as to further transactions; Offord v. Davies (9), Coulthurt v. Clemenson (10) and Beckett v. Addyman (11). The question, however, remains whether when a surety has been accepted as such by the Court, he can free himself from liability without the consent of the Court. We are of opinion that the answer must be in the negative.

The result is that the order made by Mr. Justice Greaves, which is obviously right on the merits, is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs."

NEELAKANTA-

GIKJI, Appellant,

v.

ANNAVAJJHALA

VENKATACHAL-

LAM, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 66, 71, 86—Court sale—Sale proclamation containing particulars showing existence of an incumbrance and referring to documents creating same—Purchaser, if has notice of contents of documents—Liability for loss on resale.

A purchaser at a Court sale must be taken to have known the effect of documents bearing on the properties to be sold and mentioned in the sale proclamation as constituting some sort of a charge on the properties whether he actually examined the documents or not. Such a purchaser, should he default in paying the purchase price, makes himself responsible for the loss caused on resale to the decree-holder when such resale has taken place in pursuance of a sale proclamation substantially containing the same particulars.

This was an appeal (No. 4 of 1919), from a decree of the High Court at Madras, dated the 26th October 1917, which reversed an order of the District Court of Nellore, dated the 31st January 1916, dismissing a petition in execution preferred by the present Respondent.

The present Appellant against whom the said petition was directed was the successful bidder at a Court sale held in the District Court on the 25th August 1914.

He made the preliminary deposit of a quarter of the purchase money but made default in paying the balance. A resale accordingly became necessary which took place in February 1915 when the property was knocked down for a much smaller sum.

The present Respondent was the holder of the decree, in execution of which the said sales took place, and, his decree not having been satisfied, he preferred the above petition under Or. 21, r. 71 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for recovery of the balance. The District Judge dismissed the application holding that in the circumstances of the case the Petitioner was not entitled under r. 71 or r. 86 to claim the deficit from the Respondent or to claim a right to the deposit paid into Court by the defaulting purchaser.

On appeal to the High Court the Judges differed and an appeal was preferred under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent, which was decided in favour of the Respondent.

The present appeal to the Privy Council was originally heard on the 24th June 1920 by LORDS BUCKMASTER and ATKINSON, SIR J. EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI and stood over pending an appeal against a judgment obtained by the purchaser enforcing his equity of redemption acquired at the second sale.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Mr. H. N. Sen for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 26th October 1917, of the High Court at Madras which reversed an order, dated the 31st January 1916, of the District Judge of Nellore, dismissing a petition which had been made by the Respondent. In order to understand what was the decree of the High Court against which this appeal has been brought, it will be necessary to refer as briefly as possible to the position of the parties to the appeal and to the circumstances under which the decree of the High Court was made. The present Appellant and the present Respondent will hereinafter be referred to respectively as the Appellant and the Respondent.

The Respondent having obtained a money decree against the Zamindar of Kalahasti for a large sum of money in execution of his decree, brought to sale on the 25th August 1914, the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor in certain villages of Pamoor Taluq, in the District of Nellore. Those villages had been, on the 4th August 1908, conveyed by the Zamindar for six lakhs of rupees to a person at Hyderabad, who by an agreement in writing of the same date had agreed with the Zamindar to reconvey the villages to him if the sum of six lakhs of rupees was repaid by the 31st August 1914. That transaction constituted a mortgage by conditional sale. The property mortgaged was attached by an order of the Court, executing the decree, and the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor were by that Court ordered to be sold in execution of that decree. The Court, in compliance with r. 66 of Or. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, caused a proclamation of the intended sale to be duly made. In the proclamation the judgment-debtor's rights and interests in the villages were stated as—cuted and given to the Defendant by Raja Bahadur Narasingirji Gyanagirji, residing at Hyderabad, and all the other rights and interests possessed by the Defendant, in these villages."

"The right of obtaining a reconveyance under the reconveyance agreement, dated 4th August 1908, exe.

The deed of sale and the agreement to reconvey of the 4th August 1908 were also mentioned in the proclamation. The agreement to reconvey was No. 3 in the list of documents affecting the property to be sold, and in the column of Remarks it was stated that, "Under deed No. 3 the Defendant has right to have a reconveyance of the said property." The proclamation gave other particulars, and in their Lordships' opinion complied with r. 66 of Or. 21.

The auction sale was held on the 25th August 1914, and the Appellant was declared to be the purchaser; his bid was Rs. 6,90,000, and he, after he had been declared the purchaser, duly paid to the officer conducting the sale, Rs. 1,72,500 as the deposit required by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, being twenty-five per centum of the purchase money. He, however, made default in payment within the prescribed period of the balance of the purchase money. The Court declined to grant to him an extension of time to pay the balance, and when the prescribed period for payment of the balance had expired, the Court executing the decree ordered the property to be resold. That Court ordered that the deposit should not be forfeited to the Government, and it, less poundage and other charges, remained in Court.

The Appellant had, by the proclamation, notice of the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor which were to be sold, and he, or any competent lawyer whom he chose to advise him, could have examined the sale deed and agreement to reconvey of 4th August 1908, and he must be taken to have known the effect of those documents or to have intentionally or negligently omitted to examine them. Doubtless he examined those documents, but whether he did or not is immaterial as he had, by the proclamation, notice of them.

The property was, after the prescribed period, resold by public auction on or about the 22nd February 1915, after a proclamation that it would be sold had been duly made. In the proclamation for the resale the particulars of the property to be sold were correctly stated, the deed of sale and the agreement to reconvey of the 4th August 1908 were mentioned as Documents 2 and 3, with the following comments as to them :—

"Sale deed executed by the Defendant in favour of Raja Bahadur Narasingirji Gyanagirji for Rs. 6,00,000.

"Counter reconveyance agreement executed in favour of this Defendant by the aforesaid Raja Bahadur Narasingirji Gyanagirji. (This Defendant has the right to get possession on a fresh sale deed being executed, of all these villages, on repayment of six lakhs of rupees within the end of August 1914, in accordance with the two documents aforesaid.)

"(1) When in accordance with the conditions of documents Nos. 2 and 3, the Defendant endeavoured to tender six lakhs of rupees within the date fixed therein, Raja Bahadur Narasingirji Gyanagirji Garu evaded the tender with a fraudulent intent and went away; for this reason, as well as for the reason that the transaction contained in those documents amounts to a mortgage from their nature, the said Narasingirji Gyanagirji Garu has the right to recover only the said six lakhs of rupees, and he has no other right in the villages of this Pamoor Taluk. Therefore this property has to be sold subject to the said right as per the said documents."

The proclamation for the resale contained other particulars, and in their Lordships' opinion complied with the orders of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. At the resale the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor in the property were sold for Rs. 1,01,000 to one Janakiramayya, who was an agent of the decree-holder.

In November 1914, the Appellant applied to the Court which had executed the decree to order a refund to him of the deposit which had been made by him on the 25th August 1914. On the 24th April 1915, the Respondent, alleging that on the resale a deficiency of Rs. 5,89,000 had occurred for which the Appellant was liable, applied by petition to the Court which had executed the decree that it should "issue orders for recovery and payment of about Rs. 1,25,000, the amount due to him as the decree-holder in this execution sale, and also the costs of the petition, by attaching the said deposit amount of about Rs. 1,60,000." After deducting poundage and other charges, the balance of the deposit in Court appears to have been about Rs. 1,60,000. The application was clearly confined to the deposit and did not apply to the general deficiency which was the result of the resale. To that petition the Appellant replied by a counter-petition on the 12th July 1915, in which he denied that he was liable for the deficiency in price realised at the sale (resale) of the properties which was held on the 22nd February 1915, and stated that he "had filed two petitions and an affidavit showing cause against the forfeiture of the deposit made by him on the 25th August 1914, and claiming refund of the amount so deposited."

On the 31st January 1916, the application of the Respondent of the 24th April 1915 was considered by the District Judge of Nellore, and he, holding that "the descriptions in the two proclamations are materially and substantially different, and the character of the property as it stood and as it was described in the first proclamation was literally and juridically different from its character as described in the second proclamation," made an order that the Respondent was not entitled to the amount deposited in the Court and dismissed the application. From that order the Respondent appealed to the High Court, and his agent filed an affidavit in the High Court in which he stated :—

"2. In the circumstances of the case, it is absolutely necessary in the interests of justice and to safeguard the interests of the Appellant that this Honourable Court should direct that the sum now in deposit in the District Court of Nellore or such part thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the balance still due to this Appellant under his decree, be retained in Court till the disposal of this appeal or be allowed to be drawn out by the Respondent on proper security."

The appeal to the High Court came for hearing before two Judges of the Court who differed, with the result that the appeal was dismissed. From that dismissal the Respondent appealed under the Letters Patent, and his appeal was heard by the Chief Justice and two other Judges, with the result that the appeal was allowed, and the High Court, on the 26th October 1917, made the decree which is now appealed from to His Majesty in Council. By that decree of the 26th October 1917, the appeal was allowed with certain costs, and the District Judge of Nellore was ordered to restore the petition of the 24th April 1915 to its original number in the Register and to dispose of it according to law with regard to the deposit which had been paid by the Appellant. In their Lordships' opinion that was the right decree to make.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1679 of 1923.

GREAVES, J.

PANTON, J.

1925,

24, November.

AJINTULLA SAHA,

Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

JADAVNATH CHAKRA-

BUTTY and ors, Defendants, Respondents.

Pre-emption - Sale by Mahomedan to Hindu - Mahomedan co-owner of vendor, if can exercise right of pre-emption.

Where no local custom exists with regard to pre-emption amongst Hindus the Mahomedan law of pre-emption does not apply when the person claiming the right of pre-emption and the vendor are Mahomedans and the purchaser is a Hindu.

FURMAN KHAN v. BHURUT CHUNDER (1) followed.

Sec. 9 of Reg. VII of 1832 has been repealed by Act VI of 1871, sec. 24 of which has been substituted for it, but the change effected does not make the decision of the Full Bench in FURMAN KHAN v. BHURUT CHUNDER (1) inapplicable.

This was an appeal preferred on the 15th of June 1923, against the decree of Babu Beharilal Sarkar, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dinajpur, dated the 16th March 1923, affirming the decree of Babu Upendra Lal Das Gupta, the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 1st of March 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury (for Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarty) for the Appellant.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose and Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta for the Respondents.

GREAVES, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff against a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur confirming a decision of the Munsif of the first Court of that place. The question that arises in the appeal is whether in the case of a sale by a Mahomedan co-sharer of his share to a Hindu the right of pre-emption attaches thereto so that a Mahomedan co-sharer of the vendor can exercise that right as against a Hindu purchaser. The learned Officiating Subordinate Judge has dismissed the appeal agreeing with the decision of the Munsif and considering that the matter was covered by a Full Bench decision of this Court to which I shall presently refer.

The appeal has been argued before us on behalf of the Appellant on the basis that the grounds on which the Full Bench decision, Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1), was based are no longer binding and that the matter is really open. Now, exactly the same question that now arises for our decision arose in that Full Bench case in which three references on the same point were before the Court in the case of Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1). The Court held by a majority of 3 to 2 that where no local custom exists with regard to pre-emption amongst Hindus, the Mahomedan law of pre-emption does not apply when the person claiming the right of pre-emption and the vendor are Mahomedans and the purchaser is a Hindu. The principal judgment on behalf of the majority was delivered by Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter and his judgment was really based on the provision of sec. 9 to Reg. VII of 1832. The section is set out at page 22 of the report and it is not necessary for me to set out the exact words of the section. The last words in the section, however, provide that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience are to prevail in the cases with which the section deals and Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter considered at some length whether the demand of justice, equity and good conscience made it necessary in a case of that nature to apply the principles of pre-emption as existing under Mahomedan law and he comes to a conclusion opposite to that, that is to say, he finds that there were no principles of justice, equity and good conscience which compelled him to hold in the case before him that the Mahomedan co-owner is entitled on purchase of a share by a Hindu from another Mahomedan co-owner to exercise the right of pre-emption. But it was urged before us that that decision must be taken as shaken by a subsequent decision by the Allahabad Full Bench in Govind Dayal v. Inayatullah (2) and it is further suggested that sec. 9 of Reg. VII of 1832 on which Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter relies has been repealed. That is true, for it is repealed by Act VI of 1871 (Civil Courts Act) and there is substituted for that section sec. 24 of that Act. This section provides that where in a suit or proceeding it is necessary for any Court under the Act to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or any religious usage or institution, the Mahomedan law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans and the Hindu law where the parties are Hindus shall form the rule of decision except in so far as such law has by legislative enactment been altered or abolished. Then the section concludes that in cases not provided for by the former part of the section or by any other law for the time being in force the Court shall act according to justice, equity and good conscience. It seems to me that there is not very much difference in the two sections except that there is omitted from the second section the actual provision that relates to cases where parties are of different religious persuasions, in which cases sec. 9 provides that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience are to prevail. But I do not think that in substance there is any real difference. The first part of sec. 24 deals with cases between Mahomedans inter se or Hindus inter se and it does not deal with cases where one party is a Mahomedan and the other Hindu and vice versa. In those cases, as under the provisions of sec. 9, clearly the principles of justice, equity and good conscience are to prevail and, as I have already indicated, Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter points out in the judgment in Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1) that there was no obligation to apply that doctrine in a case of pre-emption where one party is a Mahomedan and the other a Hindu; nor do I think it possible to say that there has been any alteration effected by sec. 37, Act XII of 1887 (Civil Courts Act). The words in that Act are practically identical with the words of sec. 24 of Act VI of 1871.

The result, therefore, is that I do not think that it is possible to say that Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1) is no longer binding on us by reason of subsequent legislation having affected the provisions of sec. 9 of Reg. VII of 1832. The result, therefore, is that we are bound by the decision in Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1) unless we think that that decision is wrong and refer it to another Full Bench for decision. The result is, I think, that the matter is concluded so far as we are concerned by the decision in Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1). I should add one word with regard to a decision with which we were pressed in the case of Sitaram Bhaurao Deshmukh v. Jiaul Hasan Sirajul Khan (3). The learned vakil who appeared for the Appellant referred us to various observations in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in that case in support of his contention in this appeal, but I do not think that that case can be taken in any way as governing the appeal which is now before us. There, there had been an express agreement in the sale by a Mahomedan co-sharer to a Hindu that the property should be offered to the co-sharer and it was so offered and as is stated in the judgment the parties there had agreed, although one was a Hindu, that the principles of pre-emption should be imported into their transaction. It was not necessary, therefore, for their Lordships to decide whether apart from the terms of the particular agreement which was before them the doctrine of pre-emption must be applied in cases like the present where the purchaser is a Hindu and the vendor a Mahomedan. Consequently, I do not think that that case has any bearing on the question which we have now to decide. As I have already indicated so far as this Bench is concerned, the matter is concluded by the decision in Furman Khan v. Bhurut Chunder (1). I am not prepared to say that I disagree with that decision or to refer the matter to another Full Bench for another decision on the question.

(1) 4 B. L. R. 134 (F. B.), 13 W. R. F. B. 21 (1869).

The result, therefore, is that for the reasons which I have indicated the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), sec. 2 (e) — "Premises," if includes fans, lights, &c.—Intention of parties and nature of agreement are the determining factors—Sec. 15—Standardization of rent.

It depends on the intention of the parties and on the nature of the agreement to be gathered from the same whether such things as fans and lights are intended to go with and to form part of the premises or building demised :

Held in the circumstances of the case—That the fans and lights which were attached to the part of the building demised and which were intended to be used with it must be taken, according to the intention of the parties, to be part of the demised building for the purposes of the Rent Act and that it was open to the Rent Controller to fix a standard rent which comprised these.

This was a Rule granted on the 24th April 1925 against the order of the President of the Tribunal (Mr. S. C. Banerjee), dated the 26th February 1925.

D. D. BARBER v. W. C. DEBENHAM.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (Advocate), Babus Satindra Nath Mukerjee and Hira Lal Ganguly for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—By an agreement in writing contained in two letters, dated respectively the 29th and 31st August 1923, the first of which was addressed by the Petitioner to the Respondent Debenham and the second by Debenham to the Petitioner, the Respondent Debenham agreed to let and the Petitioner agreed to take for a period of 21 months from the 1st September 1923, with an option of renewal as therein mentioned, the lower flat of No. 4, Rawdon Street, comprising the following accommodation, sitting room with one electric fan and lights, three bed rooms with bath rooms, each bed room with one electric fan and lights, also lights in the bath room, south verandah with space under stairs with electric lights and other accommodation as therein mentioned at a rental of Rs. 320 per month inclusive of taxes and without any other extra charge but excluding the cost of electric current. An application was subsequently made to the Rent Controller by the Petitioner to fix the standard rent of the premises and the Rent Controller on the 20th August 1924 fixed the standard rent at Rs. 232 per month holding that the fans, electric lights and fittings formed part of the premises.

An appeal was preferred against this order to the President of the Tribunal who held that a standard rent under the Rent Act could not be made to cover fans, lights or any other thing not forming part of a building or hut.

He arrived at the same figure as the Rent Controller for the standard rent of the premises exclusive of fans, lights, etc.

The decision of the President was based on the definition of premises in sec. 2 (e) of the Calcutta Rent Act and he held that the word premises could not cover fans and lights, etc., as they did not form part of the building.

Against the order of the President of the Tribunal the present Rule was obtained on the 24th April 1925. Premises in sec. 2 (e) of the Calcutta Rent Act are defined as meaning any building or hut let separately for residential, charitable, educational or public purposes or for the purposes of a shop or an office and by sec. 15 of the Act the Rent Controller is empowered to certify the standard rent of any premises.

In Sewell v. Angerstein (1), Willes, J., held that gaseliers formed part of the freehold. The finding was arrived at in the case of a lease which was conveyed or assigned by the Defendant to the Plaintiff and included in the conveyance or assignment were the fixtures which were held to include the gaseliers attached by screws to the gas pipes.

In Smith v. Macbull (2), Pearson, J., held that gas fittings, gaseliers and a table lamp screwed to a pipe were fixtures and this expression included whatever articles were substantially part of the house so that they could not be removed without depriving the building of that which was intended to be used with it.

I cite these authorities not as authorities for showing what are or are not fixtures, as what are deemed fixtures in England may not be fixtures according to Indian law and vice versa, but as showing that it depends on the intention of the parties and on the nature of the agreement to be gathered from the same whether such things as fans and lights are intended to go with and to form part of the premises or building demised.

(2) 32 W. R. 459.

I think that in the present case the fans and lights which were attached to the part of the building demised and which were intended to be used with it must be taken according to the intention of the parties to be part of the demised building for the purposes of the Rent Act and that it was open to the Rent Controller to fix a standard rent which comprised these.

The cases of Wells v. Dickenson (3) to which we were referred has in my opinion no bearing on the present case. In that case a furnished flat was demised and it was held that although the Rent Controller had jurisdiction under the Act to fix a rent for the premises apart from the furniture he had no jurisdiction to fix a standard rent which included the furniture.

That case is distinguishable as clearly the furniture could by no stretch of imagination have been intended to form part of the building for the purposes of the letting, whereas in the present case the fans and lights which were attached to the building formed part of the building for the purpose of the demise according to the true intention of the parties as indicated in the agreement. I would make the Rule absolute with costs 5 gold mohurs.

The matter will now go back to the President of the Tribunal in order that he may consider what is the standard rent of the premises including the fans and lights.

B. B. GHOSE, J.—I agree.

MACKAY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 476—Chief Presidency Magistrate making complaint against a witness before himself—Transfer of case to Third Presidency Magistrate—Enquiry and commitment to High Court Sessions by latter—Objection to trial overruled—Letters Patent, cl. 26, review under Advocate-General's fiat—Validity of proceedings before Magistrate and of commitment, how may be questioned—"Complaint," "taking cognizance," meaning of—Proper tribunal for questioning legality of commitment—"High Court," meaning of, in sec. 215—Secs. 4 (b), 18 (4), 190, 195, 215, 487 (2), 529, 537—Sec. 537, if applicable under cl. 26, Letters Patent.

Where the Chief Presidency Magistrate made a complaint to himself under sec. 476 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code and then transferred the same to the Third Presidency Magistrate for disposal, and the latter after having enquired into the case committed the accused to the High Court Sessions for trial:

Held per CURIAM (RANKIN and CHAKRAVARTI, JJ., dissentiente)—That the procedure followed was substantially correct.

Per WALMSLEY, J.—The Chief Presidency Magistrate in taking cognizance of a complaint made by himself and sending it to the Third Presidency Magistrate made a mistake, but a technical one only, not going to the root of the case.

Per CUMING and B. B. GHOSE, JJ.—There was nothing in the Code to prevent the Chief Presidency Magistrate from taking cognizance of his own complaint. Taking cognizance of a complaint is not a judicial act.

Semble, per WALMSLEY, CUMING and B. B. GHOSE, JJ.—The legality of the commitment was not open to question before the Court of Sessions. The remedy of the accused was to move the High Court in its Revisional Jurisdiction.

Per RANKIN and CHAKRAVARTI, JJ.—In making a complaint to himself the Chief Presidency Magistrate adopted a course unknown to the law. Further, he either took cognizance of the complaint under sec. 190 contrary to the prohibitions of secs. 195 and 476, Cr. P. C., or laid a complaint before a Magistrate who not being a first class Magistrate had no power to take cognizance of it under sec. 476. The proceedings having been commenced and continued in defiance of the express provisions of the Code and of fundamental principles of law, there was not merely an irregularity but a breach of the public order.

Sec. 537 of the Code is applicable under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, but there was no question of error, omission or irregularity in the complaint in the present case, for the proceedings were illegal from beginning to end.

The facts of the case will appear from the certificate of the Advocate-General under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865, which was as follows :—

“ 1. Whereas the accused above-named was tried by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose and a special jury at the fourth Criminal Sessions of this Hon'ble Court on the 28th and 29th of July and 3rd August 1925 for offences under secs. 193 and 195 of the Indian Penal Code alleged to have been committed in the Court of

Mr. T. Roxburgh, the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, in the course of the trial in the case of Emperor v. Collin Campbell Rogers and others being case No. 392 of 1925 and was found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the jury and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

2. And whereas it has been represented to me that the accused above-named was a witness for the prosecution in the said case of Emperor v. Collin Campbell Rogers and others being case No. 392 of 1925, before the said Mr. T. Roxburgh, the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, and gave his evidence on oath on the 30th April 1925.

3. Whereas it has been further represented to me that on the 10th of June 1925 the said Mr. Roxburgh being of opinion that it was expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into offences under secs. 193 and 195 of the Indian Penal Code which appeared to him to have been committed by the said Colin Mackay in the said proceedings in his Court and whereas the said Mr. Roxburgh held that no preliminary enquiry was necessary and whereas he further held that it was necessary for him under sec. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to make a complaint in writing and forward the same to himself as the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta.

4. Whereas it has been further represented to me that the said Mr. Roxburgh on the 10th of June 1925 made a complaint in writing signed by himself and forwarded the same to himself as the Chief Presidency Magistrate and immediately thereafter, on the same day, transferred the said complaint under sec. 193, Cr. P. C. to Mr. A. Z. Khan, the Third Presidency Magistrate, for disposal and himself issued summons against the accused under secs. 193 and 195, I. P. C.

5. Whereas it has been further represented to me that the said Third Presidency Magistrate enquired into the said case and committed the accused for trial to the fourth Criminal Sessions of the High Court on charges under secs. 193 and 195 of the Indian Penal Code.

6. Whereas it has been further represented to me that a plea in demurrer was taken on behalf of the accused before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose, before the plea of the accused was taken and before the jury was empanelled on the grounds that the commitment was illegal, inasmuch as the said Chief Presidency Magistrate was incompetent to make a complaint to himself under sec. 476, Cr. P. C. and take cognisance of the said case and that the said Third Presidency Magistrate was in consequence incompetent to make the enquiry or to commit the accused for trial before the said Criminal Sessions which he purported to do.

7. Whereas it has been further represented to me that the learned Judge presiding at the said fourth Criminal Sessions overruled the said plea and allowed the trial to proceed with the result as hereinbefore stated.

8. Whereas the facts hereinbefore set out have been certified to me by learned Counsel for the accused, as appears from the certificate hereunder written, and whereas learned Counsel who conducted the said prosecution at the said Sessions has agreed that the said facts have been correctly recited.

Now I, Brojendra Lal Mitter, Advocate-General of Bengal, do, under and by virtue of the powers entrusted to me by the Letters Patent for the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal bearing date the 28th of December 1865, certify that in my judgment the questions whether under sec. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Chief Presidency Magistrate was competent to make a complaint to himself or take cognisance of the said case and transfer the same and whether the said Third Presidency Magistrate was competent, under the law, to commit the accused for trial to the Sessions, should be further considered by the said High Court.

1st December 1925.

I, the undersigned, defended the above accused at his trial by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose at the fourth Criminal Sessions of the High Court on the 28th and 29th July and 3rd August 1925 and was present at his trial throughout and I certify that the facts hereinbefore set out have been correctly stated.

(Sd.) A. K. Basu."

The above matter came up before the Full Bench as constituted on the certificate of the Advocate-General.

Mr. A. K. Basu on behalf of the accused argued that the sec. 190 lays down the general provisions for the initiation of criminal proceedings. The special provision for cases like the present is, in sec. 195, namely, a complaint in writing. But the Chief Presidency Magistrate forwarding a complaint to himself really means taking cognisance on his own knowledge as provided in sec. 190 (c). The intention of sec. 476 is the Court taking cognisance would have to be an independent Court and not the Court that had already formed an opinion in the matter after hearing evidence. There is no complaint as contemplated by sec. 195 and the proceedings are ab initio void. [Cited Barindra v. Emperor (8)].

(8) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 487; s. c. 14 O. W. N. 1114 (1910).

Mr. Khan is not a Chief Presidency Magistrate and he cannot assume jurisdiction on a transfer of a case where there is no complaint.

Mr. R. Roy on behalf of the Crown submitted that sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code was complied with. Mr. Roxburgh, who tried the case, thought that one of the witnesses committed perjury and further enquiry was necessary. He made the complaint and forwarded that to himself in his capacity as the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Under the Code, so long as the Chief Presidency Magistrate forwarded it to a first class Magistrate, the law would be complied with. The crux of the whole thing lies in the word "forward" in sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If it is an irregularity it can be cured by secs. 532 and 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If it is an illegality, the accused must be set at liberty at once.

Mr. A. K. Basu in reply submitted that sec. 537 has no application here. The Bench was constituted under the Letters Patent, it is not an Appellate or a Revisional Court under the Criminal Procedure Code.

Also Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose presiding on an Original Criminal Court could not cure the irregularity under sec. 537.

The absence of complaint goes to the root of the matter and is an illegality not curable under sec. 537.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Petitioner gave evidence in a case tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Part of his evidence was regarded as false and the learned Magistrate deemed it necessary to take proceedings under sec. 476, Cr. P. C. He accordingly drew up a complaint. This complaint he preferred in his own Court and then he transferred it to Mr. Khan, Presidency Magistrate, for disposal. The latter issued process, held an enquiry and committed the Petitioner for trial. Objection was taken at the trial that the commitment was illegal, but the presiding Judge, Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose, overruled the objection. The Petitioner was then tried and convicted. The learned Advocate-General under the provisions of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent has granted a fiat certifying that in his judgment the questions whether under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., the Chief Presidency Magistrate was competent to make a complaint to himself or take cognizance of the said case and transfer the same and whether the Third Presidency Magistrate (that is, Mr. Khan) was competent, under the law, to commit the accused for trial to the Sessions, should be further considered by the High Court.

It is worth noting at the outset that one piece of information given to the learned Advocate-General was incorrect; process was issued by Mr. Khan and not by the Chief Presidency Magistrate himself.

The contention on behalf of the Petitioner is that the Chief Presidency Magistrate's proceduro was illegal, and that the commitment and the conviction must necessarily be bad.

As Presidency Magistrates are not Magistrates of the first class under the provisions of sec. 6 of the Code, the wording of sec. 476, Cr. P. C., would present difficulty in a case where the false evidence is given before the Chief Presidency Magistrate himself, if there were only one Chief Presidency Magistrate, but at the time there was an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, and apparently the complaint might have been forwarded to him. That is what I think the learned Magistrate should have done. He did not do so, however, and we have to consider whether the course adopted was such as to vitiate subsequent proceedings.

It is said that there was no complaint, because a person cannot complain to himself. Ordinarily a complaint implies at least three persons, a person complaining, a person against whom the complaint is made and a third person to whom the complaint is addressed. In the Code the word is defined thus: "A complaint means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code that some person has committed an offence." The same implication is contained in this definition, but it is a narrow view to hold that there was no complaint because the Magistrate preferred it in his own Court. It is more important to consider what he did after preferring it: and it is clear that he at once sent the complaint to Mr. Khan for disposal; in other words, the learned Magistrate after making the complaint was careful to abstain from himself making any order adverse to the Petitioner. Then the argument is that he took cognizance of the complaint before transferring it to Mr. Khan. The expression "taking cognizance" is not defined or explained in the Code, and the argument that the Chief Presidency Magistrate took cognizance of the complaint is founded on the words of sec. 192 which imply that a Magistrate can only transfer cases of which he has taken cognizance. This argument appears to be technically correct, and it leads us to this conclusion that the only acts of the Chief Presidency Magistrate to which exception can be taken are that he received the complaint from himself and forwarded it to Mr. Khan for disposal.

In the hands of Mr. Khan the complaint was like any other complaint, save that a preliminary enquiry under sec. 202 was barred. Mr. Khan had full authority to dismiss it or to issue process: he decided to issue process and there is no reason to suppose that in making that decision he did not apply his mind judicially to the allegations made in the complaint.

The question we have to decide is whether there has been such a failure to comply with the terms of the law as to render the proceedings bad. For the Petitioner it is said that the procedure was illegal, and that the illegality was of such a character as to go to the root of the case.

In my judgment such a description of what was done is extravagant. Technically I think the learned Magistrate made a mistake, but substantially his procedure was correct: he made the complaint and received it, but then he refused to pass any order himself for the issue of process. Another Magistrate decided that process should issue and afterwards held a proper enquiry. It is not seriously suggested that the Petitioner suffered any prejudice. I think therefore that the learned Magistrate committed nothing worse than an irregularity, which may be disregarded.

There is another aspect of the matter. Mr. Justice Ghose observed that if he gave effect to the objection, there would be a fresh enquiry perhaps before the same Magistrate, and he decided to go on with the trial. I doubt whether there was any other course open to him. I am disposed to think that the Petitioner's remedy was to move this Court in its revisional capacity to quash the commitment. I do not, however, rest my judgment on this view, but on the ground that there was, in substance, compliance with the provisions of the Code.

RANKIN, J.—When the Chief Presidency Magistrate decided to make the complaint in this case to himself, he adopted a course unknown to the law. A document which is not addressed to a person other than the writer is not a complaint either in the ordinary sense or in the sense in which the word is used in sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The fact that the word “complaint” appears in the heading or in any other part of the document does not make it a complaint or bring it any nearer to being a complaint. It is not an allegation made to a Magistrate [sec. 4 (1) (h)]. Such a document is not merely irregular or defective as a complaint; it is one of which the general character and governing intention are not those of a complaint. The meaning of sec. 176 is that a judicial officer minded to initiate proceedings for offences therein described must initiate them before another person who is a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction and must do so by making and forwarding a complaint to him.

However much or little is meant in the Criminal Procedure Code by “taking cognizance of an offence” or “taking cognizance of any case” or “taking cognizance of an offence or complaint” the mental act of a person scrutinising his own “complaint” and determining to take action thereupon is materially different from anything contemplated by the Code. A complaint under sec. 190 is something received by a Magistrate and “cognizance of complaint” imports and implies this. The course taken in this case is not substantially different from the process of taking cognizance upon the Magistrate’s own knowledge or suspicion

(sec. 190)—a proceeding which secs. 476 and 195 clearly forbid. In another view it is much the same as if Mr. Roxburgh had laid a complaint before Mr. Khan and Mr. Khan had proceeded to deal with it notwithstanding that he is not a Magistrate of the first class.

Again an order whereby a complainant transfers his own complaint to a judicial officer of his own choosing for investigation and disposal cannot be otherwise described than as an illegal order. As against an accused an order of transfer is by itself no foundation of Criminal Jurisdiction, but apart from this consideration, the order in the present case, though not within sec. 556, was such that the accused was not obliged to regard it as conferring jurisdiction upon anyone or indeed as operating anything.

I am not aware of the difficulty of applying or of correctly appreciating new provisions in our lengthy and meticulous Procedure Code, nor of the stress under which the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate has to transact a great volume of business. It is not difficult to see that in a case like this the notion of making a complaint to the complainant himself may have seemed a very harmless adaptation of the ordinary course. It may, I think, be conceded that in this very case the same enquiry and the same commitment might and probably would have resulted if the proceedings had been held in accordance with law. Still it remains undeniable that the statute for reasons of policy has laid down—and this partly if not wholly in the interest of accused persons—that no proceedings under sec. 195 of the Indian Penal Code shall be had except upon certain conditions: that these conditions were at no time fulfilled: that no one had any right or duty in their absence to hold any magisterial enquiry into the alleged offence of this accused and that Mr. Khan had in law no more valid ground for exercising with regard to it his general jurisdiction as a Presidency Magistrate than any other Presidency Magistrate. The proceedings from beginning to end were illegal in the sense that the statute had expressly forbidden them to be had. Their commencement and continuance was a breach of public order—in principle a grave breach, if not in result.

In these circumstances the accused was committed to the High Court and tried by my brother Ghose and a special jury at the fourth Criminal Sessions of 1925. Before the plea of the accused was taken it was objected by Counsel on his behalf that the commitment was illegal. In the Advocate-General's certificate this is described—with what accuracy I will not stop to consider—as a plea in demurrer. In any case the learned Judge overruled it. The accused was thereupon called on to plead and after pleading not guilty was convicted on the evidence and sentenced to one year's imprisonment.

The certificate of the Advocate-General under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent refers to us these questions—(1) whether under sec. 476 the Chief Presidency Magistrate was competent (a) to make a complaint to himself, or (b) take cognizance of the case, and (c) transfer the same. (2) Whether the Third Presidency Magistrate was competent, under the law, to commit the accused for trial to the Sessions.

It is plain enough that this last question was answered in the affirmative at the trial by the learned Judge. It is not perhaps quite so clear that the other questions—for they are more than one—were answered in the affirmative by the learned Judge. I think, however, that they were, having regard to the argument for the Crown which his judgment recites and to the fact that the learned Judge was not persuaded that the statute contained any provision applicable to the case of an alleged offence under sec. 195 of the Indian Penal Code, when it is charged as having taken place before the Chief Presidency Magistrate himself.

Most unfortunately the attention of the learned Judge was not called to sec. 18 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code as it now stands nor to the fact that action had been taken under it to appoint an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate with power to receive complaints under sec. 476. No doubt but for sec. 18 (4) the Court would have had to choose between the view that persons committing perjury, before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, could not be prosecuted at all and the view that he could make a complaint to himself and himself take cognizance of the case. I must not be understood to express any opinion as to what would have been the correct answer to this dilemma. But now that the whole matter has been cleared up it is manifest that there was no necessity or justification for any departure from ordinary procedure.

In my opinion the answer to all the questions raised by the Advocate-General's certificate is in the negative. The Chief Presidency Magistrate was no more competent to complain to himself than to complain of himself. He was not competent to take cognizance of the alleged offence on his own complaint any more than he was competent to do so on his own knowledge or suspicion. His order of transfer had a separate and independent illegality of its own and conferred no authority of any sort on Mr. Khan. So far as the accused is concerned his right, unless and until something happens ed to abridge his right, was to regard the proceedings before Mr. Khan as being wholly unauthorized by law. Mr. Khan at the time when he made his commitment order was not competent under the law to commit the accused for trial.

On this view there has been error in the decision of these points of law decided by the Courts of Original Criminal Jurisdiction and referred by the Advocate-General to be further considered by the Court. Accordingly under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent this Bench has power to pass such judgment and sentence as to it shall seem right.

In my judgment the correct order is to set aside the conviction, and all the proceedings from the commencement including the so-called "complaint," and to direct that the accused be released.

So far as I understand, the objections to this course are two.

First, it may be said that the learned Judge had no power or duty to enquire into the validity of the commitment and that although he may have proceeded upon erroneous reasons his actual decision to proceed with the trial was correct.

Secondly, it may be said that the defects in this case should be treated as coming within sec. 537 of the Code.

In my judgment effect should not be given to either of these objections. (1) Sec. 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code enacts that a commitment once made under sec. 213 by a competent Magistrate can be quashed by the High Court only and only on a point of law. It is not necessary for the present purpose to decide whether in the case of a commitment to the High Court an application to quash should be made to the Appellate Bench or to the Judge for the time being exercising Original Criminal Jurisdiction. In Phanindra Nath Mitra v. King-Em- peror (1), Brett, J., thought it doubtful whether the Appellate Side of this Court had power to quash such a commitment. On the other hand, Spencer, J., in Crown Prosecutor v. Bhagavathi (2) held that the application should be made on the Appellate Side and it was accordingly made and determined before a Divisional Bench. I find from the Minute Books of the Crown office that in the case of R. v. Chabi (3), Fletcher, J., sitting at Sessions in May 1919 being of opinion that the alleged offence had been committed, if at all, outside the jurisdiction of the committing Magistrate and of this Court adjourned the case to enable an application to be made on the Appellate Side to have the commitment set aside. Again in February 1912, Stephen, J., sitting at Sessions, on being informed that the evidence against the first of several accused had not been taken by the Magistrate in presence of the first accused held that "the commitment was not legal and must be quashed and the first accused will not be tried with the others at this trial. As the Crown does not proceed against him he is discharged." [R. v. Mahadev Bhujan (4)]. It seems to be reasonably clear that if the present case had been committed to a Court of Sessions the Sessions Judge if he thought the commitment bad would have referred it to the High Court.

Now the learned trial Judge having decided that the commitment was not illegal did not have occasion to apply his mind, and so far as I see, did not apply his mind, to the question whether he should proceed on an illegal commitment. His decision took away all ground for an application that an order like that made by Fletcher, J., or Stephen, J., might be made here. It is nothing to the point to say that the nature of the objection in the previous cases to the order of commitment was distinguishable from the nature of the objection in the present case. I will assume—though I am far from asserting—that a commitment made by a Magistrate clothed under sec. 206 with a general or formal jurisdiction to make commitments, if made in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed within his jurisdiction and to a Court by which such offence is triable, cannot be quashed by the Sessions Judge. I will assume further—though, again, I do not assert—that in such a case no plea to the jurisdiction can be made by the accused in respect of any illegality in the previous proceedings. I will take it also that an accused is not entitled as of right to an adjournment of the trial in any circumstances such as here arose. Even so, in a regular appeal the question and the only question besides the legality of the commitment would have been whether sec. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied to this case and no other question would have arisen even if objection had not been taken at the trial. Now what is the difference of position under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent and upon the present certificate of the Advocate-General? It is only that we cannot interfere unless a point of law referred to us has been wrongly decided by the trial Judge, given that our right and duty in passing judgment is subject to no extraordinary limitations. An error in law which has had no consequences prejudicial to the accused would warrant no interference with the conviction. But in the case before us I cannot bring myself to doubt that if the attention of the learned Judge had been drawn to sec. 18 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the provision made thereunder, he would have made short work of any supposed difficulties as to his proper course. Had he thought the magisterial proceedings to be contrary to law and the commitment unauthorized, one may respectfully presume that he would have taken some steps with a view to terminate an illegal prosecution. If he had decided that the legality of the magisterial enquiry and the validity of the commitment were questions that he could not determine, one may respectfully presume that he would at least have considered whether the correct procedure was so clear and the accused's objection so little meritorious that his right to object should be treated as at an end and the trial held. In fact the learned Judge proceeded with the trial because he held the complaint and commitment good. That his decision produced no consequences to the prejudice of the accused is an impossible contention. I do not myself presume to doubt that had he thought the commitment irregular—let alone illegal—he would have exacted from the prosecution the same scrupulous care of the prisoner's legal rights as was shown in the case already referred to before Stephen, J. In that case the evidence of two witnesses which had been taken in the presence of co-accused was read over to the first accused instead of being taken over again. I would point out that Counsel for the Crown thought it his duty to point out this defect, and the Judge thought it his duty to see that the prisoner was not tried. In my opinion that is the right view.

(2) It remains only to deal with sec. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was argued by learned Counsel for the accused that this section cannot be applied under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. The section, however, is not an enabling section but one which consists of a prohibition. I see no reason to suppose that we are obliged under the Letters Patent to do what this section prohibits a Court of Appeal or Revision to do. It matters nothing in my opinion whether this Bench is sitting on appeal or revision within the exact meaning of sec. 537, but the leading case upon this section [Subramaniam Ayyar v. King-Emperor (5)] seems sufficient to show that sec. 537 is applicable under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent.

In my judgment the commitment in this case was not merely irregular but illegal and any Court having jurisdiction to quash it would have erred in law if it had refused to quash it. As the case stands at this moment no Court can take cognizance of the alleged offence because there has been no complaint such as would entitle it so to do under sec. 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There is here no question of error, omission or irregularity in the complaint. The proceedings have been had throughout in defiance of the express provisions of the Code and of fundamental principles of law. They have been had coram non judice; and save for limited and special purposes which have reference for the most part to persons other than the accused they are not judicial proceedings in any exact sense of the words.

It is true that in the case of R. v. Khamir (6) a commitment to the Court of Sessions which was made so far as can be seen in obedience to an illegal order of the Sessions Judge and without any enquiry whatsoever was held by a Division Bench of this Court to come within sec. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872. "These are, no doubt," says the judgment, "serious irregularities and more especially the first which is a direct transgression of the law; and if they had been brought to the notice of this Court before the trial had taken place the commitment would properly have been quashed." It seems to me to be a serious question whether this decision did not go beyond "the remedying of mere irregularities," to use Lord Halsbury's words in the subsequent case [Subramaniam Ayyar v. King-Emperor (5)], but in any event it would be a further and an unwarrantable step to treat the case before us in the same manner notwithstanding the objection made and overruled at the trial.

CUMING, J.—This is an application under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent on a certificate from the Advocate-General asking the Court to review the case of one Colin Mackenzie Mackay who was found guilty at the fourth Criminal Sessions presided over by Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose of offences under sec. 193 and sec. 195, I. P. C., and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The facts are as follows:—

The accused Colin Mackenzie Mackay gave evidence in a certain case before Mr. Roxburgh, Chief Presidency Magistrate. The Chief Presidency Magistrate being of opinion that he had given false evidence took proceedings under sec. 476. He drew up a complaint and made the complaint to himself, took cognizance of it and then transferred it for enquiry to Mr. A. Z. Khan, a Presidency Magistrate, who enquired into the matter and committed the accused to the High Court Sessions. When the case was called on the accused for the first time raised the objection that the commitment was illegal inasmuch as the Chief Presidency Magistrate was incompetent to make a complaint to himself under sec. 476, Cr. P. C. and to take cognizance of the case and therefore the Third Presidency Magistrate was incompetent to make the enquiry or commit the accused for trial. Mr. Justice Ghose overruled the objection, proceeded with the trial and the accused was found guilty and sentenced as above-stated. On an application to the Advocate-General a fiat under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent was obtained. The first point which requires consideration is whether the case falls within cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, in other words, has there been an error in the decision of a point or point of law decided by Mr. Justice Ghose. If there has not, the certificate is misconceived and the High Court has no power to interfere [King-Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (7)]. What is the error of law that is ascribed to Mr. Justice Ghose? The error presumably is that the learned Judge held that the commitment was a legal commitment and proceeded with the trial.

Sec. 215 of the Code provides that a commitment once made by a competent Magistrate or by the Court of Sessions can be quashed by the High Court only and only on a point of law.

It thus requires to be decided whether High Court in sec. 215 includes a single Judge of the High Court sitting in Original Criminal Jurisdiction. Speaking for myself I have considerable doubt whether it does. If then Mr. Justice Ghose had no power to quash the commitment being admittedly made by a Magistrate who had jurisdiction to commit to the High Court, the correct procedure was to move the Criminal Bench on the Appellate Side in revision. This point, however, was not fully argued before us and I reserve my opinion for some future occasion if it arises.

To deal with the application on its merits. Mr. Basu argues that the commitment was bad, (1) because there was no complaint, (2) that a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of his own complaint, (3) that the complaint could have been made to the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate who had all the powers of a Chief Presidency Magistrate, (4) that as Mr. Roxburgh could not entertain his own complaint and had no jurisdiction to transfer it to Mr. Khan, so Mr. Khan had no power to commit.

With regard to the first and second contentions the argument would seem to be that it takes two persons to make a complaint—one to complain and one to hear the complaint. That there was a complaint I have not the slightest doubt.

The complaint itself appears on page 13 of the paper-book. Complaint is defined in sec. 4 (2), Cr. P. C., as the allegations made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action that some persons have committed an offence. The document on page 13 certainly falls within the definition. It certainly is an allegation made to a Magistrate with the view to action being taken and it was made to a Magistrate.

It is argued that a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of his own complaint because a Magistrate when he takes cognizance must consider the case judicially, before transferring it to another Magistrate, and he cannot be held to judicially consider his own complaint. The expression "to take cognizance" is nowhere defined in the Code.

Sec. 192 provides that the Chief Presidency Magistrate who has taken cognizance may transfer any case of which he has taken cognizance to any Magistrate subordinate to him. Sec. 203 provides that a Magistrate to whom the case is transferred may dismiss the complaint if he thinks there are no sufficient grounds for proceeding, otherwise he will issue his summons. Thus it is quite clear that the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred must consider the case judicially before issuing process. If that is correct it would seem unnecessary that the Magistrate who took cognizance must judicially consider the case before transferring it to some other Magistrate for trial. If that were so, it would mean that the same question would have to be considered by two persons, viz., whether process should issue or not. I am therefore of opinion that there is nothing in the Code that prevents a Magistrate from taking cognizance of his own complaint. No doubt he could not try the case himself but in view of sec. 487 (2) there would seem nothing to prevent him committing the case for trial. This latter point, however, does not arise in the present case and it is unnecessary to consider it.

Even if it be conceded that he could not have taken cognizance himself then the position is that no cognizance of the case was taken until the case came into the file of Mr. Khan. Mr. Khan is not empowered to take cognizance but his so doing would be an irregularity and not an illegality (sec. 529), and as such curable under sec. 537.

It has not been seriously argued that owing to the procedure followed the accused was in any way prejudiced. It was suggested that if the case had been enquired into by Mr. Keays, he, being an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, would have taken an independent view, while Mr. Khan being a Subordinate Magistrate might feel bound to carry out the orders of the Chief Presidency Magistrate. The suggestion hardly calls for serious consideration.

It has been contended that there was another Magistrate, Mr. Keays, the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, who was empowered to take cognizance under sec. 476. I fail to see how this is of any importance. The presence or absence of another Magistrate who could have taken cognizance makes no difference to the legality or illegality of what Mr. Roxburgh did. I am of opinion that we should not interfere.

B. B. GHOSE, J.—The question that seems to arise in this case is whether on the certificate of the Advocate-General the questions referred to in it can be considered by this Court. Under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent the Advocate-General may certify that a point of law decided by the Court of Original Criminal Jurisdiction should be further considered. The only point referred to in the certificate as decided by me is that I overruled what has been somewhat inaccurately described as a "plea in demurrer" taken on behalf of the accused, and allowed the trial to proceed. The certificate of the Advocate-General does not require that the point decided by me that the trial should proceed should be further considered. It is unnecessary to state what order I should have passed if the facts had been presented to me as they appear to be now. But the question arises as to whether a Judge exercising Original Criminal Jurisdiction has authority, except under specified circumstances, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, to quash a commitment made by a Magistrate authorised to do so under the Code. Under sec. 532 (2) the Judge may quash a commitment, but in this case there was no objection taken during the enquiry nor was any injury to the accused alleged. The Judge may also make an entry under sec. 473 that the charge is clearly unsustainable which would have the effect of staying proceedings. If neither of those proceedings can be taken, I think the Judge cannot refuse to go on with the trial. A commitment may be quashed by the High Court under sec. 215, but this refers to its Appellate or Revisional Jurisdiction, and I do not think that a Judge exercising Original Criminal Jurisdiction can quash a commitment on the ground that it was illegal. No step to have the commitment quashed was taken by the accused and so the trial had to proceed. If this is correct, I do not think we can consider the points certified by the Advocate-General, as we are not sitting as a Court of criminal appeal. I do not, however, propose to rest my decision on this ground alone as the question was not argued before us although I invited discussion on it.

The contention on behalf of the Petitioner is that there was no complaint and the Chief Presidency Magistrate acted illegally in taking cognizance of the case, with the resulting consequence that the entire proceedings as also the subsequent trial are void. I think that the document signed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was a complaint of the offence as contemplated in sec. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and nothing could have been said against it if it had been forwarded to another Magistrate having authority under the section. As it now appears that the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate was also a Magistrate of the first class for the purposes of sec. 476 (1), the Chief Presidency Magistrate should have forwarded the complaint to him. But the question is what is the consequence of his omission to do so? It seems to me that taking cognizance of a case under the Code does not involve any judicial act on the part of the Magistrate. If a Magistrate is empowered under sec. 190 and the offence complained of is brought to his notice in the prescribed manner the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of the case. His judicial act commences from the proceedings to be taken under sec. 200. But in a case like the present the complainant is not required to be examined. The Magistrate to whom the case was transferred could take every judicial action that a Magistrate taking cognizance of the case could do, i.e., postpone the issue of process or dismissing the complaint if he thought fit. The Chief Presidency Magistrate did not take any judicial action in the matter before transferring it to the Third Presidency Magistrate. Moreover, it does not seem to me that taking cognizance of the case by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was illegal. Under sec. 487, sub-sec. (2) he might himself commit the case to the High Court, and this implies that he must take cognizance of the case and take all further steps leading to the commitment. The irregularity in his procedure was that instead of himself committing the case, he transferred it to another Magistrate. The case was not tried by the Magistrate. The principle laid down in sec. 487 appears to be that the Magistrate should not try any person for an offence committed before himself but he may take all necessary steps for the commitment of the case to the Court of Sessions or the High Court if he is empowered to commit. I do not therefore think that the commitment or the subsequent trial was illegal and the irregularity referred to would be cured under sec. 532 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I agree with the decision of Walmsley, J., and Cuming, J.

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin and, as I had the advantage of reading his judgment, I do not think it leaves out anything which I can usefully add.

Held, upon the evidence—That the trusts of the Fire Temple at Rangoon were intended for the professing members of the Parsi community, i.e., racial Parsis or people deemed after a long lapse of ages to be racial Parsis, professing the Zoroastrian religion.

As regards the racial claim, maternity is of no importance; and a person whose mother was a Parsi, though actually and validly converted and initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, was not entitled, as of right, to use the Temple or to attend or to participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein.

Such a person entering into the Temple may be excluded or extruded from the Temple as a trespasser by the persons in possession, viz., the trustees of the Temple. But a beneficiary or two or three or more of them cannot sue such a person as a trespasser or claim an injunction to restrain the entry by such a person into the Temple on the mere ground that such entry wounds their religious feelings and desecrates the Temple. The beneficiaries as such may not be allowed to recover damages for or restrain such entry as trespass unless, at least, they establish that the intrusion of such a person is so repugnant to their habits of mind that the entrance of such a person must entail their own departure, so that it is as it were trespass to the person.

Cases of application by trustees of the funds of a public or charitable trust for persons not objects of the trust stand on a different footing from cases where the benefits of a trust created only for rendering some convenience or service are extended by the trustees to persons other than the lawful recipients thereof. In the former class of cases the act of the trustees will be a malversation, for only those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require and if there be a surplus it must be left to the Courts to make a cy-pres application of it; in the latter, the trustees are not bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share in the benefits or to treat them as trespassers.

DINSHA MANEKJI PETIT v. JAMSETJI JIJIBHAI (1) referred to.

This was an appeal (No. 57 of 1924) from a decree, dated the 28th July 1920, of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, which affirmed a decree, dated the 23rd April 1918, of the said Court on its Original Side and dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit.

The Plaintiffs were Parsi residents of Rangoon professing the Zoroastrian religion and they sued on behalf of themselves and all other persons interested in the Parsi Fire Temple in Dalhousie Street for a declaration that the Defendant Bella is not entitled to the use and benefit of the said Temple or to attend or participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein and for an injunction restraining her from entering and the second Defendant Shapurji Cowasji, her foster-father, from taking her into the said Temple.

On the 23rd April 1918 the trial Judge (Young, J.) held that the suit was only maintainable by the Plaintiffs if and so far as they could show that their Temple was polluted and their religious susceptibilities wounded by the presence of Bella, that no action for physical trespass lay, and that inasmuch as the Plaintiffs had not proved that Bella was not duly initiated no action for "moral trespass" could be maintained.

The Appellate Court (Robinson, Acting C. J. and MacGregor, J.) were also of opinion that the Respondent Bella had been validly initiated into the Zoroastrian religion and held that on the true construction of the trust deed relating to the Fire Temple the expression "Parsee population" was not exclusively confined to the Parsis as a race and that the words "Parsi" and "Zoroastrian" were interchangeable.

In their opinion the decision in Dinsha Manekji Petit v. Jamsetji Jijibhai (1) was applicable only to the trust fund and properties which were the subject-matter of that suit, and the reasons in that case which were cogent when applied to the wealthy Parsi community of Bombay had not the same value when applied to the small Parsi community of Rangoon.

They accordingly dismissed the appeal.

From that decision the Plaintiffs appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C., Sir G. Lownes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The circumstances of this case are as follows :—

Sometime in 1899 a Goanese Christian named Jones with his wife arrived in Rangoon. They were in humble circumstances, and the wife applied for assistance to a Parsi of good position at Rangoon, Bomanji Cowasji, stating that she too was a Parsi. He befriended her till he went to England in 1900 and then asked his brother Sapurji Cowasji to look after her and the child, to which she had just given birth, the Respondent Bella. The father died and when her mother died shortly afterwards Sapurji, who was a Defendant in this suit, but died pending the appeal, took Bella into his own house, and he and his wife treated her as their own child.

When Bella was nearly 14, it was desired that the initiation ceremony into the Zoroastrian religion called Navjot should be performed for her, but the local Head Priest at Rangoon refused, chiefly because—as it appears from his evidence—he thought it would be unpopular with the Parsi community. Advantage was then taken of the temporary presence of some other priest, who performed the ceremony; and after that invitations were sent by the Head Priest to Bella to come with Sapurji and his wife to the Temple on festival days. Three such invitations were sent, the High Priest said, with the expectation that they would not be accepted; but on the third occasion, being 21st March 1915, Sapurji brought her and put her within the sacred precincts facing the sacred fire, and in such a position that she went through all the ceremonies like other worshippers.

This proceeding gave great offence to a number of members of the Parsi community in Rangoon, and on the 31st March, this suit was brought by three members of the Parsi community, who stated that they brought it not only on their own behalf but on behalf of a large number of members of the Parsi community at Rangoon, against Bella and against Sapurji, stating that the Temple was held on trust for the free and unrestricted use of the Parsi inhabitants in Rangoon professing the Zoroastrian faith, further stating that it was alleged that the mother of Bella was a Parsi, and that Bella had been validly converted or initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, but denying that this was so or indeed could be so, and averring that the Defendants had by their acts "not only wounded the religious feelings entertained by religiously inclined Parsis, but also caused the desecration of the said sacred Temple."

In another paragraph of the plaint, they stated that only members of the Parsi community professing the Zoroastrian religion were entitled to the use of the Temple, to the access of the sacred precincts and to attend, witness or take part in any religious ceremonies held therein, and that it was never the intention of the Parsi community that the children of non-Parsi fathers should be allowed the use of the Temple. They further said that even assuming that Bella could be duly admitted into the Zoroastrian religion, and assuming that her mother was a Parsi, even then she could not be considered a Parsi or a member of the Parsi population. They prayed for a declaration that Bella was not entitled to use the Temple or to attend or to participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein and for injunctions to restrain her from entering the Temple and Sapurji from taking her there.

Sapurji, in his own name and as guardian for Bella, put in their written statement. In this it was contended that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, that the Defendant Bella was entitled to attend the Temple and the ceremonies and caused no desecration by her presence; and it was stated that her mother was a Parsi, that she had been brought up from early infancy as a Parsi and in the Zoroastrian faith, and that she came within the terms of the trust of the Temple.

The following issues were then settled :—

SAKLAT v. BELLA.

"1. Whether the plaint discloses any cause of action ?

"2. Whether this suit is maintainable ?

"3. Who are entitled to the benefit of the Fire Temple Trust ?

"4. Is the first Defendant the daughter of a Parsi mother ?

"5. Is it possible for the first Defendant, being a daughter of a non-Parsi father to be initiated (a) into the Zoroastrian Religion and (b) into the Parsi Community ?

"6. If it was possible, whether the ceremonies adopted for the purpose were defective (the second Defendant to give particulars of the ceremonies performed at the initiation of the first Defendant within one week, and the Plaintiffs to state within one week thereafter whether, and if so, in what respects they contend that these ceremonies were inefficacious) :"

and the case was set down for a preliminary hearing on the first and second issues.

The Judge decided these points in favour of the Plaintiffs ; and thereupon some oral evidence was taken before the Judge at Rangoon, and a mass of evidence covering 664 pages of the record was taken on commission at Bombay.

It appears that this was not the first occasion in modern times in which the question of the admissibility of a person who was not a racial Parsi, but who had become a convert to the Zoroastrian religion, to participate in the religious services and enter the temples of the Parsis had arisen.

In 1903 a French woman had declared that she had become a convert to the Zoroastrian religion and had married a Parsi gentleman of position at Bombay. Her claim to participate in religious worship had given rise to much excitement in the Parsi community, and seven Parsis, one of whom was the French woman's husband, had brought a suit in the High Court of Bombay against the trustees of the Parsi endowments, first making a general case of ~~some~~ misfeasances requiring the intervention of the Court, and secondly claiming a declaration that the trust deeds ought to be construed as admitting to their benefits any person professing the Zoroastrian religion whether a racial Parsi or not.

After a prolonged litigation, this suit, except in so far as it prayed for a correction of the general misfeasances, was dismissed ; and the Judges, for reasons which will have to be more minutely entered into, held that the various endowments were limited to the use of people who as well as being Zoroastrian were also racial Parsis. But the controversy had not been forgotten, and its echoes are to be heard in the evidence given on commission in the present case.

Young, J., in the preliminary judgment given in the present case, held that the Plaintiffs could not sue for trespass on land or in the Temple, but that they might have a third cause of action which he described as an interference with their right to exclusive worship. He thought that they had sufficiently alleged this right and its infringement, that the right was one which had been often upheld by the Courts, and that the suit could be brought without joining the trustee or without obtaining the consent of the Advocate-General. When he came to his later decision upon the whole case, he described the injury as "an injury to the Plaintiffs' individual right to worship undisturbed by the intrusion of a person not belonging to their faith," and applying his mind to the fifth and sixth issues, he held that Bella could be initiated into the Zoroastrian religion and into the Parsi community ; that the ceremonies adopted for the purpose were sufficient, and that therefore there was no intrusion of a person not belonging to the Plaintiffs' faith, and it became immaterial to decide issues three and four. Accordingly he dismissed the suit.

When the matter came before the Chief

SAKLAT v. BELLA.

Court, on appeal, the Judges, though apparently they heard one continuous argument, gave two judgments: the first in respect of the preliminary issues. In this they confirmed the actual decision of Young, J., but enlarged the Plaintiffs' cause of action, saying that they might treat it as an injury to themselves, that Bella, even though she were a Zoroastrian, yet not being a Parsi, came to the Temple worship.

This made it necessary for the Judges in the Chief Court to determine the third issue, viz., who are entitled to the benefits of the Fire Temple Trust; and they held that it was a trust for a religion and not for a race. They then held in agreement with Young, J., that Bella could be and was converted or initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, and therefore they concurred with him in dismissing the suit.

The Judges in the Chief Court took the view that the fourth issue might also have been decided in favour of Bella, i.e., that her mother was a Parsi, but that this fact was unimportant, except as leading up to her conversion or initiation. Their Lordships agree with this. In their view it is settled that as regards the racial claim, maternity is of no importance.

The appeal to their Lordships' Board has raised among other questions the actuality and validity of Bella's conversion and initiation; but on this point their Lordships see no reason for differing from the judgment of the Chief Court.

In the great controversy in the Bombay case, Dinsha Manekji Petit v. Jamsetji Jijibhai (1), the two learned Judges (one of whom was himself a Parsi) came to the following conclusions thus expressed by the Parsi Judge, Davar, J. :—

"1. That the Zoroastrian religion not only permits but enjoins the conversion of a person born in another religion and of non-Zoroastrian parents.

"2. That, although such conversion was permissible, the Zoroastrians, ever since their advent into India 1200 years ago, have never attempted to convert anyone into their religion.

"3. That there is not a single instance proved before the Court of a person born of both non-Zoroastrian parents ever having been admitted into the Zoroastrian religion professed by the Parsis in India "

It is true that as regards the quantum of the necessary ceremonial on initiation, Davar, J., expressed an opinion that a piece of ritual called Burnshnun was an essential part; but in this matter he was travelling outside anything necessary for the case before him; and their Lordships do not find that Beaman, J., the other Judge, concurred with him as to this, and they think that the evidence given in the present case warranted the decision to which the Chief Court came that this additional ceremonial was not necessary.

It follows therefore that the points which their Lordships have now to determine are whether the trusts of the Temple are for the benefit of all persons professing the Zoroastrian religion or limited to those who, professing that religion, are also racial Parsis in the sense in which that word is understood in the Parsi community; and secondly, whether if Bella, not being a racial Parsi, is not a person within the benefits of the Temple Trust, this fact gives the Plaintiffs any right of direct action against her and against her guardian.

The contention on behalf of the Plaintiffs was the same as that of the contention of the Defendants in the Bombay case, namely, that all these trusts were intended for Parsis in the limited sense, i.e. :—

"First.—The descendants of the original emigrants into India from Persia who profess the Zoroastrian religion.

"Secondly.—The descendants of the Zoroastrians in Persia who were not amongst the original emigrants, but who are of the same stock and have since that date, from time to time, come to India and have settled here, either permanently or temporarily, and who profess the Zoroastrian religion.

"Thirdly.—The children of a Parsi father by an alien mother, if such children are admitted into the religion of their fathers and profess the Zoroastrian religion."

Now the origin of the Temple, the right to worship at which is in dispute in the present case, is as follows:—

On the 24th November 1868, the Deputy-Commissioner at Rangoon, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, granted to Bajunji Cowasji and Sapurji Hirji a parcel of land in the town of Rangoon of a certain size "upon trust to build and maintain upon the said parcel of land a temple for the use of Parsi population."

It was provided that the Deputy-Commissioner might nominate new trustees, and that if a Temple was not erected within a year, he might revoke the grant.

On the 14th August 1882—probably because there had been delay in building the Temple—a re-grant was made to new trustees upon trust for the same intents and purposes as the old grant, with like powers to appoint new trustees and a similar power of revocation if no temple was built within a year.

Previously on the 11th January 1859, the then Deputy-Commissioner had granted to two Parsi gentlemen another piece of land upon trust to maintain it "as a cemetery and to the free use of persons of the Parsi denomination." There was a similar power given to the Deputy-Commissioner to appoint new trustees and a power of revocation in case the land was applied to other uses. This grant was again renewed also on the 14th August 1882.

Some disputes having arisen as to the Temple, a suit was brought to have a new trustee appointed, and a scheme of management framed; and on the 20th March 1889, the Recorder appointed Bajunji Cowasji sole trustee and ordered a scheme to be framed.

About the same time, a similar suit had been brought in respect of the burial ground, and by an order of the same date the same person was appointed trustee and a similar order to frame a scheme was made. The scheme in respect of the Temple gave the trustee charge of the Temple and its appurtenances with duty to manage and improve as funds permitted and power to build a range of shops on part of the trust lands, borrowing money for the purpose. After repayment of monies borrowed the rest was to be applied for the current expenses of the Fire Temple and the Parsi Burial Ground. In this way and to this extent the two properties were brought together.

When the scheme for the burial ground was to be framed, there was a serious dispute with regard to children of Parsi fathers who died without having gone through the ceremonies of initiation, and eventually the scheme was framed in the following words:—

"1. The Burial ground shall be used for burying persons who shall at his or her death be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion and no other.

"EXPLANATION. — No one shall be taken to be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion who has not been duly invested with the Sudra and Kusti, in accordance with the rites prescribed by that religion; provided, nevertheless, that children born of fathers following the Zoroastrian religion, and brought up in that faith, and dying before the age of 14 years and three months, without having been invested with the Sudra and Kusti, may be taken to be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion, but children dying after having attained that age without having been invested with the Sudra and Kusti shall not be taken to have professed the Zoroastrian religion unless his or her investiture was prevented by unforeseen and unavoidable circumstances."

It is suggested for the Defendants that this document shows that the stress of the matter was laid upon the religion and not upon the race.

One other document must be mentioned. Apparently it took a long time before the temple or at any rate the present Temple was built, and on the 20th August 1904, Bajunji Cowasji executed a deed of declaration of trust reciting that he and his brother had built at their charge a fire temple upon the trust lands so that the same might form part of the said trusts and be for the use of the Parsi inhabitants of Rangoon, and purporting to declare for himself and his successors-in-office that he held the fire temple "for the use of the Parsi inhabitants of Rangoon free and unrestricted but subject notwithstanding to the tenets of the pure Zoroastrian religion and to the scheme prescribed by the Court."

The Defendants at their Lordships' bar contended that this was an attempt to alter the trust and as such should be rejected, but in their written statement they accepted it as a valid document. So far as it goes, it rather makes in the Plaintiffs' favour, but their Lordships are not disposed to attach grave importance to it.

The Chief Court—as already stated—considered that the effect of these documents was to impose a trust for the benefit of persons professing the Zoroastrian religion and no others.

Their Lordships agree with the latter part of this proposition. Parsis who cease to be Zoroastrians have, in their Lordships' view, no claim. But upon the whole and after much consideration they think that the benefits are confined to persons who possess the double qualification of Zoroastrians and racial Parsis.

The judgment in the Bombay case travelled over much ground—indeed, in their Lordships' opinion, much unnecessary ground—but both Judges came to the conclusion that the various trusts in that case must be construed as being confined to persons who were of the Zoroastrian religion and racial Parsis. There were several trusts, and the expressions in the deeds were different; but the word Parsi never appeared in them, and the word Zoroastrian or some equivalent religious word was used. Sometimes the trusts were for the members of the Zoroastrian community of Bombay; other phrases were similar. Nevertheless, both Judges came to the conclusion that they must be read as has been already stated.

Davar, J., thus expressed himself:—

"A Juddin" (that is a Gentile) "may become a Zoroastrian, but how he ever could possibly become a member of the 'Holy Zoroastrian Anjuman of Bombay' or be one of 'the members of the Zoroastrian Community of Bombay' or become one of 'the Anjuman of the Mazdianani faith' passes my comprehension. A Juddin converted to Zoroastrianism had never come into existence. Such a person could not possibly have been within the contemplation of the donors and founders: the possibility of such a being coming into existence would be so new and novel that if the donor ever conceived such an idea and intended to include him in his benefaction, he would certainly designate him separately and specially, and not include him in the general description of the community of his then existing co-religionists and their descendants."

Beaman, J., said:—

"The question is not whether the Zoroastrian religion permits conversion, but whether, when these Trusts were founded, the Founders contemplated and intended that converts should be admitted to participate in them."

In their Lordships' view the same line of reasoning applies to the present case. The Parsi community had grown up to be such a distinct body, and admissions into it from outside had been so very rare, that at the time when these grants at Rangoon were made the Government must have intended that the Temple should be for the benefit of professing members of the Parsi community, i.e., racial Parsis or people deemed after a long lapse of ages to be racial Parsis.

But this does not exhaust the matters to be determined on the present appeal. It determines that the Respondent Bella has no right of entering into the Temple and may therefore be excluded or extruded from the Temple by the trustees. They can treat her as a trespasser. But it does not follow that they are bound so to treat her. Still less does it follow that in an action to which the trustees are not parties, and in which therefore no indirect remedy can be obtained, a direct claim can be supported as if for a tort committed by Bella or her guardian.

When property is set apart for public or charitable uses, it will be a malversation to apply any of the funds for persons who are not objects of the trust. Those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require; and if there is a surplus, it must be left to the Courts to make a cy-pres application of it. But when the subject-matter of such a trust or charity is the rendering of some convenience or service of such a nature that it will not hurt the lawful recipients if others share with them, their Lordships are aware of no case in which it has been held that the trustees are bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share. They may do so; they may treat all such persons as trespassers and say: Sic volo sic jubeo, stet pro ratione voluntas. But if they choose to admit to the benefit of some park or garden established for a particular district some persons from over the border or to admit to a public library destined for a particular municipality persons from outside, or what is perhaps a nearer analogy, admit to the hearing of a lecture by a University professor persons not members of the University, this of itself furnishes no ground of complaint. If the numbers admitted are too large or the persons are disorderly or unpleasant in their habits or in any way substantially interfere with the convenience or benefit of those for whom the endowment was created, the trustees may be required to exclude them. But the mere claim of A that B shall not share in such a benefit because B is not within the terms of the foundation is not one that Courts would encourage.

Many illustrations of this doctrine could be drawn from the history of English institutions. The great schools of Westminster, Eton and Winchester arose from small nuclei, namely, a fixed number of endowed and privileged scholars taught by appointed masters. They have become what they are because unprivileged boys in greater numbers have been allowed to benefit by the services of the appointed masters, and to use the school class-room and play-grounds.

The statutes of the colleges in Oxford and Cambridge make provision for the education of a fixed number of students or scholars privileged and endowed. Many, if not most, of them make no provision for the admission of other members in statu pupillari. But "commoners," so called, though their legal position is merely that of boarders [Rex v. Grundon, Exp. Davison (2)], have been for several centuries admitted equally with the privileged scholars to the benefits of the colleges, particularly to the use of hall, library and chapel.

The intrusion of an unbeliever into a place of religious worship might well be a case of substantial interference with the devotions of worshippers. But the Plaintiffs have failed to make out that Bella was not a Zoroastrian. They suggested indeed that her conversion was impossible, or at any rate that it had not been completed by due initiation; but their Lordships agree with the Judge of first instance that this suggestion was not established; while, except in the evidence of one unsatisfactory witness, there was nothing to show that Bella's presence would be thought to cause desecration, if once it was accepted that she was a Zoroastrian.

Also, if it were a question of caste and worshippers of a higher caste would be defiled by the presence of a lower caste, as in Anandray Bhikaji Phadke v. Shankar Daji Charya (3) this would be a serious disturbance. As was said in that case:—

"This right is one which the Courts must guard as otherwise all high-caste Hindus would hold their sanctuaries and perform their worship only so far as those of the lower castes chose to allow them."

But this claim is again not established. Indeed, what may be called the quasi-caste claim is not even suggested in the pleadings. It is the wounding of religious feelings and the desecration of the Temple which are put forward.

Their Lordships have now to consider the relief which the Plaintiffs have sought in this suit. They have not sought for a general declaration as to the persons who are objects of the trust. They have not sought for a construction of the scheme, or for any order to be made upon the trustee, nor have they made the trustee a party. For this they would probably have required the consent of the Advocate-General. They pray in the plaint "for a declaration that the Defendant Bella is not entitled to the use and benefits of the Parsi Fire Temple in Dalhousie Street known as 'Captain's Agiary or Dhurraymair' or to the use and benefits of the buildings standing on the said trust land or to attend at or participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein."

Then they claim an injunction to restrain the Defendant Bella from entering and the other Defendant, now dead, from bringing her into the temple to attend the religious ceremonies. This is a claim for an injunction to prevent the repetition of an alleged trespass. It must therefore first be established that there was a trespass and one for which damages, though possibly only nominal, could be recovered. But for trespass upon land the only person to bring the action is the person in possession of the land, that is, the trustee. That a beneficiary or two or three beneficiaries of a trust for public purposes may bring a suit for trespass against an intruder is a novel principle of jurisprudence; and the case is not made stronger by the suggestion that several other beneficiaries agree with them.

It may be that in India it would be convenient in some cases to allow such a suit, and the judgment in Anandray Bhikaji Phadke v. Shankar Daji Charya (3) may form a precedent. But, if so, the circumstances must be as powerful as in that case. It must be established that the juxtaposition of the two sets of persons is so repugnant to their habits of mind that the entrance of one set into the Temple entails the departure of the other, so that it is as if it were trespass to the person.

As already stated, no such case has been established, and therefore it is not necessary to discuss the principle on which the judgment in Anandray Bhikaji Phadke v. Shankar Daji Charya (3) is founded, and which was indeed accepted by the Judge of first instance in the present case. The facts do not warrant the claim, if it be a sound one, and no injunction can be granted.

With regard to costs, the learned Judge of first instance, while giving the Defendants the general costs of the action, thought that both sides were to blame for the inordinate length of the Bombay commission and made the Plaintiffs pay two-thirds only of the Defendants' costs of the Commission.

If any costs of the action were to be given, some similar provision should be applied. But, upon the whole, their Lordships feel that the Plaintiffs have failed in the greater part of their suit, and that the giving to them of a declaration is an indulgence. They were given the costs of the preliminary issues before Young, J., and the costs of so much of the appeal as related to those issues. These they keep, and the orders against them in respect of other costs in the Courts below will be discharged, and there will be no costs of this appeal. Their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty that this appeal be allowed, that the judgment of the Chief Court be varied, and that a declaration be made, namely, that Bella was not entitled, as of right, to use the temple, or to attend or to participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein, that except as to the costs awarded to the Plaintiffs in the Court of first instance and in the Chief Court, there be no costs in the Courts below, and that there be no costs of this appeal.

Rules of the High Court, Original Side, Chap. XIII A, r. 3—Defendant first appearing in person, then through an attorney—Summons in time, if made within 10 days from the date of the last appearance—Order giving leave to defend on furnishing security, in default decree against the Defendant, a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

A suit on certain promissory notes was instituted on the 18th of June 1924. On the 11th of July 1924, the Defendant entered appearance in person; on the 21st of July, he again entered appearance through an attorney and on the same day the written statement was filed. On the 22nd of July 1924, a summons was taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs under Chap. XIII A of the Rules of the High Court and it was ordered that the Defendant furnishing security (within a time specified in the order) would have leave to defend, in default a decree should be drawn up against the Defendant for the claim under the promissory notes:

Held—That the order involving an adjudication on the claim was a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and as such an appeal lay from the order.

SUKHLAL CHUNDERMULL v. EASTERN BANK, LTD. (1) distinguished.

Held further—That though the summons was out of time, if the 11th July was taken as the date from which the 10 days

Appeal No. 174.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Chattu Lal Misser against two orders of the 8th and the 27th of August 1924. The order of the 27th of August 1924 is the material order. It runs as follows : " It is ordered in supersession of the order made in this suit and dated the eighth day of August instant that the Defendants do pursuant to the said order on or before the twelfth day of September next furnish security to the extent of eight lacs to the satisfaction of the Registrar of this Court in unencumbered immoveable property in Calcutta or in the town of Howrah : And it is further ordered that on such security being given within the time aforesaid the Defendants shall have leave to defend this suit : And it is further ordered that the said Registrar be at liberty to extend the time for furnishing such security as aforesaid on good cause being shown therefor : And it is further ordered that in default of the Defendants furnishing security as aforesaid within the time aforesaid or within such further time as may be allowed by the said Registrar as aforesaid a decree shall be drawn up in this suit against the Defendants for the sum of rupees sixty-four lacs ninety thousand and nine hundred annas seven and pies eleven with the costs of this suit."

The suit was brought by the Marwari Commercial Bank, Ltd., which was in liquidation (the Liquidator being one Ranjit Roy who was appointed in April 1923) against Chattu Lal Misser, Bissessar Lal Halwasiya, Luchmi Narain Shroff and Onkarmull Shroff who were alleged to be members of a firm called Binayek Misser & Co. It was based upon three promissory notes, dated the 23rd of May 1922, the 20th of July 1922 and the 5th of September 1922 alleged to have been executed by the Defendant firm in favour of the Plaintiff Bank. The total amount claimed for principal and interest up to June 1924 was Rs. 64,90,900.

It was alleged that the Defendant firm had deposited 3,06,581 shares in the Calcutta Industrial Bank, Ltd., as security for the amount due on the promissory notes.

The plaint was filed on the 18th of June 1924. On the 22nd of July 1924 a summons was issued in accordance with the provisions of Chap. XIII A of the Rules of the High Court.

R. 3 of that chapter provides : " Where the Defendant in any suit which is within the terms of r. 1 has entered appearance the Plaintiff may, as regards any claim which is within the terms of r. 1, on affidavit made by himself or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts verifying the cause of action and the amount claimed, if any, and stating that in his belief there is no defence to the claim, apply to the Judge for final judgment for the amount claimed together with interest, if any, or for the recovery of the land (with or without rent or mesne profits) as the case may be and costs :

" Provided that as against any Defendant who has filed a written statement such application shall not be permissible unless the summons is taken out as in r. 4 mentioned within ten days after the entering of appearance."

The first point, which was taken on the hearing of this appeal, was that appearance was entered by the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser in person on the 11th of July 1924, and the written statement was filed on the 21st of July 1924; and, that, as the summons was not issued until the 22nd of July 1924, the summons was out of time as it had not been issued within ten days of the appearance as provided by r. 3.

It appears, however, that on the 9th of July Messrs. Manuel, Agarwalla & Co. who were acting on behalf of Chattu Lal Misser wrote to the attorneys for the Plaintiff Bank as follows :—

" We understand that you have filed this suit against Pandit Chattu Lal Misser and others. If so, please supply us with a copy of the plaint on the usual terms. We have received instructions from Pandit Chattu Lal Misser to enter appearance on his behalf."

The Plaintiffs' attorneys, having received that letter, were entitled to expect that they would receive notice of the entering of appearance when it was effected by Messrs. Manuel, Agarwalla & Co. for it is provided by Chap. VIII, r. 18 that " the attorney of a Defendant, or a Defendant appearing in person, shall forthwith give notice of his having entered appearance to the Plaintiff's attorney, or if the Plaintiff sues in person, to the Plaintiff himself."

In fact, the Plaintiffs' attorneys asked Messrs. Manuel, Agarwalla & Co., if they had entered appearance, but it is alleged that they received no reply; and, on the 11th of July, as I have already said, Chattu Lal Misser entered appearance in person, but he did not give any notice to the Plaintiffs or to their attorneys of his having entered appearance.

On the 21st of July Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. acting as attorneys for Chattu Lal Misser wrote to the Plaintiffs' attorneys as follows: " Please note that we have this day entered appearance to this suit on behalf of the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser who, we understand, appeared in person sometime ago."

In point of fact, Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. did enter appearance on that day for the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser and they filed the Defendant's written statement on the same day.

I am not in a position to say whether the course, which was adopted in this case, was taken deliberately with the object of preventing the Plaintiffs taking proceedings under Chap. XIII A for summary judgment within time; but if that was the object, in my judgment, it failed.

No doubt, if the entering of appearance is to be taken as having been made on the 11th of July 1924 the Plaintiffs were out of time with their summons which was issued on the 22nd of July. But, in my judgment, the Defendant's attorneys by entering appearance again on behalf of the Defendant on the 21st of July 1924 provided another opportunity for the Plaintiffs to take proceedings under Chap. XIII A.

It was argued by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Appellant that the course adopted by Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. on the 21st of July was not an entering of appearance but was merely a request to the Court's officer to record Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. as attorneys for the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser. In my judgment this cannot be so regarded. The endorsement on the warrant was in these terms: "Please enter an appearance in our name on behalf of the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser in this suit. Sd. G. C. Chunder, Attorneys-at-law." If the only object of Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. had been to file the warrant of attorney on behalf of the Defendant firm, the proper way of doing it would have been to file the warrant and endorse it in the following terms: "To the Registrar. Sir, please file this warrant of attorney on behalf of the Defendant firm." Instead of that course being adopted, as I have already pointed out, Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. purported to enter appearance on behalf of the Defendant.

Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. having entered appearance on the 21st of July 1924 I am of opinion that the summons which was taken out on the 22nd of July was not out of time even though the written statement of the Defendant had been filed and the terms of the proviso in Chap. XIII, r. 3 were complied with.

The next point urged on behalf of the Appellant was that the affidavit in support of the summons was not sufficient. It appears from the Rule, which I have already read, that the affidavit in support of the summons should be made out by the Plaintiff or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts verifying the cause of action and the amount claimed.

I am not prepared to hold that the affidavit of the liquidator, affirmed on the 22nd of July 1924, by itself was sufficient to comply with the rule. But, in my judgment, the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser himself supplied the materials which were necessary to make the case for the Plaintiffs complete.

By the written statement, which was filed, he admitted that the promissory notes were executed by the Defendant firm. The written statement contained a further admission that Chattu Lal Misser was a member of the firm.

It is true that in the written statement there was a denial that any consideration for the promissory notes was received by the firm or any member of it, but certain correspondence was exhibited to the affidavit of the Liquidator, dated the 22nd of July 1924. This correspondence was between the Liquidator and Messrs. Manuel, Agarwalla & Co. who were then acting on behalf of the Defendant firm and it took place in April, June, July and November 1923. The Liquidator on behalf of the Plaintiff Bank was demanding payment of the promissory notes: and, in reply to such demands Messrs. Manuel, Agarwalla and Co. wrote two letters, dated the 3rd of July 1923 and the 9th of November 1923.

The letter of the 3rd of July was as follows:—

"R. S. V. Aiyar, Esqr.,

R. Ray, Esqr.,

Joint Liquidators,

Cltts. Messrs. Binayek Misser & Co.

Dear Sirs,

Your letter, dated the 19th June last, to our clients has been handed over to us with instructions to state in reply as follows:—

As we had been meeting you in person from time to time we did not reply to you in writing about the adjustment of the over-draft account with the Bank. You know the actual position and you know that our clients have got to receive a much larger amount than their over-draft from the Calcutta Industrial Bank,

CHATTU LAL MISSEER v. THE MARWARI COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD.

Ltd., in respect of the shares which you hold as security against such over-draft. The Liquidators of the said Bank requested you and as a matter of fact according to your desire agreed to authorise you to set off the dividend that our clients have to receive in respect of the said Calcutta Industrial Bank, Ltd., shares against the said over-draft. Our clients are still willing to authorise you to receive payment of all monies that will be paid from time to time by the Liquidators appointed by the Court in the matter of the Calcutta Industrial Bank, Ltd. You know if certain untoward events had not happened there would not have been any difficulty in payment of the over-draft and you would perhaps by now have got payment, but circumstances made it otherwise and we are afraid it may take some time to get the dividend on our clients' holding in the Calcutta Industrial Bank shares and consequently there will be delay in paying you. Under the circumstances we are sure that you will consider the position and will not rush through anything.

The Official Liquidator has been appointed of the Calcutta Industrial Bank and as soon as he has ascertained the position our client may, if necessary, make an application to Court for permission to settle the accounts either by payment of dividends direct to you by Official Liquidator or by making some other arrangement in respect of the said shares held by you as security.

Yours faithfully,

Manuel, Agarwalla & Co."

And, the letter of the 9th of November was as follows :—

"The Liquidator, Marwari Commercial Bank, Limited (in liquidation).

Dear Sir,

Your notice No. 587 has been handed over to us by Messrs. Binayek Misser and Company with instructions to state in reply as follows :—

Our clients have pointed out to you from time to time the scheme by which you can realise the amount due from them to the Bank. The scheme was put forward in reply to your demand in June and July for settlement of accounts and a copy thereof was sent to your solicitors Messrs. Leslie & Hinds in reply to their letter of the 3rd of July 1923 as an enclosure to our letter of the 4th. Our clients state that they are willing to authorise you to receive payment direct from the Official Liquidator of all dividends and other payments that may be made by him in respect of our clients' holding of the Calcutta Industrial Bank shares which are held by you as security. By that process your money can be realized without any difficulty and our clients also will be relieved of great anxiety.

As Rai Bahadur Halwasiya is away from town our clients would request you to get the meeting adjourned for the present for about a fortnight.

If there be any bar to the course suggested you can make an application to that effect in Court or our clients can request the Liquidator to the Calcutta Industrial Bank, Ltd., to make the necessary application, or if you so desire our clients themselves can make an application to get the necessary order from Court. Under the circumstances our clients hope you will consider this proposal before you pass any other resolution.

Yours faithfully,

Manuel, Agarwalla & Co."

In view of the terms of these letters the conclusion is inevitable, in my judgment, that the plea that there was no consideration for the promissory notes is without any foundation and that it was merely inserted in the written statement for the purpose of delay. It, therefore, appears that the firm executed the promissory notes; the Defendant Chattu Lal Misser was a member of the firm, the Plaintiff Bank made advance to the firm, as stated in the plaint, and as the Defendants' attorneys admitted in the letters to which I have referred, the promissory notes were held by the Plaintiff Bank and were exhibited to the plaint. It therefore seems to me that, so far as the evidence was concerned, the Plaintiffs' case was complete.

One other matter remains to be considered. The written statement alleged that the Plaintiff Bank was a mere benamidar of the Calcutta Industrial Bank. But this was never suggested at the time the correspondence took place in 1923; and it, therefore, appears as if it were a mere after-thought and was inserted for the purpose of delay. In short, in my judgment, there seems to be no really triable issue in this case; and I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judge's order should be upheld. He gave the Defendants leave to defend on the conditions named in the order and, in default of the conditions being performed, directed that a decree should be made for the amount claimed.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the Plaintiff Bank took a preliminary point that no appeal would lie from the order of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose. My learned brother and I decided that an appeal would lie, but we postponed giving our reasons. The learned Counsel referred to the case of Sukhlal Chundermull v. Eastern Bank, Ltd. (1). In my judgment, that is no authority for the proposition which the learned Counsel was urging in this appeal. In the first place, it is to be noticed that the suit was brought under Or. 37 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the decision was dealing with the provisions of the Code and not with the Rules of the Court, upon which this matter depends. In the second place, it should be noticed that the matter which Mr. Justice Chitty was dealing with was an application by the Defendant under Or. 37 of the Code for leave to appear and defend the suit, and the order which the learned Judge made was as follows: "Upon the Defendant within a fortnight from the date hereof giving security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of this Court to the extent of the Plaintiff Bank's claim in this suit, he be at liberty to appear in and defend this suit." It was held that there was no appeal from such an order.

I have already read the order which the learned Judge made in this case. It is obvious that the terms of it are materially different from the terms of the order which was made by Mr. Justice Chitty. The order in this case was that upon security for a certain amount being given within a certain time, the Defendants should have leave to defend, but the order proceeded that in default of the Defendants giving security as aforesaid within the time aforesaid, a decree was to be drawn up.

The effect of that order was that if the security was not given, as directed, a decree would be drawn up as a matter of course without any further application to the learned Judge.

In my opinion, it was a judgment finally deciding that the Defendant was not to be allowed to defend the suit unless he complied with the conditions contained in the order. It further decided that, if he did not comply with the condition, a decree should be drawn up. For these reasons, in my opinion, the decision of the learned Judge was a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and that an appeal did lie from his judgment to this Court.

For the above-mentioned reasons I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs (one set) payable to the Plaintiff Bank.

Appeal No. 161.

The Appellant Bisseswar Lal Halwasiya desires to withdraw the appeal. The appeal is allowed to be withdrawn. He must pay the costs of the appeal (one set) to the Plaintiff Bank.

It was agreed upon terms settled by the learned Counsel representing the Plaintiff and Onkermull Shroff that Onkermull Shroff, who appeared in both appeals, having denied that he was a member of the firm of Binayek Misser & Co., should have unconditional leave to defend. There will therefore be an order that Onkermull Shroff do have unconditional leave to defend the suit.

BUCKLAND, J.—This is an appeal from orders made on an application under Chap. XIII A of the Rules of this Court for summary judgment.

The suit was to recover Rs. 64,90,900-7-11 on promissory notes executed by Binayek Misser & Co. in favour of the Plaintiff Bank.

The Defendants are alleged to be partners in that firm.

The Appellant entered appearance in person on the 11th of July 1924.

On the 21st of July 1924, his present attorneys also entered appearance and filed a written statement on his behalf.

On the 22nd of July a summons under Chap. XIII A was taken out by the Plaintiff Bank supported by the affidavit of the Liquidator to which certain correspondence between him and the attorneys for Binayek Misser & Co. was annexed. The Appellant and his co-Defendants filed counter-affidavits and the Liquidator filed an affidavit in reply and, these with the written statement of the Appellants were the materials before the learned Judge who on the 8th of August 1924 ordered that the Defendants should furnish security to an amount to be fixed by the Registrar of this Court within fourteen days from the date when the Registrar fixed such amount. The learned Judge further made provision for the subsequent proceedings in the suit and ordered that in default of the Defendants furnishing security within the time required the Liquidator should be at liberty to mention the matter before the Court for further directions.

On the 27th of August the matter was mentioned and the amount of the security fixed by the Registrar was modified, and the learned Judge made the second of the two orders appealed against requiring the Defendants to give security to the satisfaction of the Registrar to the extent of 8 lacs of rupees on or before the 12th of September and on such security being given they would have leave to defend the suit, and in default of the security it was provided that a decree should be drawn up against the Defendants for the sum claimed with costs on scale No. 1.

It is against this order that Chattu Lal Misser and Bisseswar Lal Halwasiya appealed. The latter has abandoned his appeal and as regards the Respondent Onkarmull Shroff who has appeared on both appeals, it has been agreed that he, who denies having been a member of the firm of Binayek Misser, shall have unconditional leave to defend. Hence there remains only Chattu Lal Misser's appeal to deal with.

For the Respondent Company it is argued that the order is not appealable and reference is made to Sukhlal Chunder- mull v. Eastern Bank, Ltd. (1). That was an appeal against an order giving the Defendant leave to defend a suit filed under Or. 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure conditionally upon his giving security. It was held that it was not a "judgment"—there was no adjudication on the claim—and, according to the well-known practice of the Court such suits filed under that order of the Code, whether or not leave to defend is granted, are set down for hearing on a subsequent date.

It has been argued that this order is similar though made under Chap. XIII A, r. 9. But that is not so. An order cannot be taken as having been made under one rule and therefore necessarily excluding reference to others. The conditional leave to defend is referable to r. 9, the judgment in default to r. 3. The latter involves an adjudication on the claim and makes the order a final judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. Without this, were such an order made under Chap. XIII A, I do not know that I should take the same view, but as it is nothing further remained to be done and in default of security a decree would be drawn up as a matter of course.

For the Appellant two points have been argued:—First, that the application offends against the proviso to r. 3 and is out of time, and next that the application is not in the form required by r. 3.

The proviso to r. 3 lays it down in effect that once a Defendant has entered appearance the Plaintiff may take out a summons, (a) without any limit of time if no written statement has been filed, (b) within 10 days of appearance being entered if a written statement has been filed.

If the 11th July is taken as the date from which the 10 days ran the summons was out of time. But the Appellant's attorneys gave the Plaintiff another opportunity by again entering appearance on the 21st July. It was quite unnecessary and filing a warrant of attorney would have sufficed, but having adopted such a course, the Appellant cannot fairly be heard to say that time ran from the 11th July and not from the date of the later appearance. The fact remains that appearance was entered on the 21st July and the Respondents are entitled to rest their case upon it.

As regards the 2nd point argued I am not prepared to say that the application as presented to the Court in the first instance complied with the rules as to the form of affidavit required.

But at that time the Appellant had not the courage of his later convictions. He might have declined to answer the affidavit and argued that the summons should be dismissed in limine, and very likely would have done so successfully. He and his co-Defendants, however, made ample amends for the defects of the Liquidator's affidavit and all lacunæ were fully supplied, and lest more should be required the Appellant has succeeded in establishing his own want of bond fides by an affidavit more conspicuous for concealment than for revelation of facts.

The learned Judge had ample materials before him on which to found his order, and to allow this appeal on the ground that the Liquidator's affidavit in support of the summons does not conform to the rules would be to subordinate substance and justice to form and technicality.

I concur in the order to be made.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 48 execution of decree against a Defendant more than 12 years after the original decree, but within 12 years of the appellate decree, if barred by limitation, when the said Defendant was not a party to the appeal—The decree of the trial Court, if merged in the appellate decree in respect of the said Defendant.

A decree was obtained against several Defendants, two of whom appealed, but a certain Defendant was not impleaded in the appeal. The appeal was dismissed. After several applications for execution, the decree-holder made the present application for execution more than 12 years after the date of the decree of the trial Court but within 12 years from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court:

Held—That in this case the decree of the trial Court did not merge in the decree of the Appellate Court, as the particular Defendant was not a party to the appeal and as such no order would have been made as against him by the Appellate Court by its decree. Therefore under the provisions of sec. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, the application for execution, made more than 12 years after the decree of the trial Court, was barred as against the said Defendant.

This was an appeal against the order of J. W. Nelson, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 17th of January 1924, affirming the order of Babu (1925 C. W. N. 78 (19 15).

Babu Charu Chandra Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The only question involved in this case is whether the execution of the decree is barred under sec. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree was obtained against several persons including the present Appellant who was Defendant No. 3 in the trial Court on the 7th July 1911. There was an appeal against that decree by two of the Defendants in the case, the present Appellant not being a party to it either as Appellant or Respondent. The appeal of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was dismissed on the 23rd December 1912. Several applications for execution of the decree had been made by the Plaintiff decree-holder for costs against the judgment-debtor. But the present application was made on the 13th July 1923, that is, more than 12 years after the decree passed against the Defendants to which Defendant No. 3, the present Appellant, was a party, but less than 12 years from the decree of the Appellate Court of the 23rd December 1912, to which the present Appellant was no party.

The contention on behalf of the Appellant is that if the decree-holder is executing the decree of the Appellate Court of the 23rd December 1912 it cannot be executed as against him because he was no party to the decree; but if it was the decree of the 7th July 1911 which the decree-holder seeks to execute, then it is barred by limitation under sec. 48, C. P. C.

AMIR ALI v. HARISH CHANDRA DAS.

It seems to us that the contention of the Appellant should be accepted. It is contended on behalf of the Respondent that the fact that there was an appeal against the decree of the 7th July 1911 gives him the right to execute the decree as against Defendant No. 3 counting the period of limitation from the date of the decree passed by the Appellate Court. Reliance has been placed on behalf of the Respondent in the case of Loke Nath Singh v Guju Singh (1). But that case proceeded upon the question whether the execution of the decree was barred or not having regard to the provisions of Art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. That case is not applicable to the present question as it depends on the provisions of sec. 48, C. P. C.

The only ground on which the Respondent can maintain his plea that the execution of the decree is not barred by limitation is that the decree of the trial Court had been merged in the decree of the Court of Appeal below. But the difficulty in his way is that the present Appellant was not a party to the appeal and consequently no order could have been made as against him by the Appellate Court by its decree. It cannot therefore be said that the decree of the trial Court was merged in the decree of the Appellate Court.

The appeal therefore must succeed and the order of the Court below directing execution to proceed as against the Appellant who was Defendant No. 3 in the original suit must be set aside.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in all Courts. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1570 OF 1923.

JAGADISH CHANDRA MUKERJI, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. RASIK MANDAL and ors, Defendants, Respondents.	GREAVES, J. B. B. GHOSE, J. 1925, 8, July.
---	---

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), sec. 17, sub-sec. (2), cl. (vi)—Registration—Solemnity in a rent suit creating a permanent and transferable right in a holding, if admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit, though unregistered—Solemnity incorporated in substance in the decree, if requires registration.

In a rent suit by a Hindu widow, a sole-nama was filed by which a permanent and transferable interest was created in a holding and the suit was decreed at an enhanced rent, the decree stating that the suit be decreed in terms of the sole-nama which had been filed. Subsequently on the sale of the holding by the tenant, the reversionary heir brought a suit for ejectment on the ground that the tenant had no transferable interest and that the solenama purporting to grant a transferable interest to the tenant was inadmissible for want of registration:

Held—That the decree in the previous suit in substance incorporated the solenama as part of the decree, as the decree could not have been passed without reference to the solenama. Further, the solenama, having been used only as an admission by the Plaintiff who had filed it on behalf of the widow, was admissible in evidence without registration.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Bhattacharjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 26th of February 1923, affirming the decree of Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury, Munsif, 2nd Court at Magura, dated the 26th of July 1921.

JAGADISH CHANDRA MUKERJI v. RASIK MA NDAL.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal and Babu Purna Chandra Chandra for the Appellant.

Babu Prafulla Kamal Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain lands on declaration of the Plaintiff's right to khas possession. These lands were previously in the occupation of a tenant named Adu Baroi under the owner Bhabani who died leaving his daughter Joy Durga as his heir. After that one Mati Lal purchased the holding of Adu in execution of a mortgage decree in 1900. Joy Durga brought a suit against Mati Lal at an enhanced rate of rent. This suit was compromised between the parties. Under the terms of the compromise the rent was enhanced and it was declared that Mati would have a permanent and transferable right in the land. In the year 1910 Mati sub-let the land to Defendants Nos. 2 and 3. In 1916 Mati sold the land to Defendant No. 1. The Plaintiff who succeeded to the landlord's interest in the property on the death of his mother Joy Durga in 1902 has brought this suit for ejectment on the ground that Mati had no transferable interest. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit for khas possession. It was held by the lower Appellate Court in confirmation of the decision of the trial Court that Mati had a transferable interest. It is argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that this was held with reference to a solenama which was ~~EX-121~~ but that the solenama was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. The solenama was filed in the rent suit brought by Joy Durga against Mati as we have already stated and the question is whether this solenama was incorporated in the decree or not. The decree stated that a solenama had been filed by the party and the suit was decreed in terms of the solenama in favour of the Plaintiff for one rupee. This in substance incorporated the solenama as part of the decree as no such decree could have been passed without reference to the solenama. If that is so, it was admissible in evidence without registration. Further, the Courts below have held that that document only contains the admission by the landlord. The present Plaintiff filed the petition of compromise on behalf of his mother and had also ratified the transaction and accepted rent in accordance with its terms since the death of his mother in 1902 till the date of the present suit. On these grounds it is not possible to say that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong.

The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

(ii)—Standardisation of rent—Improvement made by landlord to be taken into consideration—Landlord, if includes leases from landlord in proceedings between leases and sub-leases.

The fact that a building consists of several blocks does not take it out of the definition of premises in sec. 2 (e).

S. G. P. SINGH v. PROBODH KUMAR DAS.

Under sec. 15 the standard rent is to be fixed on the application by the landlord or the tenant and under proviso (ii) of cl. (e) the Controller shall not increase the rent by more than ten per cent. per annum on the amount expended on the improvement or structural alteration of the premises as provided in sec. 5. This implies that the expenditure to be taken into account must be made by the landlord who applies for standardisation of rent or against whom an application for standardisation has been made. Thus in proceedings for standardisation of the rent of premises which have been sublet at the instance of the sub-lessee the improvement made by the superior landlord cannot be taken into consideration.

These were Rules against the judgment of the President of the Tribunal, Calcutta Improvement Trust (S. C. Banerji, Esq.), dated the 13th June 1925, passed on appeal from a decision of the Rent Controller (B. Ganguly, Esq.), dated the 16th May 1924.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Amulya Charan Chatterjee and Babu Apurba Ch. Mukerji for the Petitioner in No. 1020 and for the Opposite Party in No. 818.

Babu Hira Lal Ganguly for the Opposite Party in No. 1020 and for the Petitioner in No. 818.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—These two Rules arise out of the same proceedings taken before the Rent Controller at the instance of a sub-tenant for fixing standard rent with regard to certain premises against his own landlord, the tenant under the superior landlord. These two persons will be called tenant and landlord henceforth.

The Rent Controller fixed the rent of the premises which is called premises No. 6 at Rs. 155 (one hundred and fifty-five) per month including the occupier's share of taxes as the standard rent. The landlord made an application for revision before the President of the Tribunal. The President framed several issues in his Court and he has fixed the standard rent at Rs. 230 (two hundred and thirty) per month inclusive of taxes. The landlord has obtained a Rule against the decision of the President; it is numbered 1020. The tenant has also obtained a Rule against the same decision which is Revision Case No. 818. It will be convenient to dispose of the Rule obtained by the landlord first. The arguments addressed on his behalf by his learned Advocate are three-fold. The first is that the subject-matter of these proceedings cannot be called premises within the meaning of sec. 2 (e) of the Rent Act and therefore standard rent could not be fixed for it. The contention is that the premises referred to does not consist of a building but several buildings. This argument is based upon the fact that on the western portion of the land leased to the tenant an old structure was pulled down to a certain extent and new structures were built in its place. This was done before the lease was given to the tenant. Both the Courts below rejected this argument. The learned President says with regard to one of the blocks that some old doors and windows have been replaced, a small verandah has been constructed and some other changes have been made. And he further says "that the building on the west of the courtyard was constructed on the site of an old structure. The evidence is that the western block has lower rooms than the main building and is used ordinarily as servants' quarters and kitchen." His finding is that the premises constitute one building and the fact that it consists of different blocks does not take it out of the definition of premises in the Rent Act. With this conclusion I entirely agree. It cannot be said because a house consists of different blocks, consisting of servants' quarters and offices, garage and the main building, that it is not premises within the meaning of the Act.

The second contention of the learned Advocate for the landlord is that the Rent Act does not apply to the premises in question as it was in the course of erection at the time of the commencement of the Rent Act as provided by sec. 15 of the Act. This, as the learned President has observed, is a pure question of fact and he has come to the conclusion upon the evidence that the premises in question was not either erected after the commencement of the Act, nor was it in the course of erection at the commencement of the Act. We cannot interfere with this finding in revision and the decision of the President of the Tribunal must be accepted.

The third point is rather complicated and it arises in this way, that the Rent Controller in fixing the standard rent of the premises in question takes into account the rent assessed by the Municipality in 1915 with regard to the premises in question as well as another holding which is No. 5. This was taken to be Rs. 110 (one hundred and ten). The Rent Controller finds that if in 1915 these two premises had been in the same condition as they are now the rent could have been Rs. 165 (one hundred and sixty-five) inclusive of taxes. Having come to this opinion he takes the fact into consideration that the rent of No. 5 in 1915 was assessed by the municipal authorities at Rs. 25 (twenty-five) and for No. 6, Rs. 85 (eighty-five) per month. Then he calculated that the present rent of No. 5 should be taken at Rs. 27 (twenty-seven) per month. Deducting that amount from what would be the standard rent of the two premises according to his view, which was Rs. 182 (one hundred and eighty-two) per month, he fixed the standard rent of No. 6 at Rs. 155 (one hundred and fifty-five) per month. As against this the tenant did not present any petition for revision to the President of the Tribunal but the landlord did. In disposing of this matter the President of the Tribunal did not take the municipal assessment of rent of Rs. 110 (one hundred and ten) as the basis for fixing the standard rent, but he took the actual rent received by the landlord which was Rs. 95 (ninety-five) for the two premises as the basis and from that he worked out the proportion which should be assessed for No. 6, that is, the premises in question, and he found that it ought to be Rs. 73 (seventy-three) per month; and on that figure the President added Rs. 150 (one hundred and fifty) on account of the expenditure on improvements and thereby he arrived at the figure Rs. 230 (two hundred and thirty) as the standard rent. The objection on behalf of the landlord is that he should have proceeded not upon the basis of the rent actually received in 1917, that is, Rs. 95 (ninety-five), but upon the basis taken by the Rent Controller, as the tenant did not object to that. This would only lead to a difference of Rs. 12 (twelve) per month over the rent fixed, assuming that the principle on which the standard rent has been fixed by the President was correct; but as I am going to state later on why this mode of fixing the standard rent adopted by the President cannot be accepted, it is unnecessary to decide this question. The Rule therefore obtained by the landlord should be discharged with costs, hearing-fee being assessed at five gold mohurs.

Now I come to the Rule obtained by the tenant and his objection is based on this :—The owner of the premises who is described as one Dalmia has spent a certain sum of money in making improvements and the President of the Tribunal found that it would amount to about Rs. 18,000 (eighteen thousand). The President was of opinion that this was the expenditure made by the landlord within the meaning of sec. 5 and sec. 15, sub-sec. (3), cl. (e) of the Rent Act and he has added Rs. 150 (one hundred and fifty) per month on the basis of the expenditure made on improvements, on the rent payable by the tenant. The contention on behalf of the tenant is that the expenditure was not made by his landlord and therefore those sections of the Rent Act do not apply to the present case. It seems to me that this contention is sound. The definition of landlord includes a tenant who sub-lets any premises; therefore the person from whom the sub-lessee took his lease was his landlord although he might be himself a tenant of a third person. It has not been found that his landlord has incurred any expense on the improvements and therefore sec. 5 of the Rent Act does not apply to him. It is contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that sec. 15, sub-sec. (3), cl. (e) does not refer to any improvement made by the landlord but refers to a change in the condition of the premises and therefore if any change is made in the condition of the premises by whoever it may be, that should be taken into consideration in fixing the standard rent. That, however, can hardly be a proper construction of the section because the sec. 15 commences with reference to the fact that the standard rent should be fixed on the application by the landlord or tenant; and also referring to proviso (ii) of cl. (e) it will be found that it is provided that the Controller shall not increase the rent by more than ten per cent. per annum on the amount spent on the improvement or structural alteration of the premises as provided for in sec. 5. This implies that the expenditure to be taken into account must be made by the landlord who applies for standardization of rent or against whom an application for standardization has been made. In my opinion therefore the learned President was not correct in taking into consideration the expenditure made by Dalmia for the purpose of making improvements in the premises in fixing the standard rent.

It is contended by the learned Advocate for the Opposite Party that the superior landlord would be entitled to have the expenditure made for the improvements taken into consideration in an application made by that landlord for fixing the standard rent as against himself and it would lead to anomalous results if the expenditure for improvements is not taken into consideration in fixing the standard rent between himself and his sub-tenants. It is not necessary for us to consider in this case whether the result would be anomalous in any way. It seems to me upon the plain construction of the sections of the Rent Act that the expenditure made by a third person cannot be taken into consideration in fixing the standard rent as between these two contending parties before us. This Rule therefore is made absolute. The standard rent fixed by the President of the Tribunal is set aside and the decision of the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent at Rs. 155 (one hundred and fifty-five) per month including the occupier's share of the taxes is restored. The applicant will be entitled to his costs—hearing-fee three gold mohurs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 85 OF 1921.

GREAVES, J.	}	BECHU MIA, Accused,
DUVAL, J.		Petitioner,
1924,		v.
Heard, 3, April.		ANWAR NABI,
Judgment,		Complainant, Opposite
11, April.		Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 436—Further enquiry, nature of, which can be ordered—Complaint dismissed under sec. 203 after enquiry under sec. 202—Further enquiry after summoning accused, if can be ordered.

Where on receipt of a complaint, a Magistrate holds an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., and dismisses the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., the Sessions Judge under sec. 436, Cr. P. C., can only direct a full and proper enquiry of the same nature as the Magistrate has already held, and cannot direct a further enquiry after summoning the accused.

The practice of allowing accused to be represented in an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., has been condemned.

This was a Rule issued on the 28th January 1924 against an order passed in revision by the Sessions Judge of Hoogly (H. C. Liddell, Esq.), on the 19th January 1924, directing the Petitioner (accused) to be summoned under secs. 474, 204, 109 and 114, I. P. C., and be put on his trial before some other Magistrate.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gregory and Babu Narendra Nath Chowdhury for the Petitioner.

Mr. Suhrawardy, Babus Satindra Nath Mukherjee and Sarat Chandra Roy for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

DUVAL, J.—In this matter one Anwar

Nabi made a complaint before the District Magistrate of Howrah against three persons under secs. 474 and 204, read with secs. 109 and 114 of the Indian Penal Code, on the 17th September last. It appears he had previously brought a civil suit against Bechu, accused No. 1, in respect of the price of certain skins and his suit had been dismissed. His allegation in his complaint was that the present accused had kept back the genuine books of account in that suit and had used in the defence of the same fabricated books. He therefore made this complaint and applied for a search warrant. A search warrant was issued and certain books seized; but on the 3rd October the Magistrate after examining the complainant on oath and hearing the parties dismissed the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C. Anwar Nabi then moved the Sessions Judge against the order of dismissal and on the 24th November last the Sessions Judge after hearing Counsel set aside the order and remanded the case for further enquiry, holding that "from the record it seems clear that there is a good prima facie case under secs. 204 and 474, I. P. C."

The Magistrate on receipt of this order of remand did not summon the accused but after permitting both parties to examine certain books and hearing their Counsel again dismissed the case under sec. 203 on 14th January 1924. The Sessions Judge was moved again. He held that the delay in issuing process was unjustifiable and on 19th January on an ex parte application ordered further enquiry by some other Magistrate after summoning the accused. A Rule was then obtained from this Court on the ground that this order was passed without jurisdiction.

It appears that on both occasions when the Magistrate was purporting to be holding an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., the accused were before him by pleader, though they had not been summoned, and their arguments were heard—a procedure which has several times been condemned by this Court. Cf. the case of Bhim Lal Shaha v. Emperor (1). The only point, however, before us is whether the Sessions Judge can, when ordering a further enquiry in respect of a complaint which has been dealt with by the Magistrate under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., direct that the accused be summoned or whether he is restricted to only making an order for a further enquiry of the same nature as that which has been already made, i.e., in this case a further enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C.

In this connection the law was laid down by the Chief Justice Sir Comer Petheram in the case of Haridas Sanyal v. Saritulla (2) as follows :—

“ In cases under secs. 200-203 it would appear that if the Magistrate does not believe the complainant and thereupon without taking any further step dismisses the complaint, the revising officer may, under sec. 437 (now sec. 436) direct that by way of further enquiry he shall cause an investigation to be made, or if one has been made which he considers insufficient or unsatisfactory or if he considers that the complainant has not been sufficiently examined, may order that the complainant be re-called and his examination continued. But it is difficult to see how a further enquiry can be ordered in any but one of these three cases, as it is clear that the enquiry is preliminary to the issue of process and the next step to take, if the enquiry as far as collection of materials is complete, is the issue of process.” This dictum and the decision in that case appear to me to be authority for holding that the Sessions Judge when he orders a further enquiry can only order an enquiry of the same nature as the Magistrate has already held. In the present case the Magistrate has only examined the complainant and heard arguments as to certain entries in certain books and this is not in my opinion a proper enquiry within the meaning of sec. 202, Cr. P. C. But I do not hold that at this stage the Sessions Judge can direct the accused to be summoned : he can only order a full and proper enquiry under sec. 202 according to law. I therefore set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and remand the matter to him to consider again whether such further enquiry under sec. 202 should be ordered so that the Magistrate may, after the collection of materials is complete, come to a finding whether process shall issue.

Hindu law—Widow, decree against, if binds reversioners—Conditions necessary—Dispossession of widow—Suit for recovery, limitation for—Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sec. 129—Act XV of 1877 Art. 141.

death. But she represents the estate in suits brought by her or against her for possession of the estate or any part of it, and she and the reversioners are equally bound by any final decree which a Court makes in such a suit provided that the suit was fought out according to law and was not collusive or fraudulent. When the suit was not collusive, it did not make any difference that in resisting the suit she was actuated by a purely personal and selfish object, if she in fact and in law represented the estate as well as her own interest as a Hindu widow.

KATAMA NATCHIER v. THE RAJAH OF SHIVAGUNGA (3) and other cases referred to.

Where the widow made over the estate to a person whom she had adopted as son to her husband in 1862:

Held—That although the adoption was in law invalid, there could be no recovery without displacing the apparent adoption by a suit which under Art. 129 of Act IX of 1871 stood barred after the expiry of 12 years from 1862, i.e., in 1874, long before Art. 141 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877 came into force.

JAGADAMBA CHOWDHRAIN v. DAKHINA MOHAN (10) followed.

These were consolidated appeals (Nos. 122-130 of 1923) from a decree, dated the 15th November 1916, of the High Court at Madras, which modified a decree, dated the 4th September 1908, of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam.

The appeals arise out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs as the reversioners of Arunachala, the last male owner of the Kulikara estate, who died in 1849, claiming possession of the estate on the death of his widow Chokkammal in 1902.

Arunachala died in 1849. In 1862 Chokkammal adopted Alagusundara who entered into possession of the whole of Arunachala's estate excepting certain properties retained by Chokkammal for maintenance.

Alagusundara died in 1864 leaving a widow Murugathal.

Murugathal adopted one Thiagaraja, who enjoyed the properties until 1876, when he appears to have been dispossessed by Arunachala's widow, Chokkammal. Thiagaraja died in 1881, leaving a widow who died in 1882. Murugathal, who then became the heiress of her adopted son Thiagaraja, instituted Original Suit No. 9 of 1887 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, against Chokkammal and others.

In her plaint, she alleged that her husband, Alagusundara, was adopted in 1849 by the late husband of Chokkammal, that he was in possession and enjoyment of the suit properties till he died in 1864, that, afterwards, her adopted son Thiagaraja enjoyed them till he died in 1881, that Thiagaraja's widow died issueless in 1882, and that she, the Plaintiff, was in possession and enjoyment of the suit properties till 1884, when Chokkammal forcibly took possession of them. She prayed for a decree putting her into possession of the suit properties.

Chokkammal, in her defence, pleaded, inter alia, that the Plaintiff's husband was never adopted by her husband, that she was in possession of the suit properties since the death of her husband thirty-eight years ago, that the Plaintiff was never in possession, and that she did not forcibly dispossess the Plaintiff in 1884.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit found that Alagusundara was not adopted by Chokkammal's husband in 1849, but that he was adopted by Chokkammal in 1862, that the adoption was invalid under the Hindu law, that Alagusundara, and after his death Thiagaraja, his adopted son, were in possession of the estate to the exclusion of Chokkammal for a period of eighteen years from 1862 to 1881, and that such possession was clearly adverse and conferred a valid title upon Thiagaraja.

On appeal by Chokkammal the High Court confirmed the findings as to the adoption and adverse possession.

Murugathal thereafter retained possession until her interest was sold in execution and purchased by the 3rd Respondent to the present appeal. Chokkammal died in 1902, and the Plaintiffs thereupon claimed possession as reversioners of Arunachala.

The Subordinate Judge made a decree for possession against some of the Defendants, but his decision was reversed by the Madras High Court which held that the claim of the Plaintiffs was barred by limitation. Both Courts in India held that the decision in suit No. 9 of 1887 did not operate as res judicata, and the adoption of Alagusundara was invalid.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee and the arguments of Counsel are cited at length.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C., Messrs. Wallach and Pillai for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.—The Indian Courts have held that the adoption of Alagusundara was invalid but Murugathal was given a decree for possession of certain portions of the estate by the High Court on the ground of adverse possession.

The transferees from Murugathal would only have title during Chokkammal's life-time. Adverse possession could only operate as against Chokkammal. It could not operate against the Appellants who were all minors when the present suit was instituted, and therefore not in existence when the right to sue to set aside the adoption is said to have become barred.

The present suit is governed by Art. 141 of the 2nd Sch. of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. It has been held by the judgment under appeal that the suit was barred before the Act of 1877 came into force, under Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871, and that the Appellants' rights are extinguished by sec. 29 of that Act.

But the suit here was not to set aside an adoption. That was unnecessary, for Alagusundara's adoption had already been held to be invalid in the 1887 suit. Under the Limitation Act of 1871 a title could be acquired against the widow by adverse possession but no title was obtained against the reversioners. That is the way in which the 1871 Act differs from the Acts of 1859 and 1877 and it makes cases decided under those Acts inapplicable.

This is not a case of adverse possession by a trespasser but of alienation by a widow; that is clear from the facts found in the 1887 suit. That suit only decided that possession should be restored to Alagusundara's widow, i.e., all it gave her was a right to the property during Chokkammal's life-time.

Under the Hindu law the reversioner is entitled to sue for the estate on the death of the widow and it is submitted that no bar to that right has been interposed by the legislature.

[They referred to the following cases in addition to those set out in the judgment.]

Mr. Parikh for the 1st Defendant Sri-rangath Anni adopted the above argument.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for Defendants Nos. 7 and 8, transferees from Murugathal.—The rights of the reversioners to obtain possession were barred before the passing of the Limitation Act of 1877 and no right of suit could be revived by that Act. In any event no such right can exist after the decision in the 1887 suit to which Chokkammal was a party and in which she represented the estate.

This has been laid down in a series of cases ever since the Shivagunga case (3).

See Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 643.

The present case is on all fours with the case of Hurrinath Chatterji v. Mohunt Mothoor M. Goswami (7), which was not decided under the Limitation Act, 1859.

The fact that the decree binds the estate is a conception of Hindu law quite apart from the statute of limitations.

The estate was in the possession of Alagusundara from 1860 to 1876 under an apparently valid adoption and the rights of the reversioners became barred under the 1871 Act and could not be revived.

Appasami Oddayar v. Subramanya Oddayar (18).

The reversioners are barred not through anything done by the widow but owing to their own failure to assert their title.

Mr. Lowndes, K. C. in reply.—Admittedly there was no bar of adverse possession against the reversioners under the 1859 Act because 12 years had not been completed under that Act when the 1871 Act came into being.

Once that Act becomes law adverse possession against the widow does not affect the reversioners. The contention that if adverse possession has crystallised into a decree and therefore the reversioners are bound is an anomaly and is contrary to justice, equity and good conscience.

The Shivagunga case (3) is only applicable where a question of title is being litigated.

The act of Chokkammal in putting Alagusundara in possession was a voluntary act and was tantamount to an alienation by her.

Time cannot run against the reversioner until the death of the widow because then only can the reversioner be ascertained.

VAITHIALINGA MUDALIAR v. SRIRANGATH ANNI.

Subordinate Judge on the 2nd July 1905, by three Plaintiffs, who were reversioners of Arunachala Mudaliar, against thirty-eight Defendants for the possession of lands which were alleged by the Plaintiffs to be lands of the Kulikara estate in the District of Tanjore and for mesne profits. The title of the Plaintiffs to sue was denied by the Defendants on various grounds, of which those which are now important and have to be considered are whether the suit was not barred by the result of a litigation which began in 1887 and ended with a final decree in 1892, and whether the suit was not otherwise barred by the law of limitation.

The Kulikara estate admittedly belonged to Arunachala when he died in 1849. He was then about twenty-two years of age. The family to which he belonged were Hindus of the Sudra caste. He had been adopted by Vithialinga Mudaliar, a relation, who was descended from an ancestor from whom Arunachala also was descended. The Plaintiffs are the three sons of Chokkappa Mudaliar, who was the youngest of three brothers by birth, that is, natural brothers, of Arunachala. Arunachala died childless, leaving a widow, Chokkammal, who died on the 25th December 1902, within twelve years before this suit was instituted. She was a Defendant to the suit with which the litigation of 1887 commenced. It will be necessary to refer at some length to that litigation. The following pedigree will show Arunachala and his natural brothers and some other persons :—

Arunachala, as whose reversioners the Plaintiffs claim to be, had before his death directed his wife Chokkammal to adopt as a son to him his natural brother Alagusundara. In 1862 Chokkammal did as a fact adopt Alagusundara as a son to her late husband. Alagusundara was a younger natural brother of Arunachala, and at the time of the adoption there was no one living who could give him in adoption. As a matter of Hindu law the adoption was invalid.

In 1862 Chokkammal, having adopted Alagusundara, put him in possession of the immoveable property now in question, reserving to herself for her maintenance some of the immoveable property to which she was entitled as the widow of Arunachala. With the property which she reserved for her maintenance this suit is not concerned. There can be no doubt that in 1862 Chokkammal did put Alagusundara in possession of the property now in question. In March 1862, she presented an undated petition to the Tahsildar of Nannilam, the Revenue Officer, in which she stated that, with the consent of her husband, she had adopted Alagusundara, his natural younger brother, and, with the exception of certain villages which she named, she had made him proprietor of all the land and other properties, etc., standing in her name, and prayed that, with the exception of the three villages, "the mīras" (ownership) might be transferred to him and all the sircar proceedings might be passed in his name.

Alagusundara continued to be in possession of the property of which Chokkammal had put him in possession in 1862 until he died in 1864, and had dealt with the property which had been transferred to him as an absolute owner would have done. Upon his death in 1864 his elder brother Kaliasundara, on the 18th July 1864, presented a deed of consent to the Tahsildar of Nannilam praying for the transfer to the name of Thiagaraja of the property which stood in the name of Alagusundara, and the mīras was transferred to him. Thiagaraja was by birth a son of Kaliasundara and had been adopted by Alagusundara. He was in 1864 about two years of age.

From the 18th July 1864, Kaliasundara, until he died in September 1876, was referred to in all documents relating to the property as the guardian of Thiagaraja, who was in possession of the property in question from 1864 until he died in 1881, and during that time the management of the affairs of the family was carried on solely in his name. Upon the death of Thiagaraja in 1881 the mīras which had stood in his name was altered to the name of his widow Kamalath, a girl of about 12 years of age, who died in 1882. Upon the death of Kamalath in 1882, Murugathal, the mother by adoption of Thiagaraja, took possession of the property in question for a Hindu widow's interest and held it until 1884, when Chokkammal forcibly ejected her.

On the 9th February 1887, Murugathal brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nagapatam against Chokkammal and others, in which she claimed a decree for the possession of the properties now in question, alleging in her plaint that her husband Alagusundara had been the adopted son of Arunachala, and that the properties which she claimed belonged to him as such adopted son, and had been enjoyed by him from 1862 until he died in 1864; that after his death her adopted son Thiagaraja had enjoyed them until he died in 1881, and after him his widow, Kamalath, got them according to Hindu law and she died childless in 1882, and since her death she, Murugathal, got them under Hindu law and enjoyed them until 1884, when Chokkammal forcibly took possession of them and enjoyed them adversely to her. Chokkammal in her written statement in that suit denied Murugathal's title, alleged that she, Chokkammal, had been in possession of the property in question for 38 years from the death of her husband Arunachala in 1849, and denied that Alagusundara had been adopted. Several issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge in that suit, who found that Alagusundara was adopted as a son to Arunachala in 1862 by Chokkammal, who had the authority of her husband to make the adoption, that the adoption was invalid according to Hindu law, that Thiagaraja was adopted by Murugathal under the authority of her husband, but that the course of conduct of Chokkammal and the change of position of Alagusundara as the result of his adoption made it inequitable to hold that he had not title to the property, and that the putting him in possession of the property in question and allowing him to manage it for his own purposes substantially operated as a gift of the property to him. The Subordinate Judge in that suit also held that Murugathal's claim of adverse possession of the miras for twelve years was established, and on the 18th December 1889, he gave her a decree for possession of the property which she claimed. From that decree of the Subordinate Judge the suit of 1887 went on appeal by Chokkammal to the High Court at Madras. The learned Judges of the High Court held that Alagusundara's adoption was invalid, but holding that Murugathal's claim of adverse possession for twelve years was established, by their decree of the 17th August 1892, dismissed Chokkammal's appeal. Chokkammal did not appeal from that decree of the High Court, and it became final.

It is necessary to consider what was Chokkammal's position as a Hindu widow and how far her acts could, according to Hindu law, bind the reversioners to her husband. On Arunachala's death in 1849 she became entitled to the full beneficial enjoyment of the estate which had been his at the time of his death. As Mr. Mayne, in para. 605 of his "Hindu Law and Usage" correctly, in their Lordships' opinion, said:—

"It was at one time common to speak of a widow's estate as being one for life. But this is wholly incorrect. It would be just as untrue to speak of the estate of a father under the Mitakshara law as being one for life. Hindu law knows nothing of estates for life, or in tail, or in fee. It measures estates, not by duration, but by use. The restrictions upon the use of an estate inherited by a woman are similar in kind to those which limit the powers of a male holder, but different in degree."

The Hindu widow has not power to make a gift of the estate. Handing over the possession of the estate to a son whom she has validly adopted to her deceased husband is not making a gift of the estate to him. The estate became his on his adoption if he was validly adopted. She has no power to sell or assign the estate except for necessity, so as to bind her husband's reversioners after her death. But she represents the estate in suits brought by her or against her for possession of the estate or any part of it, and she and the reversioners are equally bound by any final decree which a Court makes in such a suit provided that the suit was fought out according to law and was not collusive or fraudulent.

In the suit of 1887 Chokkammal was no doubt personally interested to defeat Murugathal's claim for the possession of lands which had been in her own possession as the widow of Arunachala from 1849 until 1862, but although her object in resisting Murugathal's claim was probably a purely personal and selfish object, she did, in fact and in law in that suit, represent the estate as well as her own interests as a Hindu widow. The suit of 1887 was not a collusive suit; it was regularly and according to due procedure at law fought out in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and in the High Court.

A protracted argument was submitted to the Board on the question whether under Hindu law adverse possession against a widow in possession of an estate for a Hindu widow's interest bars the reversioner. While it is not necessary in the view which will later be announced by the Board on the question of limitation in this case to make any formal pronouncement upon this point, it may be convenient to say that the authorities referred to were as follows:—In Goluckmonee Dabee v. Degumber Dey (1), which was decided in 1852, Sir Lawrence Peel, who was the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, said:—

(1) Unreported. Decided in 1852.

VAITHIALINGA MUDALIAR v. SRIRANGATH ANNI.

"It has been invariably considered for many years that the widow" (speaking of the widow as heir) "fully represents the estate, and it is also settled law that adverse possession which bars her, bars the heir after her, which would not be the case if she were a mere tenant for life, as known to the English law." [See the reference to that case in the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Nobin Ch. Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (2)].

In Katama Natchier v. The Rajah of Shivagunga (3), which was decided by the Board in 1863, the Board, consisting of Knight Bruce, L. J., Sir Edward Ryan, and Turner, L. J., the assessors being Sir Lawrence Peel and Sir James W. Colville, all being eminent lawyers, and three of them having had judicial experience in India, Lord Justice Turner delivered the considered judgment of the Board, and in it said, at page 603, as follows:—

"It seems, however, to be necessary, in order to determine the mode in which this appeal ought to be disposed of, to consider the question whether the decree of 1847, if it had become final in Anga Mootoo Natchier's lifetime, would have bound those claiming the Zemindari in succession to her. And their Lordships are of opinion that, unless it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or, in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground, it would have been an effectual bar to any new suit in the Zillah Court by any person claiming in succession to Anga Mootoo Natchier. For, assuming her to be entitled to the Zemindari at all, the whole estate would for the time be vested in her, absolutely for some purposes, though, in some respects, for a qualified interest; and until her death it could not be ascertained who would be entitled to succeed. The same principle which has prevailed in the Courts of this country as to tenants in tail representing the inheritance would seem to apply to the case of a Hindoo widow, and it is obvious that there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow."

The declaration as to Hindu law which their Lordships have quoted from the considered judgment of the Board, which was delivered by Lord Justice Turner in 1863, has in the present appeal been objected to on the ground that it was obiter. The following cases however were referred to as showing that the doctrine there set forth was in accord with the course of judicial decisions.

Their Lordships will first refer to the case, Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (2), which came before a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, 1867, in which the declaration of the Board in the Shivagunga case (3) to which their Lordships have referred was accepted as a correct statement of the Hindu law to which it related and was applied to the case before the Full Bench. The facts of the case before the Full Bench are not fully stated in the order of reference to the Full Bench, but they were as follows: One Ramdoollub Chuckerbutty died possessed of an estate consisting of lands leaving two sons, two daughters and his widow, Dhone Mala. The two sons died without issue in the life-time of the widow, and upon their death the widow, Dhone Mala, became entitled to the possession of the respective estates of the sons, but the Defendant in that suit, a stranger, and as a trespasser, took possession of the estate more than twelve years before the suit, and the widow never obtained possession. Upon the death of the widow, sons of the daughters, who were the reversioners to their uncle's estate, brought the suit for possession, which was before the Full Bench in second appeal. The first Appellate Court had dismissed the suit as not brought within time, that is, within twelve years from the time when the Defendant had wrongfully taken possession, and the question before the Full Bench was whether the suit was barred by limitation or whether the reversioners could sue upon the death of the widow, Dhone Mala. The Full Bench held that the cause of action arose when the Defendant had taken possession and that the suit was time barred. The Full Bench was an exceptionally strong Bench of Judges, who had much experience in cases involving considerations of Hindu law. Their Lordships will give extracts from the judgments which were delivered in the Full Bench, as those judgments appear to their Lordships to confirm the declaration as to Hindu law which they have quoted from the judgment of the Board in the Shivagunga case (3) and to have a direct bearing on the appeal before the Board, and are very instructive.

In delivering his judgment in that Full Bench case, with which Seton-Karr, J., concurred, Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., after referring to Sir Lawrence Peel's judgment already mentioned, said:—

"It was also held by the Privy Council in the Shivagunga case (3), that in the absence of fraud or collusion a decision against a widow, with regard to her deceased husband's estate, would be binding upon the reversionary heirs. . . . If the female heir in the present case had sued the wrong doer, and without fraud or collusion had failed to make out her case to turn him out of possession, the reversionary heirs would have been bound by the decision. I am assuming that they are not claiming through the female heir."

Farther on Sir Barnes Peacock said:

"It is said that the reversionary heirs could not sue (for possession) during the lifetime of the widow, and that therefore they ought not to be barred by any adverse holding against the widow at a time when they could not sue. But when we look at the widow as a representative, and see that the reversionary heirs are bound by decrees relating to her husband's estate which are obtained against her without fraud or collusion, we are of opinion that they are also bound by limitation, by which she, without fraud or collusion, is barred."

Jackson, J., in his judgment, said:

"I entirely concur in the opinion of the Chief Justice that the Plaintiff (the reversionary heir) was barred in the present case. . . . It has been distinctly held by the Privy Council in the Shivagunga case (3), that a decision fairly arrived at without fraud or collusion in the presence of a Hindu widow in possession of the estate will bind reversionary heirs. That being so decided, it appears to me impossible to escape the conclusion that an adverse possession which barred the widow will also bar the heirs, and in that opinion we are fully and strongly supported by the decisions of the late Supreme Court in the cases to which his Lordship the Chief Justice has referred."

Phear, J., in his judgment, said:

"I too desire to avoid pledging myself to all the illustrations which have fallen from the Chief Justice; but with this exception, I concur entirely in the reasoning which he has given in support of his conclusions, and I concur also in the remarks which have been made by Mr. Justice Jackson. I will add that it seems to me that when a reversionary (Hindu) heir succeeds to the property of his ancestor on the death of an intervening female heir, he takes substantially the same proprietary right as she enjoyed, and no more, though doubtless she was fettered in a way that he is not, with regard to the dealings with the property, viz, her alienations are often liable to be avoided by him when he succeeds to the right of succession."

Macpherson, J., in his judgment, said :

"I also concur in the proposed answer. But a very great difference exists between the case immediately before us and the case in which a mother or other Hindu female having an estate similar to that of a childless widow has herself alienated property belonging to the estate which she has taken as heiress, without sufficient reason for making such alienation. In the latter case, the alienation is good as against her, and so far as her own life interest is concerned. Therefore, in fact, no cause of action necessarily arises at all with respect to her alienation so long as she lives. The cause of action does not arise until her death, when the reversioner's cause of action for the first time accrues. In the case before us, the property having never reached the hands of the mother (the Hindu widow) at all, having been throughout held adversely to her, the cause of action (of the reversioner) accrued in the mother's lifetime, and therefore a suit to recover possession, by whomsoever it may be brought, is barred unless instituted within twelve years from the commencement of the adverse possession."

In Aumirtolall Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter (4), the decision of the Full Bench at Calcutta in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (2) was cited in argument, and Sir Barnes Peacock, in delivering the judgment of the Board, affirmed that decision.

In Jugol Kishore v. Maharajah Jotindra Mohun Tagore (5), which was before the Board in 1884, where a Hindu widow's right, title and interest in property had been sold in execution of a money decree, the Board, without a suggestion of dissent from the ruling, said, at page 73,

"It was held in the Shivagunga case (3) that although a widow has for some purposes only a partial interest, she has for other purposes the whole estate vested in her; and that in a suit against a widow in respect of the estate the decision is binding upon the reversionary heir." The Board also said :

"If the suit is simply for a personal claim against the widow, then merely the widow's qualified interest is sold (in execution of the decree) and the reversionary interest is not bound by it (the sale). If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the estate, or for a cause which is not a mere personal cause of action against the widow, then the whole estate passes."

In Partab Narain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (6), which was before the Board in 1884, the Board said, at page 207 :—

"It is sufficient for the present purpose to hold that, until she had appointed another to be owner and representative, the Maharanee's estate in the taluk was sufficient to constitute her the full representative of it in the former suit. Her estate was at least as large as that of a Hindu widow in her husband's property. What was said by this Board of the widow's estate in the Shivagunga case (3) is applicable to hers."

In Hurrinath Chatterji v. Mohunt Mothoor Mohun Goswami (7), which came before the Board in 1893, it was held that the rule in the Shivagunga case (3) to the effect that an adverse decree against a Hindu widow binds those claiming in succession applies equally to the case of the daughter. It had been argued in that case that the adverse title alleged was founded on something which was independent of limitation, and that the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, let the reversionary heir sue within twelve years from the time when his right to possession accrued. With reference to that argument, Lord Watson, at page 188, said :—

“ But you must show that the new law gives a right of action to a reversioner notwithstanding that the widow's right of possession had been extinguished by decree.”

Owing to the fact that it did not appear from the judgment of the Board when Pearimoni, who was the second wife of Ramahundun Goswami, had died, beyond the fact that she was living when he died in 1847, there was some hesitation in referring to that case in the argument of this appeal. Mr. DeGruyther has, however, shown from the Appeal Record of that case, which is preserved in the Privy Council Office, that Pearimoni died in 1855.

In Chaudhari Risal Singh v. Bulwant Singh (8), which was before the Board in 1915, Chaudhari Risal Singh, alleging that he was the reversionary heir of Jagat Prakash Singh, brought a suit against Bulwant Singh for possession of immoveable property known as the Landhaura estate. The property there claimed had belonged to Raja Raghubir Singh until he died childless in 1868. Raghubir Singh left a widow, Rani Dharam Kunwar, who bore to him a posthumous son, Jagat Prakash Singh, who died in 1870. Rani Dharam Kunwar had the authority of her husband to make successive adoptions. In 1877 she adopted to her husband a boy who died within three years after he had been adopted, and then she adopted another boy, who died in 1885, and in 1890 she adopted Bulwant Singh, the Defendant to the suit. She continued in possession of the property, alleging that her husband Raghubir Singh had by his Will left it to her for her life. After a time Rani Dharam Kunwar and Bulwant Singh quarrelled. She was claiming a right to manage the property during her life; he was claiming his full rights as an adopted son. The result was that, on the 7th January 1905, Rani Dharam Kunwar brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur against Bulwant Singh, in which she claimed to have it declared that she had no power to adopt Bulwant Singh and had never validly adopted him, and to have her registered deed of adoption, in accordance with which she had adopted him, declared void and ineffectual against her. He alleged that Rani Dharam Kunwar had power to adopt him, and had validly adopted him. The Subordinate Judge, holding that Rani Dharam Kunwar was estopped from denying that she had validly adopted Bulwant Singh, dismissed her suit. She appealed to the High Court at Allahabad, and the High Court, also holding that Rani Dharam Kunwar was estopped, dismissed her appeal. Thereupon she appealed to His Majesty in Council. The Board in that appeal considered the evidence in that suit, and having come to the conclusion that Rani Dharam Kunwar had validly adopted Bulwant Singh and that her appeal should be dismissed, advised His Majesty accordingly. In the judgment the Board, at page 178, said :—

“ There can be no doubt in their Lordships' opinion that Rani Dharam Kunwar in her suit against Bulwant Singh did, notwithstanding the personal estoppel under which she laboured, represent the estate on the question of fact as to whether Bulwant Singh had or had not been validly adopted, and that she represented the estate within the meaning of the rule in Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shivagunga (3). The principle of law to be applied in such cases was, their Lordships consider, correctly summarized by Banerji, J., in his judgment in this case, thus: 'Where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in a female heir, a decree fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate is, in the absence of fraud or collusion, binding on the reversionary heir.' It cannot be said that there had not been a fair trial by the Board in 1912 of the right in the suit of Rani Dharani Kunwar against Bulwant Singh. The right in that suit was his right to the estate as a son validly adopted to Raja Raghubir Singh."

Upon the other side it was asserted the principle of the Shivagunga case (3) might have been applied and had not been applied in the case of Runchordas Vandrawandas v. Parvatibhai (9), which came before the Board in 1899. The suit in that case was brought on the 21st December 1888, against Vandrawandas and the Advocate-General of Bombay by Cursondas Govindjee as the heir-at-law of Kallhanji Sewji, who had died on the 6th January 1869, leaving two widows - Cooverhai, who died 1871, and Nenavahoo, who died in 1888. Kallianji Sewji had made a Will, which was proved on the 2nd March 1869, by three executors, who were trustees, of whom the first Defendant to the suit was at the date of the suit the sole survivor. The three trustees were appointed by the testator as trustees for dharam—that is, to make gifts for charitable or religious purposes. The Will contained the following clause: "As to the estates which have been given by me to my wives, they are to enjoy the rent of the said estates during their natural lives, and on the death of my wives the said estates are to revert to my dharam, and whatsoever income may be derivable from the said estates is to be expended for my dharam." The main question in the suit was whether the gift for charitable or religious purposes was void for vagueness and uncertainty, and the High Court at Bombay and the Board in appeal held that it was void and that the trustees took no interest under the Will. The suit was brought after the death of Nenavahoo.

It appears to their Lordships that part of the property claimed by the reversioner had been property of the respective widows as their stridhan, as to which there was some question as to the "rights of the heir." and that other parts of the property claimed was property which had been in the possession of the widows, to which the reversionary heir, the Plaintiff, in the ordinary course, was clearly entitled and that the Board was considering how an account, which the Courts below had ordered to be prepared, should be worded so as to show those two classes of property.

The defence of limitation was raised, but the Board held that it did not apply, saying:—

"It is not necessary to consider what might be the case if the widows or the survivor of them were suing, as the Plaintiff does not derive his right from or through them, and the extinguishment of their right would not extinguish his."

It has been maintained that the Board was not intending to discredit the rule in the Shivagunga case (3). What the Board was considering was the wording of an account which the Appellate Court and the first Court had ordered to be prepared. The judgment of the Board was delivered by Sir Richard Couch in 1899, who in 1893 had delivered the judgment of the Board in Hurrinath Chatterji v. Mohunt Mothoor Mohun Goswami (7), which expressly approved of and applied as sound Hindu law the rule in the Shiva- gunga case (3). What was said by the Board in 1899 at the conclusion of the judgment makes it plain what the Board was considering. It is there said :—

“ The decree of the first Court, dated the 27th July, 1898, should not have been varied as it has been. It is for an account of the moveable property left by Cooverbai and Nenavahoo at the time of their deaths distinguishing between such of it as was their stridhan and ‘ as such ’ formed part of the estate of the testator. ‘ As such ’ appears to be an error for ‘ such as. ’ With this alteration their Lordships think the decree will be right.”

As altered by the Board the account which was to be taken was an account of the moveable property left by Cooverbai and Nenavahoo, the widows of the said testator respectively at the time of their deaths distinguishing between such of the said property as was the stridhan of the said Cooverbai and Nenavahoo and such as formed part of the estate of the said testator.

It does not appear to their Lordships how the rule in the Shivagunga case (3) could have been applied in the case then before the Board. What the Board, at the stage of the suit which was then before the Board, the Board having decided against the trust to the trustees, was considering was what was the account which was to be taken, and the Board directed that the account should separately show what had been the stridhan of the widows, and what was the property to which the heir might ordinarily be entitled. Their Lordships are unable to see what was the estate, within the meaning of the Shirz-gunga case (3), which the widows had represented, or to what the rule in the Shivagunga case (3) could have been applied. The title of the trustees to the property devised or bequeathed to them for charitable or religious purposes by Kallianji Sewji was not questioned until the survivor of the two widows died in 1888, and that property had never been represented by the widows or either of them. It had been in the exclusive possession of the trustees under the Will of Kallianji Sewji from 1869 until the Court in the suit which was brought on the 21st December 1888, after the death of the last surviving widow, had decided that the gift for charitable or religious purposes was void.

The result of the cases to which their Lordships have referred shows, in their opinion, that the Board has invariably applied the rules of the Shivagunga case (3) as sound Hindu law where that rule was applicable.

It also appears to their Lordships that the suit is barred by limitation. The Plaintiffs could not be entitled to a decree for possession without displacing the adoption of 1862 of Alagusundara by Chokkammal. It was held by the Board in Jagadamba Chowdhrair v. Dakhina Mohun (10), that Art. 129 of the Second Schedule of Act IX of 1871 relates to all suits in which the Plaintiff cannot succeed without displacing an apparent adoption by virtue of which the Defendant is in possession. That article prescribed twelve years as the period of time within which a suit “ to establish or set aside an adoption ” might be brought, and that such period of twelve years should begin to run from “ The date of the adoption, or (at the option of the Plaintiff) from date of the adoptive father’s death.”

Act IX of 1871 did not give to a reversioner whose right to sue for possession accrued upon the death of a Hindu widow any further time than the twelve years given by Art. 129 to any Plaintiff. That Act was in force until the 19th July 1877, when Act XV of 1877, the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, came into force, and by Art. 141 of the Second Schedule of Act XV of 1877 a Hindu entitled to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu female might bring his suit for possession within twelve years from the time when the female dies. In the present case the period of limitation allowed by Art. 129 of Act IX of 1871 expired in 1874.

The person who at the date of the adoption in 1862 was entitled to sue to set aside the adoption must have been a reversioner to Arunachala, and looking at the pedigrees he must have been either Kaliasasundara or Chokkappa, and it has not been pleaded or otherwise alleged that they were at the time of the adoption under the age of 18 years so as to entitle them to an extension of the period allowable to a minor under sec. 7, Act IX of 1871, to bring a suit. It is obvious, looking at the facts and dates in the present case, that Kaliasasundara and Chokkappa must have arrived at full age long before Act IX of 1871 expired and that that Act applied.

In the present suit the Subordinate Judge found that the question as to the adoption of Alagusundara was res judicata, but Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Mr. Justice Burn, in the appeal to the High Court, decided that the principle of res judicata did not apply. On that subject their Lordships do not consider it necessary to express an opinion.

It has been arranged by the parties through their respective Counsel and their respective solicitors in the best interests of their clients that the Plaintiffs' appeal,

No. 124 of 1923, and the first Defendants' appeal, No. 128 of 1923, which relates to the village of Enkan, should be dismissed, and that there should be no order as to costs in either of these appeals in which other Respondents have not appeared. It has also been arranged by the parties through their respective Counsel and their respective solicitors in the best interests of their clients that the Plaintiffs' appeal, No. 125 of 1923, should be dismissed without costs on either side, the Plaintiffs having admitted that the late husband of the first Defendant was not disqualified from inheriting along with the Plaintiffs. Except as above arranged by the parties it appears to their Lordships that all the appeals should be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will so accordingly humbly advise His Majesty.

Since the hearing of these appeals some of the parties, their Lordships understand, have entered into compromises. On production of the proper evidence, effect to these compromises will be given in the Order in Council confirming this report.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 1 of 1921.

SANDERSON, C. J. CHANDRA SEKHAR
RICHARDSON, J. MULLICK and anr.
v.
1921, GONESH CHANDRA DE
26, May. and ors.

Suit commenced by the next friend of an infant, not for his benefit—Court's jurisdiction to dismiss the suit on an application.

Where it appears clearly upon affidavit that a suit has been commenced by the next friend to promote his own views and not for the benefit of the infant, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order summarily dismissing the suit, without an enquiry into its propriety.

SALE v. SALE (1) followed.

This was an appeal preferred against the judgment of Mr. Justice Buckland in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case have been fully set out in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

Mr. B. N. Ghosh for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. R. Dass, Pankridge and S. Ghosh for Mr. Douglas.

Messrs. R. C. Bonnerjee and A. N. Chaudhuri for the Official Receiver.

Mr. M. N. Bose for Gopessur Mullick and Gorachand Mullick.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee for G. C. Dey.

Mr. P. N. Ghose for Messrs. Cook & Co., Ltd.

Mr. R. S. Pandit for the Defendants Nos. 6 and 13, Doyal Ch. Mullick and S. C. Mullick.

C. J.

1. Mr. M. N. Bose submits that he is entitled to a separate set of costs in the appeal.

2. Mr. Pankridge submits that his client is entitled to separate costs in the appeal.

3. Mr. P. N. Ghose submits that his client Messrs. Cook & Co., Ltd., are also so entitled.

4. Mr. R. S. Pandit for G. C. Dey submits that his client is entitled to separate costs in the appeal.

5. Mr. R. S. Pandit makes the same submission on behalf of his clients D. C. Mullick and S. C. Mullick.

Mr. R. C. Bonnerjee submits that he files no affidavit that Official Receiver is entitled to a separate set of costs.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland. It was given with respect to a petition which was presented to the Court by Gopessur Mullick and Gorachand Mullick, two of the Defendants in the suit.

The petition asked that the suit might be dismissed with costs or that an enquiry might be held by the Court to ascertain whether the suit was for the benefit of the infant Plaintiffs and whether Surendra Nath Banerjee was a fit and proper person to act as the next friend of the infant Plaintiffs in the suit and there were other usual prayers.

The decision of the learned Judge was that the suit should be dismissed with costs.

The suit was brought by Chandra Sekhar Mullick and Nanda Kishore Mullick as *shebait*s of an idol, both minors, by their next friend Surendra Nath Banerjee and there were 15 Defendants.

The main prayer in the suit was for a declaration that an indenture of lease, dated the 18th of October 1919, was invalid and for an order cancelling the said lease. There were other incidental reliefs prayed for.

The lease which it was desired to set aside was in respect of certain premises Nos. 78 and 80, Lower Chitpore Road. The facts with regard to the question, which is now before us, are fully set out in the judgment of my learned brother and I propose to read the relevant paragraphs in his judgment which are as follows :—

“ The property was dedicated in the year 1820 by one Chitra Dassi who died in the year 1855. In the year 1876 a suit No. 442 of 1876 was filed in this Court by one of the then *shebait*s against the others for construction of the instrument whereby the property was dedicated and of the Will of Chitra Dassi, and to have the trusts carried out. On the 4th December 1878 a decree was made in that suit and the Official Receiver was thereby appointed and still is the Receiver of the property dedicated.

On the 26th April 1915 under an order made in this suit the Official Receiver granted a lease of Nos. 79 and 80, Lower Chitpore Road to the grandfather of the Plaintiffs and to Defendants Nos. 7 and 8; since then the Plaintiffs' grandfather has died leaving them as his heirs.

On the 18th August 1919 the *shebait*s offered and the 4th Defendant Mr. George Douglas agreed to accept a building lease of this property subject to the sanction of the Court of the terms being obtained. One term was that the Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and the Plaintiffs should surrender their rights under the lease of the 26th April 1915. A week later on the 25th August 1919 Hashim Ebrahim Sallayjee offered to take a building lease of the same property upon the terms set out in a letter from his attorneys to Babu Pannalal Dey, the attorney for the Defendants Ashutosh Mullick, Monilal Mullick, Manik Lal Mullick and Sarat Chandra Mullick, but on the 27th August the Official Receiver approved the proposed lease to Mr. George Douglas as being for the benefit of the estate.

Therefore on the 1st September 1919 the Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 applied to Rankin, J., with the consent of all the *shebait*s for sanction to the proposed lease to Mr. George Douglas. On that application the infant Plaintiffs were represented by their mother Kadambini Dassi for whom Messrs. G. C. Chunder & Co. were acting. Babu Pannalal De, who was instructed to consent to the order, brought to the notice of the Court the offer made by Sallayjee and Rankin, J., accordingly adjourned the matter so that the parties could have an opportunity of considering that offer.

On the 5th September the application was renewed and on that occasion Babu Pannalal De put forward two offers, one of them Sallayjee's, in terms differing slightly from those of his previous offer. The partners, however, said they preferred to accept the offer of Mr. George Douglas and with their consent an order was made sanctioning the proposed lease to him.

On the same day Babu Pannalal De on behalf of the Defendant Ashutosh Mullick gave notice to the partners that he would apply on the 9th September that the order of the 5th might be reconsidered and in support of that application an affidavit of Ashutosh Mullick was filed in which he stated his wish that the offer of Sallayjee made on the 5th should be accepted.

“ The matter came on again before the Court on the 9th September when the application was dismissed and it was directed that the draft lease should be settled by senior Counsel and that the draft lease, if settled, should be sanctioned by the Judge in Chambers. This was done and the lease was executed on the 18th October 1919 and the lessee went into and now is in possession of the property." Those are the material facts about which there is no dispute.

The suit contained allegations that there was no necessity for the lease to Mr. Douglas, that it was not for the benefit of the estate, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order sanctioning the lease, and there were various charges of fraud, misrepresentation and conspiracy against some of the parties, the allegation being that the Court had been misled.

The learned Judge upon considering the points which were argued before him came to certain findings. He pointed out first that in the petition of the applicants it is alleged that the application made on behalf of Ashutosh Mullick on the 9th of September 1919 was really made on behalf of Sallayjee, that is, the application to set aside the order of Mr. Justice Rankin sanctioning the lease to Defendant Mr. Douglas and that in support of this charge reference was made to a petition for leave to defend a suit which had been brought by Ebrahim Sallayjee & Co., against Ashutosh Mullick, and in that suit Ashutosh Mullick alleged that he had been instigated by Sallayjee to make the application to set aside Mr. Justice Rankin's order.

The learned Judge then said that it was alleged that Surendra Nath Banerjee was a man of no substance, that as far as the Petitioners could ascertain, he was an employee of Sallayjee whose brick-field he managed. In this Court it has not been disputed that Surendra Nath Banerjee is an employee of Sallayjee. The learned Judge then referred to an affidavit which was put in by the mother of the infant Plaintiffs to the effect that she had been advised by competent solicitors and that she and her solicitors considered the offer of Mr. Douglas and had come to the conclusion that it was more beneficial to the estate than the offer of Sallayjee and that she and the other shebaitis objected to let out the premises to a Mahomedan for the reasons which are set out in the affidavit.

As I have already said, in this Court the facts that I have referred to were not really disputed nor was it seriously disputed that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to make the order dismissing the suit. But it was argued by the learned Counsel for the Appellants that he should not have made the order without a previous enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether the suit was really brought for the benefit of the infant Plaintiffs, or to put it shortly, without an enquiry into the propriety of the suit.

The principle is correctly laid down in my judgment in Daniell's Chancery Practice, Vol. I, page 103, to this effect—"Where it appeared clearly upon affidavit that the action was commenced by the next friend to promote his own views and not for the benefit of the infant such an order (i.e., the order dismissing a suit) was made summarily and without an enquiry." For that proposition, Salé v. Salé (1) was quoted as an authority. That was a case which came before the Master of the Rolls and the head-note is this:

"In a clear case the Court being of opinion that a suit had been commenced by the next friend of infants to promote his own views and not for the benefit of the infants, summarily and without a reference to the Master dismissed it with costs to be paid by the next friend and the learned Master of the Rolls in his judgment said, 'I am perfectly satisfied that this suit is filed not for the benefit of the infants but to promote the views of the person who styles himself the next friend of the infants, and that being so, I apprehend there can be no doubt of the jurisdiction of this Court and that it ought to be exercised in such a case as this.' "

The learned Judge in this case came to the conclusion that there was no doubt that this suit was filed, not for the benefit of the infant Plaintiffs but in the interest of Sallayjee and I agree with the learned Judge in this respect. It is clear to me that Surendra Nath Banerjee was merely the tool and instrument of Sallayjee.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant argued first that this Court must assume the facts as stated in the plaint; secondly, that if those facts were assumed then the Plaintiffs would be entitled to rescission of the lease; and thirdly, that if the lease were rescinded then it must be for the benefit of the infant Plaintiffs. In view of the facts of this case and of the proceedings before Rankin, J., I am by no means satisfied that there is any substance in the first two contentions but even assuming for the present that the learned Counsel's argument was correct as regards the first two propositions I am certainly not satisfied that it would be for the benefit of the infant Plaintiffs if the lease, which was granted to Mr. Douglas, were rescinded.

The first ground upon which the learned Counsel relied was that the Plaintiffs were joint lessees under the old lease of the premises and that a year and a half of the term of that lease still remained unexpired at the time of the proceedings before Rankin, J., and that it was not in the interests of the Plaintiffs that lease should be surrendered.

I ought to have said that the land in question was occupied by bustees and the Plaintiffs and the other lessees were not in occupation but were endeavouring to realise rents from the tenants who were living in the bustees.

In my judgment the learned Counsel's argument is met by the statements which are to be found in para. 5 of the petition because it there appears that the Petitioner after stating that the lessees were unable to realise any rent from the tenants for 2½ years proceeded to state:

"Thereafter the income of the said property with taxes was only Rs. 881-13-5 p. a month whereas the rent payable in respect thereof was Rs. 750 a month and the municipal rates and taxes Rs. 248-5-4 a month. There was thus a loss of Rs. 116-7-11 a month in rent besides costs of litigation which amounted to Rs. 3,000 or thereabouts and establishment charges and the Petitioners and the said Sreemati Kadambini Dassi, the mother and natural guardian of the Plaintiffs, were always anxious to get rid of the said premises and to surrender the lease in respect thereof." Those facts are uncontradicted and in view of those facts it seems to me that the lessees would be benefited by being relieved of that lease, inasmuch as it was an unprofitable lease; consequently in my judgment the first point which the learned Counsel urged cannot be sustained.

The next point which the learned Counsel argued was that, looking at the matter from the point of view of the Plaintiffs being shebaites, the lease was for a long period of 60 years and that there was no necessity as far as the estate was concerned for that lease. It seems to me that it is possible that there might be something in that argument (though I do not propose to express any definite opinion about it at the present moment, for in my judgment it is not necessary so to do) if that lease had not been approved by Mr. Justice Rankin, who after a full enquiry came to the conclusion that it was a proper lease for the shebais to enter into having regard to the circumstances of the case into which he had made an enquiry. That judgment of my learned brother was not appealed against. It is stated in the petition of Ashutosh Mullick that Sallayjee had instigated him to appeal against my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin's judgment, but on further consideration he, Ashutosh Mullick, abandoned the appeal. Therefore my learned brother's judgment stands undisputed; consequently in my judgment the point that there was no necessity for this lease, having regard to the interests of the estate, is not open to the Appellant on this occasion.

It was further stated by Mr. Dass in the course of the argument and it was not denied that with regard to this debutter property the shebais had no pecuniary interest and it was the idol only which would be benefited from the increment which would be derived from this lease. It is a building lease for 60 years with a rent of Rs. 2,000 a month for the first 20 years with an increasing rent as in the lease provided.

It is further to be noticed that most of the shebais are adults, and they approved, with the exception of Ashutosh Mullick who has been found to be acting on behalf of Sallayjee, of the lease being granted to Mr. Douglas. Again it must be remembered that the mother and natural guardian of the infant Plaintiffs although she was a purdanashin woman was advised by attorneys of this Court, and has sworn an affidavit that she approved of the lease being granted to Mr. Douglas; consequently in my judgment looking at the matter from the point of view of the Plaintiffs being shebais, the argument of the learned Counsel for the Appellant is without substance.

Now let us look at the case from the other side. The Plaintiffs are infants who are, we are told, about 10 and 12 years old. Surendra Nath Banerjee who appears on the record as their next friend is a total stranger to them. He is also a total stranger to the mother of the infant Plaintiffs. He is employed by Sallayjee and in my judgment there is no doubt whatever that Surendra Nath Banerjee had been instigated by Sallayjee to bring this suit. The learned Judge has found that the suit has been instituted not for the benefit of the infants but for the benefit of Sallayjee and the learned Counsel for the Appellant did not seriously dispute that finding, his argument being based upon the allegation that even if that were so the suit must be for the benefit of the infants. Now, if it be taken as a finding, as I think it must be taken, that this suit was instituted solely for the benefit of Sallayjee, what is the only conclusion to which this Court can come? In my judgment the conclusion is this that Surendra Nath Banerjee has been instigated to bring this suit with the same object as Ashutosh Mullick was instigated by Sallayjee when he made his application before Mr. Justice Rankin to set aside the order which the learned Judge had made. The Petitioners made a definite allegation as to the reason why this suit has been brought in para. 32 of their petition to this effect: "Your Petitioners further charge that this suit has not been brought for the benefit of the infants but for the purpose of benefitting the said H. E. Sallayjee and the real object thereof is to blackmail your Petitioners and the other Defendants and to compel them to enter into some arrangement with the said Mr. H. E. Sallayjee regarding the lands which have been leased out under the orders of this Hon'ble Court for the sake of peace." That statement is not denied as far as I can discover although Surendra Nath Banerjee filed an affidavit, except in so far as he states in para. 7 of his affidavit as follows :—

" I deny that I have any interest in this suit other than the interest of the infant Plaintiffs and of the idol referred to in the plaint herein and the desire to see justice vindicated." Speaking for myself I do not believe for a moment that Surendra Nath Banerjee had the smallest desire to see justice vindicated, for in my judgment he was merely a tool of Sallayjee and lent himself to Sallayjee for the purpose of bringing this suit. The learned Judge has found as a fact that this suit has been brought in the interest of and for the benefit of Sallayjee and I see no reason whatever for differing from the conclusion of the learned Judge on that question of fact. It is not difficult to see that if this suit were allowed to proceed Mr. Douglas, the lessee, would be placed in an inconvenient and difficult position because as long as this suit was pending undisposed of, it would be practically impossible for him to proceed with the development of the land of which he took the lease for the purpose of building and thus an opportunity would be provided for Sallayjee bringing pressure to bear upon Mr. Douglas to come to some arrangement. I consider this a bad case and the institution of the suit an abuse of the process of the Court. In my judgment the learned Judge was right in dismissing the suit and consequently in my judgment this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Before leaving the matter and having regard to the discussion which took place yesterday with respect to the question of the proposed change of Surendra Nath Banerjee's attorney, with which we dealt fully in the judgment which was then delivered, I desire to say that the appeal was left in the hands of learned Counsel Mr. B. N. Ghose, instructed by Mr. Pannalal De and in my opinion everything was said by Mr. Ghose which could be said on behalf of the Appellant in this case and indeed as I said yesterday both my learned brother and I are indebted to him for the able argument which he presented to the Court.

As regards costs the Appellant Surendra Nath Banerjee must pay the costs of this appeal as far as Mr. Douglas is concerned. He must also pay the costs of this appeal of the Petitioners, i.e., Gopessur Mullick and Gorachand Mullick and the costs of the Official Receiver. But Mr. Gonesh Chunder De, Messrs. Cook & Co., Ltd. and Doyal Chand Mullick and Sarat Chunder Mullick must pay their own costs of this appeal, as we do not see there was any necessity for their being separately represented in the appeal.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. The true owner of the property in question is the deity to whom it was dedicated. The infant Plaintiffs in whose names the suit is brought are two of the trustees or *shebait*s who manage the property on behalf of the deity. The endowment is a private family endowment. The *shebait*s, who include a number of adults as well as the Plaintiffs, are members of the family to which the founder of the endowment belonged by marriage.

CHANDRA SEKHAR MULLICK v. GONESH CHANDRA DE.

Surendra Nath Banerjee who appears on the record as the next friend of the infants and by whom the suit was in fact instituted, nominally for the benefit of the infants, has nothing whatever to do with the original trust or with the family of the founder. He is an entire stranger.

The professed object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that the lease of this property, granted by the *shebait*s with the leave of the Court to the Defendant George Douglas, is invalid on the grounds in brief that the Court had no jurisdiction to accord leave and that the leave was obtained by means of fraud and conspiracy.

It is beyond all dispute that the true motive of the suit is to have the lease invalidated in the interest of one H. E. Sallayjee who was also a candidate for a lease of the property. Sallayjee is the employer of Surendra Nath Banerjee.

The latter had no personal knowledge in respect of the various charges of fraud so liberally scattered about the plaint. It seems obvious that he could have no personal knowledge of the circumstances, and the verification at the end of the plaint says: "That the statements contained in all the paragraphs of the foregoing plaint are based on informations received by me and I believe the same to be true." Nevertheless when this gentleman came to answer the application with which we are immediately concerned in effect that the suit should be dismissed on the ground that it was not brought in good faith for the benefit of the infants he said that the allegations in the plaint were true to his "knowledge, information and belief." The change of form is not without significance and taken with the facts already referred to in detail by my Lord I have come to the conclusion that Surendra Nath Banerjee is intermeddling in what does not at all concern him merely for private ends of his own or of H. E. Sallayjee. He is not acting at all for the benefit of the infants. Surendra Nath Banerjee now here states the source of his information and the charges made appear to be entirely speculative and visionary. It would in my opinion be a waste of the time of the Court to investigate them. I can see no reasonable or prima facie ground for saying that it would be to the advantage of the infants that this lease should be set aside. The lease was executed with the consent of the mother and guardian of the infants and at this stage at any rate is supported and adhered to by all the adult *shebait*s. In my opinion the suit is plainly an abuse of the process of the Court.

It may be unnecessary to deal with the question but personally I see no reason why any doubt should be felt as to the jurisdiction of the Court to give the *shebait*s leave to grant a lease of this kind. So far as I can see full materials were placed before the Court and the learned Judge before whom the matter came exercised a careful and circumspect discretion upon those materials. My Lord has already referred to the abortive appeal from the order which the learned Judge made and the statement which the Appellant (one of the *shebait*s) afterwards made in reference to that appeal.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Held—That the summary dismissal of an appeal under Or. 41, r. 11 (1), operates as a decree and falls within the definition of a decree in sec. 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. The expression of opinion dismissing an appeal is a judgment, although as a matter of practice such judgments are not pronounced in the form prescribed under Or. 41, r. 31 and the application is one for review of judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question before me arises out of an application for review of a decision of this Court dismissing a second appeal under Or. 41, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. The suit out of which the appeal arose was one for partition and the plaint and the memorandum of appeal bore a court-fee stamp of Rs. 15 as required by Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act as amended by the Bengal Act of 1922. The application was filed with a court-fee stamp of Rs. 2, while the Stamp Reporter was of opinion that it should bear a court-fee stamp of Rs. 15 under the provisions of Art. 4 of Sch. I of the Act, as the application was presented after the ninetieth day from the decision of this Court. The Taxing Officer referred the question under sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act and the Chief Justice has appointed me for deciding the matter.

I heard the arguments of the learned vakil for the Petitioner as well as of the Government pleader on both sides of the question. The contention on behalf of the Petitioner is that sec. 4 of the Act directs the payment of fees as indicated either by the first or second schedule of the Act, and as the fee payable on the plaint in this case is under the second schedule which relates to "fixed fees," you cannot look to the first schedule, which refers to "ad valorem fees," for the purpose of levying fees on an application in a proceeding arising out of a plaint such as this. The headings of the two schedules form parts of the enactment and they refer to two distinct classes of documents, and in order to find what fee should be payable on this application one must be confined to the second schedule. That being so, the only provision applicable to this document is that under Art. 1 (d) (ii) of the second schedule, which requires a fee of Rs. 2. It is further contended that a dismissal under Or. 41, r. 11, is not a judgment but a mere order and as such it is not followed by a decree. Therefore in any view Art. 4 of Sch. I has no application to this petition.

The last contention may be disposed of first. That the dismissal of an appeal under Or. 41, r. 11 by this Court is a decree does not seem to admit of any argument at this time of the day. It falls within the definition of a decree in sec. 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. It was held to be a decree in the case of Uma Sundari v. Bindu Bashini (1) with reference to the corresponding sec. 551 of the Code of 1882, where the practice of not drawing up decrees in such cases by the High Court was referred to. It may also be pointed out that this case has been followed in Muniswami v. Muniswami (2) and Asma Bibi v. Ahmad Hussain (3) and in a number of cases in this Court, the latest of which I found reported in Chandra Kanta v. Lakshman (4). The expression of opinion dismissing the appeal is a judgment, although as a matter of practice such judgments are not pronounced in the form prescribed under Or. 41, r. 31. This contention of the Petitioner is therefore in my opinion without substance. This application is one for review of judgment.

With regard to the first contention, sec. 4 of the Court Fees Act provides: "No document of any of the kinds specified in the first or second schedule to this Act annexed, as chargeable with fees, shall be filed . . . in . . . any of the said High Courts . . . unless in respect of such document, there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document." In order to determine what amount of fee is payable in respect of the document one must find whether any of its kind is specified in either the first or the second schedule of the Act. Such a document is clearly specified in Art. 4, Sch. I of the Act. Prima facie then the court-fee payable is under that article. There is no doubt that schedules annexed to an Act and the headings under which they are placed are parts of the enactment. But the same general rule which regulates the effect of the preamble applies also to these headings—namely, that they are not to be taken into consideration if the language of the enactment is clear. Craies on Statute Law—3rd Ed., p. 188. The learned Government pleader also relies on the observation of the Privy Council in the case of Abdul Rahim v. Municipal Commissioner for City of Bombay (5) that the heading to a group of sections cannot be pressed into a constructive limitation upon the exercise of the powers given by the express words of the Act. In this case, however, this rule of interpretation need hardly be referred to. I am unable to appreciate the argument that in finding out what fee is payable on the document in question you must not look into the first schedule but must confine your attention to the second schedule. Why should this be so? The Act nowhere says (apart from the provisions of Art. 4, Sch. I) that in finding what fee is payable on an application you must find out how the fee was payable with respect to the plaint. The argument of the Petitioner in substance comes to this: you find in the third column against Art. 4 of Sch. I that reference is made to the fee leviable on the plaint. You should then find under which schedule of the Act fee is leviable on the plaint, and you must then find whether this application is specifically provided for in that schedule. As in this case such a document is not specified in that schedule it must come under the general provision of "application or petition" under Art. 1 of Sch. II. I am unable to accept this argument. It seems to me that that would not be a natural construction of the Act. In my opinion on a proper construction of sec. 4 of the Act this document directly falls within Art. 4, Sch. I and the fee leviable is according to the provision in the third column, irrespective of the provision relating to the levying of the fee on the plaint. The fee payable in respect of the application in question is therefore Rs. 15.

18, November. and ors., Accused,
Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 360—Deposition of witness read over to accused's pleader—Legality.

Reading over the deposition of a witness in the presence of the pleader of the accused and not in his own presence although he is in attendance in Court is not a sufficient compliance with sec. 360.

This was a Rule granted on the 9th September 1924 against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chittagong (Mr. S. C. Majumdar), dated the 18th of July 1924, discharging the accused Opposite Party under sec. 209, Cr. P. C., confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Chittagong (Mr. H. C. Stork) on the 18th of August 1924.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Camel and Babu Benoyendra Nath Palit for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Satindra Nath Mukerji for the Opposite Party.

KASIM ALI v. SARADA KRIPA LAHA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule is directed against the order discharging two accused persons under sec. 209, Cr. P. C. We are asked to set aside that order and order either a commitment or further enquiry on the following main grounds, that the provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. C., were not followed by the Magistrate who held the enquiry, that a prima facie case against the accused has been made out and that the Magistrate has usurped the function of the jury in deciding the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses called for the prosecution.

As regards the first point we must hold that the provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. C., were not followed. It appears that the evidence was read over in the presence of the accused's pleader but not in the presence of the accused. It is clear from the wording of the section that if the accused is in attendance the evidence must be read over in his presence, and it is only when the accused appears by a pleader that the reading over of the evidence in the presence of the accused's pleader is sufficient. But we hold that we should not be justified in ordering further enquiry on account of this defect in the proceedings unless we thought that further enquiry was necessary in the interest of justice.

After hearing the learned Counsel on behalf of the Petitioner we are compelled to hold that the order passed by the Magistrate was a proper one. It may be that some of the prosecution witnesses have been gained over. Whether this be so or not the fact remains that the evidence of witnesses who implicated the accused who were on their trial is totally unworthy of credit. It is said that when there is evidence it is for the jury and not for the committing Magistrate to decide whether that evidence is worthy of credit. But it has been repeatedly held that it is the duty of the Magistrate when enquiring into a Sessions case to consider whether the evidence is credible or not, and though in case of doubt he may be justified in leaving it for the jury to decide, when he is convinced that the evidence is false, it is his duty to discharge the accused. In the present case we hold that the accused were rightly discharged.

We accordingly discharge this Rule.

Judgment, 6, July.

Purdanashin lady, deed by, law governing enforcement of—Want of independent advice, if in itself fatal—Intelligent execution, onus to prove—Discrepancy between draft and conveyance, how affects the consideration of the question—Duty of Court to apply law for protection of persons under disability strictly.

In the case of an illiterate purdanashin lady disposing of a large proportion of her property without professional or independent advice, the authorities show that independent legal advice is not in itself essential to its validity. The real point is that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it. If the lady really understands and means to make the transfer, it is not required that some one should have tried to persuade her to the contrary.

The onus is on the party who sets up and relies on a deed executed by a purdanashin lady to satisfy the Court that it had been explained to and understood by her either before execution or after it under circumstances which establish adoption of it with full knowledge and comprehension.

Mere execution, though unaccompanied by duress, protest or obvious signs of misunderstanding or want of comprehension, is in itself no real proof of a true understanding mind in the executant. Evidence to establish such comprehension is most obviously found in proof that the deed was read over to the settlor and, where necessary, explained. The extent and character of the explanation required must depend on the circumstances. Length, intricacy, the number and complexity of the dispositions or the unfamiliarity of the subject-matter are all reasons for requiring an increased amount and efficiency of explanation. Thus a matter not likely to attract the attention of the executant in itself ought not to be relied on as binding unless her attention has been directly drawn to it. So if a deed, as presented for execution, differs substantially, either by way of addition or of omission, from the scheme and details which the intending settlor has previously laid down, the discrepancy ought to be clearly pointed out and its nature and effect should be fully described, unless, which must be rare, the difference is so obvious that even a person of the executant's position must perceive and appreciate it for herself. If the description and explanation have been partial or erroneous, or have not been given at all, the question will then arise, as it arises where there has been no independent legal advice, whether, if proper information had been given, it would have affected the mind of the executant in completing the deed. On the other hand, the doctrine cannot be pushed so far as to demand the impossible. The mere declaration by the executant, subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing is not in itself conclusive. It must be a question whether, having regard to the proved personality of the settlor, the nature of the settlement, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the whole history of the parties, it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the settlor or not. Fraud, duress and actual undue influence are separate matters.

It is a matter of obligation on the Judicial Committee to be strict and unwavering in defence of those strict rules which have been laid down for the protection of the defenceless in India.

This was an appeal (No. 118 of 1923) from a decree, dated the 14th January 1921, of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a decree, dated the 30th April 1918, of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki.

The Appellant, a Mahomedan purdanashin lady, had acquired by gift, while still an infant, considerable property in Ahmadpur, Rasulpur and Chilanki. In addition to the above property the Appellant inherited the family dwelling-house known as the "mahal," and a parcel of sir land, both in the village of Ahmadpur. After her marriage in 1898 it appeared from the evidence that the Appellant's property was managed by her husband until his death in March 1915. On the 20th October 1914 the Appellant executed a deed of wakf of her entire estate whereby she made a gift of all her property for religious uses and appointed the Respondents, her husband's nephews, as mutwallis.

In October 1915 the Appellant remarried and in May 1916 she instituted this suit to have the wakfnama cancelled and to obtain possession of the property alleging that the deed had been executed by her without understanding it and by reason of the undue influence of her husband and the Respondents.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit but that decree was reversed on appeal.

Mr. Hyam for the Appellant.

Mr. Wallach for the Respondents.

The arguments were directed to the evidence.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SUMNER.—The Plaintiff-Appellant, having sued to recover possession of a residence and agricultural land at or near Ahmadpur, the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki passed a decree in her favour against two of the Defendants, who are now Respondents to this appeal. In the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh this decree was set aside and the suit was dismissed. The Plaintiff had executed a wakfnama, covering the property and appointing the Respondents mutwallis of the wakf, and accordingly the claim is in substance to set the deed aside.

At the time of the execution the Plaintiff was a married woman, illiterate, childless and pardanashin. She and her husband, Sheikh Karim-ud-din, were Moham-medans. Most of the property in question had been given to her upon her marriage by her maternal grandfather, but the residence, known as the mahal, and some sir land, both in the village of Ahmadpur, came to her by inheritance. Since her marriage she had lived there continuously, and, although during the earlier part of their married life her husband was generally absent on Government service, he had retired, and for some years had resided entirely at Ahmadpur. He suffered from incurable disease, had become nearly blind, and was otherwise crippled and incapable, but his mind was not in any way affected.

The Defendants, the mutwallis, who were in possession, relied upon the wakfnama as their title. Its gist was to divest the Plaintiff of the whole of her property, which became vested in them, but it reserved to her a life stipend of Rs. 34 per mensem, and another of Rs. 33 per mensem to her husband, and also gave her the right to continue to reside in "The Mahal" for life, the mutwallis being bound to keep it in repair, as well as to pay the stipends. They were two brothers, sons of a sister of the Plaintiff's husband, to whom he was much attached. Their Lordships do not think it is sufficiently made out that they or either of them had acted as men of business for the Appellant, and they put this point aside, but she was on friendly terms with them. It is said that she was at enmity with her own relations, for reasons that do not appear to reflect on her. At any rate, she virtually lived apart from and saw little of them, nor had she, in fact, any support or advice from their side.

Very shortly after the marriage the management of the property was assumed by the Plaintiff's husband, her father, who had previously managed it, being now dead, and he continued to manage it as long as he lived. He employed the necessary karindas and others for the purpose, and directed the disposition of the rents and profits. Over and above his salary he was himself a man of little or no means. His wife never took part in the management, nor was she shown to have had any business knowledge or experience. From time to time, under the direction of her husband, she executed muktarnamas and other documents for estate purposes, but she relied on him entirely as to their necessity and purport. Sums for her personal and household purposes were paid to her with fair regularity, and they seem to have been, though modest, probably sufficient; but she did not direct the whole even of the household expenditure, and her own outlays were on various occasions criticised by her husband and even censured as improvident. There is this to be said for him, that the estate was encumbered and, when he took up the management, much embarrassed, but in time he considerably improved its position. The wakfnama enumerates sundry charges outstanding upon it, amounting in all to about Rs. 12,800, with an annual interest of Rs. 730, for the service and discharge of which the mutwallis were to provide, and the total value of the property, when settled by the deed, was from Rs. 40,000 to Rs. 50,000, and the income about Rs. 2,500.

The Respondents recognised that the burden of proof was on them [Tacoorden Tewary v. Syed Ali (1)] and they accordingly set about to prove her intelligent execution of the deed, its contents having been read and explained to her both upon and after execution. It was not, however, contended that she had had any legal advice about it or any consultation with her own relations. She, on the other hand, raised two answers, the first, that she executed it under actual undue influence of her husband, which dominated her choice and will, and the second, that, when she executed it, she had had no explanation of its nature and contents, but throughout believed it to be an instrument needed for the routine management of the estate, such as she had constantly executed before. A contention, that she had never executed it and that the thumb-mark which it bears is not hers, has not been persisted in.

The probabilities are not unequally balanced. She was a conforming and sincere Mohammedan, though not shown to have been of any exceptional piety. Her husband was a leper, and, even if he lived, as she says she was sure that he would, his management of the estate, at any rate, was nearing its end. The estate was no easy matter to deal with, and the assurance of an income, similar to that which she had hitherto enjoyed, and the continued use of her old home for life, might seem to be a desirable arrangement. She had nothing against the young men who were named as mutwallis. They were well-known to her, and, as to her own people, it is not pretended that she felt either duty or inclination towards them. A gift of her property to God, with a modest provision for herself and her husband during life, was no bad thing, even though she herself was only about thirty years of age.

On the other hand, her husband had been manager of his wife's property so long that he might quite probably regard it as his own, and certainly he so treated it. He, at least, could not have failed to foresee his death at no distant date, as actually befell within the year. He had no great opinion of his wife's prudence or moderation, and the idea that her property might pass away from him and his must have been repulsive to him. Security for his own last days and a provision for his widow, coupled with some acquisition of merit by the performance of a pious act, must have made the idea of a wakf attractive to him. Though burdened with religious obligations, the property would, at any rate, be kept in his family.

There is a third probability. It is that the Appellant may have been fully acquainted with the scope of the deed, have fully concurred in the creation of the wakf for which it provided, and have executed the wakfnama freely and with understanding, but have changed her mind, for, after a few months of widowhood and pilgrimage, she married again.

After the fullest examination of the evidence, voluminous even for a case of this kind, their Lordships are of opinion that the wakfnama was not executed under actual undue influence of the husband, and that, both before its execution and also shortly after its execution, when it came to be registered, its contents were read over to the Appellant and were to some extent explained to her. In what terms that explanation was given the evidence does not show, and its sufficiency becomes the real issue on this appeal.

As for the case of actual undue influence, the husband was not present when the deed was registered, and there is nothing but mere suggestion, derived from the character of the transaction and his marital relation to her, to show that, when it was executed, his will operated on hers at all. In her evidence she declared with spirit that, had she known what the real import of the deed was, she would have refused entreaties and defied threats, and would never have given the smallest portion of her property to him or his relations. There is a ring of truth about this, which must prevail over the ingenious suggestion that, in the circumstances of the case, she must be deemed, all unknown to herself, to have been chronically under the hypnotic suggestion or control of her husband, while believing and even glorying in her fancied independence.

Again, their Lordships are not prepared to reject the evidence that the wakfnama was explained to the lady before it was executed. It was open to much criticism, and the learned Subordinate Judge refused to believe it, but the evidence had been recorded by his predecessor and he had not seen the witnesses. Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court that there is no sufficient ground for its rejection. Taking it, however, as it stands, the question remains whether it goes far enough to satisfy the burthen of proof which rests on the Respondents.

The deed was registered on the 3rd November 1914. A month or six weeks previously the Appellant's husband, Karim-ud-din, being then unable to write or read, sent for his nephew, a young man named Jamal-ud-din, and dictated to him a wakfnama word by word. This took five or six hours. The Appellant was not present, and Karim-ud-din sent the young man into the house to ask her what salaries she wished to have inserted in the deed. To this she replied by asking whether Karim-ud-din was getting him to write the draft. All this, which is deposed to by Jamal-ud-din, a witness called by the Respondents, seems to point to some previous communication on the subject between the husband and the wife, but what it was is not known.

During the previous three years the Plaintiff had spoken on several occasions of creating some wakf, but full details of her scheme were never given, and once at least she was dissuaded from doing anything at all. Such details as are given show that her ideas then differed substantially from the scheme of the wakfnama which was ultimately executed. When Jamal-ud-din told her that a draft was being prepared she proceeded to say (i) that the salaries for herself and her husband were to be within Rs. 100 per mensem; (ii) that certain other things were to be provided for in the deed, namely, that the rajabi and maulud, which she had celebrated, were to continue to be celebrated as before, that at Moharram majlis and sabils were to be continued, that other ritual acts should also be performed, and that a musjid at Ahmedabad, which her mother's father had built and she herself had always caused to be cleaned and repaired, should be cleaned and repaired as before; (iii) that a plot of land, which she had given to a certain Kabir-ud-din for a house should not be included in the wakfnama at all. All this Jamal-ud-din says that he reported to Karim-ud-din, who agreed to the provisions required. He was then sent back to the Appellant to ask whether some provision should be made for payment to the mutwalli, to which she replied that one-third of the Rs. 100 provided for her husband and herself should be paid to him as his pension. Jamal-ud-din then completed his task and, as far as he remembers, the draft then provided for all the matters which the Appellant had required. He placed it in her custody, and to her question replied that all her requirements had been provided for. He did not see the Plaintiff again till after the registration of the wakfnama, nor did he see the draft again either. In fact, it was never put in evidence, nor did any witness prove that the draft, as it left the hand of Jamal-ud-din, was ever compared with the fair copy which the Plaintiff ultimately executed. The evidence is merely that one, Mustafa Hussain, a brother-in-law of the Defendants, engaged a person named Wazir-uddin to make a fair copy of this draft, because he could write a good hand, and, on getting the draft from the Plaintiff, read it over and he says, apparently from memory two years afterwards, that this draft and the draft ultimately executed were the same, except for the mention of a debt to Wazir-ud-din of Rs. 400 for procuring the necessary stamped paper, a matter only arranged after Jamal-ud-din's draft was prepared.

All this is absolutely denied by the Plaintiff, but, as the whole of her evidence cannot be true, and as the evidence given by Jamal-ud-din and Mustafa Hussain is confirmed by other witnesses, their Lordships accept this story generally.

The form of the deed itself thereupon becomes of some importance. It is lucidly and logically drafted, with much more of a lawyer's phraseology and orderly arrangement and much less of a layman's irrelevance and colloquialism, than such deeds in India often contain. It differs, however, from the account given by Jamal-ud-din in several particulars, and no one suggests that, between the time when he gave her his draft and the time when Wazir-ud-din read over his fair copy to her before she executed it, she was ever told of any departure from the terms, in which her wishes had originally been expressed.

The following differences are material. Cl. 2 states that the Plaintiff appoints the first Defendant, "whom I have brought up and treated as my son," to the office of mutwalli, and continues "from to-day I have put Mukhtar Ahmad and Iftikhar Ahmad in possession of the said property as mutwallis." As a matter of fact, this admittedly was an after-thought. Mukhtar Ahmad, the first Defendant, on hearing of the wakf

FARID-UN-NISA v. MUKHTAR AHMAD.

(though not from the Plaintiff) said that, as he was busy, he wished his younger brother Iftikhar to be joined as a mutwalli. Accordingly this was done, and as, by a subsequent clause, No. 12, each mutwalli was to have Rs. 33 per mensem, the sum of Rs. 100, which the Plaintiff had fixed to cover the stipends of herself, her husband, and the one mutwalli, whom alone she had in view, now became an aggregate of monthly stipends of Rs. 133.

Cl. 20 specified how "the mutwalli" was to expend the surplus income, after payment of Government revenue, the expenses mentioned, and all other necessary expenses as to the management. He was to do so "after taking into consideration the then existing circumstances of the wakf property and as to what sum is reasonable to spend, when and on one or more of the following purposes"—twelve in number. These purposes, except "repairs of the mosque in Ahmadpur," are expressed in general terms. The last sweeps in "other expenses on pious objects, which may come up." Subsequent provisions give further powers "beside these expenses . . . to spend money or [Query "on"] anything without the permission of the authority for the time being having power to interfere with the affairs of the wakf," and "if any of the objects mentioned in cl. 20 is void in law the mutwalli shall spend the money on any other legal object" (cl. 21). Among the twelve objects particularly named there occur quite generally some of the pious purposes named by the Appellant to Jamal-ud-din, though one is omitted. In no case is there mention of the continuance of those ceremonies, which the Appellant herself had performed. The objects supported by the mutwalli under these denominations might in his discretion be wholly divorced from those which the Plaintiff had prescribed, and might be entirely unconnected with her or her place of residence in Ahmadpur. The question at once arises, "Was the Appellant ever really made aware of these discrepancies, and did she assent to them?"

As a formally valid instrument the wakfnama itself is not impugned, and their Lordships therefore do not criticise it. The real question is, whether the Appellant was so made cognisant of its contents and purport that it can be said, that the Respondents have discharged the onus of showing that she understood it so as to make it her deed.

The law of India contains well-known principles for the protection of persons, who transfer their property to their own disadvantage, when they have not the usual means of fully understanding the nature and effect of what they are doing. In this it has only given the special development, which Indian social usages make necessary, to the general rules of English law, which protect persons, whose disabilities make them dependent upon or subject them to the influence of others, even though nothing in the nature of deception or coercion may have occurred. This is part of the law relating to personal capacity to make binding transfers or settlements of property of any kind. That the instrument here is a wakfnama is a mere accident, and the general and well-settled law of wakf is not in question. The case of an illiterate purdanashin lady, denuding herself of a large proportion of her property without professional or independent advice, is one on which there is much authority. Independent legal advice is not in itself essential [Kali Buksh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (2)]. After all, advice, if given, might have been bad advice, or the settlor might have insisted on disregarding it. The real point is, that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it [Wazed Khan v. Ewaz Ali Khan (8) and Sunitabala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi (4)]. The Appellant clearly had no such advice, nor is it contended that she had. If, however, the settlor's freedom and comprehension can be otherwise established, or if, as is the Respondents' case here, the scheme and substance of the deed were themselves originally and clearly conceived and desired by the settlor, and were then substantially embodied in the deed, there would be nothing further to be gained by independent advice. If the settlor really understands and means to make the transfer, it is not required that some one should have tried to persuade her to the contrary. Again, the question arises how the state of the settlor's mind is to be proved. That the parties to prove it are the parties who set up and rely on the deed is clear. They must satisfy the Court that the deed has been explained to and understood by the party thus under disability, either before execution, or after it under circumstances which establish adoption of it with full knowledge and comprehension [Sudishtlal v. Shebarat (5), Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (6) and Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (7)]. Further, the whole doctrine involves the view that mere execution by such a person, although unaccompanied by duress, protest or obvious signs of misunderstanding or want of comprehension, is in itself no real proof of a true understanding mind in the executant. Evidence to establish such comprehension is most obviously found in proof that the deed was read over to the settlor and, where necessary, explained. If it is in a language which she does not understand, it must, of course, be translated, and it is to be remembered that the clearness of the meaning of the deed will suffer in the process. The extent and character of the explanation required must depend on the circumstances. Length, intricacy, the number and complexity of the dispositions, or the unfamiliarity of the subject-matter, are all reasons for requiring an increased amount and efficiency of explanation. Thus a matter not likely to attract the attention of the executant in itself ought not to be relied on as binding, unless her attention has been directly drawn to it [Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (6)]. So if the deed, as presented for execution, differs substantially, either by way of addition or of omission, from the scheme and details which the intending settlor has previously laid down, the discrepancy ought to be clearly pointed out and its nature and effect should be fully described, unless, which must be rare, the difference is so obvious that even a person in the settlor's position must perceive and appreciate it for herself. If the description and explanation have been partial or erroneous, or have not been given at all, the question will then arise, as it arises where there has been no independent legal advice, whether, if proper information had been given, it would have affected the mind of the executant in completing the deed. On the other hand, the doctrine cannot be pushed so far as to demand the impossible. The mere declaration by the settlor, subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing obviously is not in itself conclusive. It must be a question whether, having regard to the proved personality of the settlor, the nature of the settlement, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the whole history of the parties, it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the settlor or not. If the answer is in the affirmative, those relying on the deed have discharged the onus which rests upon them. Of course fraud, duress and actual undue influence are separate matters.

In the present case it is quite clear that certain matters were not brought to the Appellant's notice before the deed was executed, or at all. Not only was a second mutwalli with an additional salary introduced into the draft which was executed, but it made no provision for the settlor's desires as to the maintenance and repair of the mosque in Ahmadpur and as to the various religious ceremonies mentioned by her to Jamal-ud-din, beyond including them among the objects on which the mutwallis might expend the wakf funds, if and so far as they thought proper. As the deed stands, the mutwallis could decline to continue any of the special pious observances which the Appellant desired to continue, and could leave her to maintain them herself out of her diminished income and to die in the knowledge that, at her death, these objects would have no one left to care for them.

Their Lordships cannot regard these matters as insignificant or such as the Plaintiff could reasonably be supposed not to insist upon. She was a woman of property, who had lived all her married life in her own family-house, hard by, as it would seem, to the mosque erected by her relations. Hers had been a lonely and restricted existence. Karim-ud-din, as a husband, was in many respects a very disappointing person. His own means were small, and for many years his official duties caused him to reside at a distance. She was herself piously disposed, and it was eminently natural in such a woman under such circumstances that she should attach importance to the instructions, which she gave to her husband through Jamal-ud-din. Her piety may well have manifested itself primarily in her care for the mosque, which her family had founded, and for the celebration of the observances to which she herself had diligently attended. If she had really appreciated that in none of these cases was that perpetual continuance assured, which was evidently dear to her mind, their Lordships are far from being satisfied that she would have patiently submitted to her disappointment and have accepted intelligently and without a word the surrender of her own preferences to the discretion of the mutwallis. The only prudent and probable conclusion is that, as the words were read over to her, she failed, very naturally, to observe the change. She would hear mention of the mosque and of nearly all the ceremonies by name, and would easily miss the difference between the inclusion of these objects in the powers of the mutwallis and the prescription of these objects as obligatory charities to be maintained by the mutwallis in any event. They are confirmed in this view by observing that, until a late stage in the argument before the Board, this precise discrepancy between the first draft of the wakfnama and its ultimate form had not attracted the attention of anybody, either in the Courts below or on this appeal. No doubt, where so many other points were in contest, this one might well pass unobserved, but this circumstance only makes it the more likely that the Appellant could not herself detect what has, in fact, eluded the vigilance of counsel and judges during two protracted hearings. It is not proved when or by whom the original draft was remodelled. There is no evidence that Wazir-ud-din so much as knew that the Appellant had given any particular instructions before the scheme was put into writing, and he could not draw the Appellant's special attention to something that he never knew. Upon the story told by the Respondents' witnesses there never was any chance that those, who explained the deed, should point out these matters, and it is certainly not enough to say that, if the Appellant cared about them, she should herself have asked about them, especially as the form of the deed was such as might well have misled her into taking it for a provision of all that she desired. From this point of view the Appellant's subsequent action does not assist the Respondents. Registration and mutation were promptly asked for by those interested in supporting the deed, and the Plaintiff herself attended the proceedings without protest. These circumstances are in themselves very favourable to the Respondents' case, but the registering officer, who says that he read and explained the deed to her, knew as little of the above-mentioned discrepancies as did Wazir-ud-din, and the Appellant's answers are quite consistent with her being in ignorance of a change, of which no one had informed her. As the Respondents have to bear the onus of bringing home to her mind the actual import of the deed, they cannot rely on the fact that the Appellant's own evidence is untrustworthy, for it is by the evidence of their own witnesses alone that this defect is established, and by that evidence they must stand. The conclusion that they have failed to discharge the burthen of proof is one arrived at not out of any consideration for this lady in particular, but in defence of those strict rules which have been laid down for the protection of the defenceless in India, and it is a matter of obligation upon their Lordships to be strict and unwavering about it. They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, and that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge should be restored with costs here and in both Courts below.

IN RE BRUNNER (2) referred to.

Proper use of powers under sec. 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and of statements of persons examined under sec. 36, cls. (4) and (5), indicated by RANKIN, J.

This was an appeal against the order passed by Pearson, J., in Insolvency Case No. 29 of 1922, Re : Nishi Kanto Chatterjee, declaring certain property as belonging to the estate of the said insolvent and ordering the Appellant, wife of the insolvent, to deliver up the possession of the property to the Official Assignee.

One of the creditors of the insolvent obtained a commission to examine the Appellant (who claimed the property as her own) as a witness under sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and the wife of the insolvent deposed. The material portions of her depositions are as follows :—

5 Q.—On what pay?

A.—At Rs. 350 per month

6 Q.—What post?

A.—I can't say that. At that time we were young in age.

7 Q.—What was your age at that time?

A.—About thirteen or fourteen years.

8 Q.—You mean at the time of his death?

A.—Not that, at the time of my father's death I was 16 or 17 years old.

15 Q.—You have already said that your father died when you were 16 and you have also said that your father retired 10 years prior to his death. Do you appreciate that he must have according to that retired from service when you were 6 years old?

A.—I can't say that definitely, whatever I have said was by andaaj.

16 Q.—May I take it that the fact of your father drawing a pay of Rs 350 a month is also a statement by andaaj on information received by you?

A.—As regards the statement I have made with regard to the salary of my father

I am positive but as regards my age I am not definite.

17 Q.—Did you ever see your father draw Rs. 350?

A.—Yes, I have seen my father bringing in Rs. 350 as his salary.

18 Q.—When, in what month or year?

A.—I can't give the year or month but I saw my father making over his salary to my mother after the same has been counted and these things happened while we were present.

30 Q.—Have you ever heard of your father making any testamentary disposition?

A.—No. His sons would be able to answer that.

31 Q.—Did your father leave you anything by testamentary disposition?

A.—Not by any Will but at the time of his death we were present and he gave 22,500 to us three sisters at the rate of 7,500 to each of us.

32 Q.—Have you any books of account of your own?

A.—No, not with me, I do not keep any books of my own. All my accounts are kept by my son-in-law.

33 Q.—What is his name?

A.—Kiranlal Gangopadhaya.

34 Q.—Has Kiran in his possession your books of account of the period at or about the time of your father's death?

A.—No. The account in respect of household expenses is with Kiran.

35 Q.—Where are the accounts of the period at or about the time of your father's death? (objected to).

A.—No accounts were kept. All that I can say is that the money which was given by my father was deposited at the Nagpur Bank through my eldest brother.

36 Q.—Has your elder brother any books of account of that period?

A.—My brother is dead

37 Q.—Have you tried to find out if your elder brother kept any books of account for that period?

A.—I had no occasion to make an enquiry regarding that matter.

42 Q.—At or about the time of the purchase did you take any sum from your brother as a loan?

JNANENDRA BALA DEBI v. THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA.

A.—I borrowed Rs. 6,000 at the time when I bought the house.

43 Q.—Did you execute any document, promissory note or receipt in favour of your brother?

A.—No, my brother had advanced the money trusting my words.

44 Q.—Did you agree to pay interest on this money?

A.—I told my brother at that time that I would not be able to pay any interest. The wife of my brother was not agreeable to such an arrangement. I suggested that I would deposit with my brother whatever ornaments I have by way of security for the loan but my brother would not agree to that and said that he would not be so mean as to realise interest from his own sister on pledge of ornaments.

45 Q.—Is there anything in writing anywhere to show that your brother advanced you any money?

A.—No.

49 Q.—How many years from now your brother died?

A.—About 9 years ago.

50 Q.—Is your brother's wife still living?

A.—Yes.

51 Q.—You have already told us that she knew about this loan?

A.—Yes.

52 Q.—Has she up to now in writing made any demand for the return of this sum?

A.—No.

53 Q.—Besides your brother and sister-in-law does anybody know about this loan (objected to)?

A.—No.

55 Q.—Was he at that time involved in debts?

A.—He has had debts but I do not know the volume of such debt.

60 Q.—Was the Rs. 6,000 paid to you on the same occasion and on the same date?

A.—Yes, that is so. He paid me Rs 15,500 on the same date.

61 Q.—Was that the same date on which you asked for the money?

A.—I had asked for that amount when the negotiations for the purchase were going on and that was a few days before the purchase.

62 Q.—How many days after your asking for the money was the sum actually paid by your brother?

A.—I cannot say that for certain. But it was when negotiations were going on for the purchase.

63 Q.—Have you no idea, whether it was the next day or a month after?

A.—I have no recollection.

67 Q.—You have sworn that you have accumulated Rs. 5,000 from monies given by your husband for household expenses?

A.—Yes.

68 Q.—Have you got any books of account or document from which you can show you saved a single pice?

A.—No. I have never kept any books of account.

69 Q.—How many years' savings this Rs. 5,000 represent?

A.—I do not remember that. Whenever I got any sum I kept that apart.

70 Q.—At what rate per month used your husband to pay for household expenses?

A.—There was no fixity about it. I would get money whenever I required.

71 Q.—Can you tell me what your savings were during any specific year when your husband used to contribute towards family expenses? (objected to).

A.—I have nothing in writing. Whenever I received any sum I would take a larger amount than would be actually necessary and after meeting the necessary expenses of the household I would save and keep apart the rest.

72 Q.—That does not answer my question. Question repeated. (objected to).

A.—No. I have no idea.

82 Q.—How much?

A.—Rs. 1,500.

83 Q.—When?

A.—At about the time of the purchase of the house.

84 Q.—Was anybody present when your mother made this present?

A.—No.

85 Q.—How long from now did your mother die?

A.—3 years.

86 Q.—How long before the date of actual purchase did your mother make over the money to you?

JNANENDRA BALA DEBI v. THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA.

A.—I do not remember that. It was long before the actual purchase that I told my mother and also my brother that they have to advance money to me in connection with the purchase of my house.

93 Q.—Do I understand you to say that you do not remember now as to whether you got the Rs. 1,500 from your mother before the date of the conveyance or after such date?

(Question objected to).

A.—I have no clear recollection.

99 Q.—Where did she get that money?

A.—Is it possible that my mother had no money of her own. A woman would always keep something by for her rainy days.

100 Q.—I take it she had no Zemindaries.

A.—That is so, but she saved from contributions made by my father.

101 Q.—Was that money invested in your brother's bank at Nagpur? (objected to).

A.—No. But I know this much that before the death of my father he had made such an arrangement that my mother would get a monthly allowance of Rs. 15. I do not know whether she had saved out of her monthly allowance. As a fact my mother had money.

102 Q.—Was this arrangement you speak of in writing?

A.—I can't say.

103 Q.—Was the conveyance or its draft ever explained to you?

A.—I don't remember.

107 Q.—Before the conveyance, was there any agreement to sell or a Bayona?

A.—Yes.

108 Q.—Was that in writing?

A.—I paid the money and a Bayona was made.

109 Q.—How much did you pay?

A.—I can't say. I think there is something in writing with them.

112 Q.—Was this document explained to you? (objected to).

A.—I was never anxious at any moment to know the contents of the document and I don't know what it contained.

119 Q.—Do you up to this date know that your attorney is the same as your husband's attorney?

A.—I do not know.

122 Q.—Have you yourself given any instructions to your attorney?

A.—It is I who have been conducting this case but I do not know who is my attorney.

128 Q.—Who gave instructions for that affidavit?

A.—I do not know, I did what I was asked to do.

133 Q.—Who got the benefit of the money?

A.—My husband.

140 Q.—What was the rate of interest?

A.—Can't say.

141 Q.—What was the date of the second mortgage, how many years after the date of the purchase?

A.—I do not remember at the distance of time.

148 Q.—What was the rate of interest?

A.—I do not know.

149 Q.—Who was the attorney?

A.—I don't know.

150 Q.—Who took the money?

A.—I myself.

151 Q.—Who took the money of the 2nd mortgage?

A.—I received the sum for my husband and I made it over to my husband.

153 Q.—Do you say that you made over the Rs. 35,000 to your son-in-law for carrying on your business?

A.—Not the whole of the amount. A part of the amount was applied to the business and the rest was kept with me in order to meet demands from time to time in connection with the business. I have made a mistake which I want to correct. The third mortgage was effected for the purpose of paying off the previous mortgage debt of Rs. 13,000 as the mortgagee had been pressing for his moneys, to apply a portion to the business and to keep a certain amount in my own hands.

159 Q.—Do you know what books of account are kept for your business?

A.—I don't know. I never enquired.

163 Q.—Is it business as a broker in jute, dealer in jute or what?

A.—I don't know how the business is being carried on. I supply funds. They buy jutes.

After the public examination of the insolvent, the application under sec. 36 of the Act came before Pearson, J. Against the said order the wife of the insolvent appealed.

Sir Benode Mitter (with Mr. S. R. Dass) argued on behalf of the Appellant that the evidence of the insolvent taken in the public examination is not admissible against the Appellant. Refers to sec. 27 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. [Cited New York Life Insurance Company v. Phosbe Stella Gamble (8), In re Brünner (2) and Jarwa Bai v. Pitambar Nilambar (9)].

In Hindu law there is no presumption that the transaction which stands in the name of the wife is the husband's transaction. [Cited Manada Sundari v Mahananda Sarnakar (10)].

The Official Assignee who represents the insolvent cannot be in a better position than the insolvent himself. [Cited In re Maplebuck, Ex parte Caldecott (11)].

The onus is on the Official Assignee to show that the property really belongs to the insolvent. There is no evidence to show that the insolvent was in a position to buy the property. When complicated questions of title are involved the Court should not make any order on a summary application. [Cited In the matter of Umbica Nundan Biswas (12), In re Lucas (13) and Baldwin on Bankruptcy, 11th Ed., p. 20]. Sec. 36 of Presidency Towns Insolvency Act applies only where there is a clear admission of the deponent that the property belongs to the insolvent.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (with Mr. B. C.

Ghose) on behalf of the Respondent argued that the insolvency evidence is admissible inasmuch as notice was given stating that it would be used as evidence. [Cited Madhoram Raghunull v. The Official Assignee (1)].

The Court can decide the question of title under sec. 7 of Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The trial Court has exercised its discretion and this Court should not interfere. The evidence shows that the Appellant had no money of her own and could not possibly buy any property.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Jnanendra Bala Debi against an order which was made by my learned brother Mr. Justice Pearson on the 17th of June 1925.

The order was made upon an application made by the Official Assignee of Calcutta in the insolvency of Nishi Kanto Chatterjee, who is the husband of the Appellant; and, the notice was to the effect that an application would be made by the Official Assignee for a declaration that the premises, No. 110, Beniatolla Street in the town of Calcutta, belong to the estate of the insolvent and that Srimati Jnanendra Bala Debi be ordered to deliver up possession of the said premises to the Official Assignee at such time, in such manner and on such terms as to the Court might seem fit and proper.

The learned Judge allowed the application, and the order was that the premises belonged to the estate of the insolvent and directed the Appellant to deliver possession thereof to the Official Assignee.

The learned Judge appears to have assumed that the application was made under sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act: and, the learned Advocate, who appeared for the Official Assignee, informed the Court that both the parties treated the application of the hearing as having been made under sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

In my judgment that was a mistake. It may be that the mistake arose by reason of the fact that the Appellant was examined under sec. 36. The evidence of the Appellant was taken on commission on the 4th April, 10th, 17th and 22nd May 1924 in pursuance of an order made on the 14th of March 1924, and the application, which is the subject of this appeal, was not made until May 1925.

It was, however, contended by the learned Advocate on behalf of the Official Assignee that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application and make the order under the provisions of sec. 7 of the Act, and that therefore the learned Judge's order should not be set aside.

The learned Judge did not act on the Appellant's evidence only: for he admitted as evidence against the Appellant the statements which were made by the insolvent on his public examination although the admission of such evidence was objected to by the learned Advocate who appeared for the Appellant.

The learned Judge in admitting the statements made by the insolvent on his public examination relied upon the case of Madhoram Raghumull v. The Official Assignee (1) and, the passage upon which the learned Judge relied is at page 614.

With great respect to the learned Judge, I am of opinion that the decision in that case was misunderstood. The facts of that case, shortly stated, were that the insolvents Surajmull and Mongalchand were adjudicated insolvents on the 15th of March 1921. Thirteen days before the adjudication, viz., on the 2nd of March, the insolvents had assigned to certain creditors, who were called Roghu Nath Das Sew Lal, some outstanding debts which were alleged to be owing to the insolvent firm. The proprietor of the firm of Raghu Nath Das Sew Lal was a man called Ram Lal Pachisia. Ram Lal Pachisia on the 29th of June 1921 assigned his right, title and interest under the assignment of the 2nd of March to the Appellants Madhoram Raghumull. An application was made by the Official Assignee to the learned Judge taking insolvency matters on the Original Side, under the provisions of sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act to have the two assignments of the 2nd of March 1921 and the 29th of June 1921 declared void as against the Official Assignee: and, the learned Judge made the order, declaring that the two assignments were void.

Madhoram Raghumull then appealed to the Court of Appeal. There was certain evidence before the learned Judge. It appeared that among others Raghumull, a member of the Appellant firm, Ram Lal Pachisia, the proprietor of the firm of Raghu Nath Das Sew Lal, and Mongalchand, one of the insolvents, were examined under sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act: and, the question was raised whether the statements of the insolvent made on such examination could be admitted as evidence against the Appellants Madhoram Raghumull and against Ram Lal Pachisia.

In giving the judgment in that case I am reported to have said, "As at present advised, however, I am of opinion that the deposition of the insolvent was not admissible as evidence against the Appellants or Pachisia, but I do not decide this point and I leave that question open; if it ever becomes necessary to decide it on another occasion."

I did not decide it on that occasion, because, as I stated in that judgment, I did not rely upon the statements of the insolvent in any way. The case was decided upon evidence other than the statements of the insolvent, both by Mr. Justice Richardson and by me.

I do not understand how the above-mentioned case can be understood to be a decision that the deposition of the insolvent in the present case would be admissible as evidence against the Appellant.

The learned Advocate for the Official Assignee drew my attention to a passage which appears at the right-hand side of page 614 which begins as follows:— "The learned Counsel said that it was desirable that the practice of this Court should be laid down clearly." This related to the question and the sufficiency of the notice, which in the cited case was in general term, and what followed was meant to be a statement of what notice should be given with regard to depositions which were intended to be used upon an application under sec. 56, and it related only to depositions which would be admissible upon such an application.

It was a statement of the practice to be observed as regards notice, and in my judgment the passage cannot be read as a decision that the mere fact of giving notice would make admissible that which was otherwise inadmissible.

I adhere to the opinion expressed in the above-mentioned case and, in my judgment, the deposition of the insolvent taken on his public examination was not admissible against the Appellant upon the application which was before the learned Judge in the present case.

The reasons why the deposition of the insolvent is not admissible against the Appellant in such a case are set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice Cave in Re: Brünner (2).

I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Advocate, who appeared for the Appellant, was right in his contention that the learned Judge ought not to have admitted the deposition of the insolvent as evidence against the Appellant.

That, however, does not dispose of this appeal.

The learned Advocate who appeared for the Official Assignee read the evidence of the Appellant herself and invited the Court to come to the conclusion upon that evidence that the premises in question really belonged to the insolvent.

I must say that I find it exceedingly difficult to accept the evidence of the Appellant. It seems to me that it is unreliable. I need not state the reasons for that conclusion in detail. But that conclusion is not sufficient to justify the Court in acceding to the contention of the learned Advocate for the Official Assignee. It does not seem to me that because the evidence of the Appellant is rejected it must follow that the premises belonged to the insolvent. In my judgment, if we were so to hold, we should be speculating as to the real facts, when there is no sufficient evidence to justify the Court in arriving at that conclusion. Although the evidence of the Appellant may be full of suspicion, I am of opinion that there is not sufficient evidence before the Court to justify it in holding that the Official Assignee has proved that the premises in question belonged to the insolvent.

The result, therefore, in my judgment, is that this appeal must be allowed and the order which the learned Judge made on the 17th of June 1925, must be set aside, and the application dismissed.

The Official Assignee must pay the Appellant's costs of the appeal and of the proceedings before the learned Judge on the Original Side.

RANKIN, J.—I agree.

In this case it appears that the Appellant was summoned as a witness under the private examination section, sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and was questioned before a Commissioner as to her insolvent husband, his dealings and his property. She appeared before the Commissioner as a witness; and although she was allowed the assistance of a solicitor, the right of a witness to be re-examined under sec. 36 is a strictly limited right.

The answers given by her at this private examination are evidence against her. They are not merely evidence against her in any bankruptcy proceedings; they are evidence against her in any civil proceedings, whether in insolvency or whether in a civil suit on exactly the same principle. [Cf. Exp. Hall, In re Cooper (3), cf. the decision of Jessel M. R. on p. 583, which is not the same as the head-note. Cf. also Evidence Act, sec. 18].

Thereupon the Official Assignee was minded to claim a certain property No. 110, Beniatolla Street. That property stands and has since 1914 stood in the name of the Appellant. It appears to have been purchased in July 1914 for Rs. 19,000. It appears to have been mortgaged in August 1914 for Rs. 11,000, in September 1915 for Rs. 13,000, and it seems that in comparatively recent years another mortgage of Rs. 35,000 was taken and the prior mortgagees were paid off.

I collect that this property is in the possession of the lady: at all events, it is a property in or upon which the lady and the insolvent have been living; and we are told on the part of the Official Assignee that the property is worth some Rs. 60,000 and more, so that there is a very substantial value in the equity of redemption. When the Official Assignee made up his mind as a result of his investigation to move the Court to declare that the lady was a mere benamdar for the insolvent and had so been for something like ten years he had to choose what course he would take. The ordinary course, having regard to the subject-matter and the length of time over which the investigation might have to be carried, would have been to commence a suit against the lady for a declaration that she was a benamdar for the insolvent. But under sec. 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act this Court in its insolvency jurisdiction has jurisdiction to determine such a point as that; just in the same way as where a person who carries on a retail business, becomes an insolvent in this Court, the Court would have jurisdiction by motion in insolvency to collect debts due to the business by third parties in Tipperah or somewhere else. As a rule, however, that class of proceeding against a mere third person as against whom the Official Assignee claims no higher title than the insolvent's is not brought in the Insolvency Jurisdiction and in any ordinary case any such motion brought in that jurisdiction unfairly and unreasonably, would be refused as the learned Judge is in no way obliged in the Insolvency Jurisdiction to try such a question. I would guard myself from being supposed to lay down that the only proper subjects for such a motion are cases within sec. 55 or 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. There are many other cases. There may be cases, for example, where a property is claimed as having been taken by the Opposite Party from the insolvent after an available act of bankruptcy and it can be successfully claimed if the Opposite Party cannot bring himself within the protective sections. There may be cases where a transfer can be set aside if it is after an adjudication order. There are cases which come under sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, where the right asserted by the Assignee is a right which belongs to creditors as such. It is important that it should be understood, first, that the rule that the Official Assignee should have recourse to this jurisdiction only when he has a higher title than the insolvent's, is not a rule of law in the sense that the Insolvency Court has not the jurisdiction to entertain such a case and, secondly, that it is not restricted only to secs. 55 and 56. But the rule is well-established if it is not rigid and it is necessary in fairness to third parties who cannot help their creditors debtors or cestuis qui trustent going insolvent, who may live far from Calcutta, and whose right may be difficult to ascertain apart from a regular suit. It is necessary also in the interests of this Court which cannot undertake in its insolvency jurisdiction to collect debts all over India or to decide on motion all classes of disputes merely because an insolvent or his estate is a party. [Cf. Re Pollard (4) and Re Yates (5)]. It may be noted that sec. 26 of the Indian Insolvent Act, 1848 (11 and 12 Vic., Cap. 21) is part of an entirely different scheme and corresponds neither to sec. 7 nor to any part of sec. 36 of the Act of 1909. [Cf. the observations of Peacock, C. J., in Barlow v. Cochrane (6) and such a case as In re

(3) 19 Ch. Div. 580 (1876).

Khettsey Das (7)]. The scheme of 1848 relates to a very different type of Court.

In the present case I do not collect that the Appellant took such objection on these lines, to the proceedings being in the Insolvency Jurisdiction as to make it just to decide this case upon the mere question of propriety of forum. I rather gather that at the hearing both parties were under a mistaken notion that the proceedings were in some way or other under sec. 36. But whether in this case the Official Assignee would not have been more successful, had he proceeded by a regular suit, is a matter as to which one may have one's own opinion.

The matter of the ownership of this important property, apart from inadmissible evidence which has been allowed in the case, has to be decided upon an affidavit by the Official Assignee which sets out nothing except pieces from the Appellant's deposition, an affidavit by the lady, one or two documents such as the mortgages, and that is all. When one comes to look at the deposition of the lady one finds that her story is not such that any Court would be justified in acting upon it, if she were a Plaintiff suing anybody else. Her positive account of how she came to acquire this property is not only confused, (as to which one may be allowed to say that it is perhaps small blame to her) but it is highly unconvincing and full of suspicion. Nevertheless one has to ask oneself whether there are any such admissions of fact as to entitle the Court to come to the conclusion that it is proved that the property was the insolvent's. We are dealing with a transaction of 1914 and so far as we know the insolvent did not get into the Insolvency Court till 1922—a very long time afterwards. There is no presumption that he was in difficulties and there is no presumption that he had money wherewith to buy the house. Cases of benami have been often dealt with by the Court. There is no presumption that what stands in the name of the wife belongs to the husband. In India if it is shown that the money to purchase the estate was the husband's money in origin, then in contradistinction from the law of England the fact of the wife's relationship does not raise any presumption of advancement; but until it is shown that the husband's money was the origin of the purchase, that line of argument does not commence at all. In the absence of direct evidence that the origin of the property, the purchase-money, was from the husband, indirect evidence, no doubt, can be entertained and it can be shown from the dealings of the parties with the property that as between them the property must have belonged to the husband. But in the case of husband and wife, the mere fact that money which is borrowed goes to the husband or is put into the husband's business is no convincing evidence that the property was not the wife's. There are other possible explanations and it is not possible in such a case for a Court to proceed by an abstract deduction upon so ambiguous a circumstance as that.

For these reasons, it appears to me that when this matter is looked at upon the only admissible evidence the Official Assignee's claim must fail, and the judgment of the learned Judge in so far as it does not refer to evidence which is inadmissible, namely, the husband's answers on his public examination seems to me to lack cogency. He says: "The learned Counsel has argued on behalf of the wife that no evidence has been given that the husband himself was in a position to buy this property, that there is no presumption of benami and in the absence of evidence on the husband's side it must be taken that the claim now made by the Official Assignee fails." That is the very contention which seems to me to be right. The learned Judge's answer to that is this: "To that I should be prepared to assent if there were anything at all to support the statements or any of the statements made by the wife as regards the source of the money which she alleges came to her hands and enabled her to pay the consideration for the purchase." With great respect to the learned Judge it is no evidence that the property was bought by the insolvent, to show that the wife's story that the property is hers is uncorroborated.

I come now to sec. 36 of Act III of 1909. This has not only been misunderstood by the parties before the learned Judge but I have some reason to believe that the misunderstanding is widespread.

The section has I think been misinterpreted by false analogies drawn from the Act of 1848. Sec. 36 of the old Act corresponds to part of the present sec. 36 but nothing else corresponds.

Sub-secs. (4) and (5) of sec. 36 of the Act of 1909 differ somewhat from their real proto-type, i.e., from the corresponding part of what is now sec. 25 of the present Bankruptcy Act in England (which used to be sec. 27 of the Act of 1883). The English Act runs: (4) "If any person on examination before the Court admits that he is indebted to the debtor, the Court may . . ." and so forth; (5) "If any person on examination before the Court admits that he has in his possession any property belonging to the debtor, the Court may . . ." and so forth. The change made in the Indian Act is this: "If on the examination of such person the Court is satisfied that he is indebted to the insolvent, the Court may . . ."

JNANENDRA BALA DEBI v THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA.

"If, on the examination of any such person, the Court is satisfied that he has in his possession any property belonging to the insolvent, the Court may" It seems quite clear that that change of wording has only a limited effect. The provisions of sec. 36 mean that when the witness is before the Court, the Court may at that time, (and even though for this purpose it is the Registrar and not the Judge) proceed even without an actual admission, if it is satisfied to the effect laid down in these two sub-sections. The power under the English Act has hardly been exercised but it is quite clear that it is exercisable in all cases coming within the section even by the Registrar of a County Court in the country. Whoever holds the examination has the power under the sub-sections provided it is held by the Court [cf. sec. 6 (1)]. It is quite true there is power to order the examination to be done by a Commissioner, but in that case I think it tolerably clear that sub-secs. (4) and (5) are out of action altogether although the same result can be obtained by proceeding under sec. 7 and using the deposition as evidence against the Respondent. What is contemplated under these sub-sections is the most summary of all proceedings, namely, an order made upon the witness there and then and without previous notice and it would be absolutely wrong ever to act under sub-sec. (4) or (5) unless there was a case so free from difficulty even on the story of the witness as to make it reasonable to act brevi manu. It is quite extravagant to suppose that in this case and under this section any order could have been made. A question of this sort whether a purchase ten years ago in the name of a lady was a purchase benami, is a long way from being within anything that sec. 36 contemplates. The correct course in these cases where there is any real conflict is either to proceed by way of a motion before the Judge in insolvency or to proceed by way of suit. As an application under sec. 36, the present case would fall to be dismissed in limine and I have only dealt with the facts of the case at all because Mr. Banerjee sought to uphold the learned Judge's order as a good order under sec. 7.

With reference to the question whether the insolvent's evidence on his public examination is evidence in favour of his estate on a claim by the Official Assignee against a third party, that is a very easy and a very old question of law. It has been well-settled for years that the evidence of an insolvent in his public examination is not admissible against anybody except himself. It is not admissible in favour of his own estate as against a third party. It is possible for the Official Assignee to call the insolvent and it may be possible in certain circumstances in that way to get from him the fact that on his public examination he said so and so: when that is done then the insolvent can be cross-examined; and the Respondent has the opportunity of showing that it does not matter what the insolvent says, he has contradicted himself and his words are of no account. Even although it may be shown that the Respondent was a creditor and although it could be shown that the creditor had attended personally at the public examination and that he had heard the insolvent say what he had said, the insolvent's statements would not be evidence as such against the Respondent for any purpose. What X says in the presence of A is sometimes evidence against A in that A's conduct in relation to the statement throws light upon the facts, it is analogous to an admission by conduct; but in a judicial proceeding a party has no opportunity to interfere with statements being made which he does not admit; and though the circumstance might be put to the creditor in cross-examination, it is quite wrong even in such a case to suppose that his presence at the public examination makes the insolvent's statements evidence against him. In my judgment the learned Judge has proceeded upon materials which were inadmissible and there are no sufficient materials on the record to support his finding.

As regards the case of Madhoram Raghumull v. The Official Assignee (1), I have read that case with some care and I do not find that there is anything in the judgment contrary to the view I have expressed. As I regard the matter it was accepted that the deposition under sec. 36 was only evidence against the witness who gave it. The question as to the public examination, it was apparently not necessary then to decide.

ance propounded in the Dayabhaga and a daughter's son's son who is unable to confer any spiritual benefit is no heir.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of May 1923 against the decree of Babu Nirode Ranjan Guha, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 24th of January 1923, reversing the decree of Babu Dharendra Nath Bagchi, Munsif, 3rd Court at Bhanga, dated the 5th of April 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Kanjilal and Babu Surendra Nath Das Gupta (II) for the Appellant.

Babus Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Nibaran Chandra Samajpaty for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by Defendant No. 6 from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the 2nd Court of Faridpur reversing a decision of the Munsif of the 3rd Court of Bhanga. The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs for declaration of their title to and for possession of a certain plot of niskar land, plot No. 137 of the cadastral survey, which was in Estate No. 1187. Some question was raised in the Courts below as to whether the property in dispute was niskar or mal land of the estate, but it has been found that the property is niskar and this is not questioned in second appeal. The plots originally belonged to one Raghu Moni Banerji. He died leaving a daughter Dakhina who had a son Purno. Purno died leaving him surviving three sons, who are the Plaintiffs in the present suit. Their case was that Dakhina succeeded to the property on the death of Raghu Moni and that on Dakhina's death the property passed to her son Purno and on his death to his sons, the present Plaintiffs. Their case was that they had been in possession through their bhag tenants and that they had been dispossessed. The Defendants or some of them were owners of the Estate No. 1187. As we have already stated they claim the land as mal land of the estate. The case was only contested by Defendant No. 6 who had purchased the land from the other Defendants. Although the Plaintiffs' case was that Purno had inherited after his mother and they had inherited from him, it turned out in the course of the case that Purno predeceased his mother Dakhina. The suit was dismissed by the first Court but the lower Appellate Court allowed the Plaintiffs to raise what is said to be a fresh case, namely, that although Purno predeceased his mother, Dakhina, the Plaintiffs inherited the property as Dakhina's heirs.

The only question that arises in this appeal is whether under the facts and circumstances stated, namely, that Purno predeceased his mother, the Plaintiffs are entitled to claim the property as heirs of Raghu Moni. The lower Appellate Court has held that they were entitled and this is the proposition which is disputed before us. It is stated that in no case can the grandsons of a daughter inherit the property as they cannot confer spiritual benefit on the original owner Raghu Moni and that the power to confer spiritual benefit is the only test of inheritance. In support of this proposition we were referred, first of all, to a passage in Mayne's Hindu Law (8th Edition), p. 706, sec. 505 and also to a passage in Trevelyan's Hindu Law (2nd Edition), page 410, where the learned author states that the daughter's son's son is not an heir according to the Bengal School. Then we were referred to the actual text of the Dayabhaga in the translation by Colebrooke, Chap. 11, sec. 2, verse (ii) at page 159, where it is stated as follows:—"It is the daughter's son who is the giver of a funeral oblation, not his son; nor the daughter's daughter for the funeral oblation ceases with him" and in the analysis at p. ix it is stated that "in default of the widow the daughter inherits." The daughter that is barren or a sonless widow or female children, hence daughter's daughter, and daughter's son's son are not heirs being incompetent to confer spiritual benefit; and in support of the proposition that inheritance depends on the power to confer spiritual benefit and on this alone we were referred to the Full Bench case of Gooroo Gobinda Saha v. Anund Lal Ghosh (1). The passage relied on in the judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter is to the following effect: "Having shown by the preceding observations that the principle of spiritual benefit is the sole foundation of the theory of inheritance propounded in the Dayabhaga we proceed to determine whether the particular claimant before us, namely, the son of a paternal uncle's daughter, is competent to confer any such benefit on the deceased proprietor. We are of opinion that he is, and we may add that this point was not even contested before us by the pleader for the Respondent." We think therefore that this passage clearly lays down the principle that the foundation of the theory of inheritance as propounded in the Dayabhaga proceeds on the doctrine that only those can inherit who can confer spiritual benefit on the owner whose property they claim to inherit. Similar authority is to be found in another Full Bench case of this Court in Digumber Roy Chowdhury v. Motilal Bandopadhyaya (2), the material passages in the judgment on this point being those occurring at page 567. There is no doubt, as has been pointed out by a reference to the text books and to passages in the case to which we have referred, that from time to time attempts had been made to throw doubt on the proposition laid down in the passage to which we have referred in Gooroo Gobinda Saha v. Anund Lal Ghosh (1), but the attempts that have been made to re-open the question have always failed on the ground that the Courts have stated that that principle must be taken as decided by the passage to which we have referred in the case which is a decision which has stood for 50 years. But it is argued on behalf of the Respondents that even accepting this principle as there is no one alive who can confer spiritual benefit the grandsons of a daughter may be entitled to inherit on the ground of their propinquity to the original owner of the property in default of the existence of persons who can confer such spiritual benefit. In support of this proposition we were referred to the case of Radharaman Chowdhuri v. Gopal Chandra Chakraborty (3). The cases to which we have referred are there considered and the argument that was propounded to the Court based on the right of persons standing in propinquity to the original owner to inherit in default of the existence of persons who can confer spiritual benefit was discussed. But in the result no decision was arrived at by the Court on the application which was merely an application to appear and contest certain probate proceedings. We do not think therefore that the learned vakil who appeared for the Respondents is entitled to rely on anything that occurred in Radharaman Chowdhuri v.

(2) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 563 (1873).

Gopal Chandra Chakraborty (3) in support of his argument, for as we have already stated we do not think that any decision was come to there. In my view the passages to which we have referred in the two Full Bench cases lay down clearly that unless a person is in a position to confer spiritual benefit on the owner of the property whose property he claims he is not and cannot be an heir of such a person and cannot therefore claim to inherit such property.

This being so, we think that the appeal must succeed on this ground, namely, that the Respondents here who succeeded in the Courts below are not heirs of Raghu Moni and have, therefore, no interest in the property which they claim. They were suing in ejectment and it was for them to establish their title. This they have failed to do and the appeal accordingly succeeds and with costs in all Courts.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukerji for the Accused.

Babu Ramoni Mohan Chatterji for the Complainant.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

PEARSON, J.—This is a Reference under sec. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure made by the learned Sessions Judge of Birbhum.

It appears that the two accused, who were father and son, were convicted of an offence under sec. 379 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of two trees which they cut down either partly or altogether.

The facts show that they were admittedly occupying a pachai shop for about three years and that upon the bank of a tank near by, these trees were growing in what formed the compound of the house occupied by the accused.

The learned Sessions Judge has given his opinion that the complaint does not disclose an offence under sec. 379 of the Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as the trees are admitted to have been on the holding in possession of the accused. That is an admission which disposes of the case because the offence under sec. 379 is an offence against possession.

It is said by the learned vakil appearing for the complainant that an admission in these circumstances should not be held necessarily binding upon his client in a proceeding of this kind which is not a judgment and in which the learned Sessions Judge does not come to any decision on the lines of a judgment. But it is quite clear that if upon the proceedings before the learned Judge upon which the Reference is made, admissions of fact should be made by either party, then those admissions of fact ought to be accepted by this Court for the purpose of the Reference : and, in the present case, it appears from the order-sheet that before the motion for Reference was made by the accused, notice was served upon the Opposite Party and that pleaders for both parties were heard. We have, however, been referred to the judgment of the trying Magistrate in connection with what is said to be a mistake with regard to these admissions : and, although there are certain statements there, which taken by themselves, might be construed into a finding that the compound in which these trees grew was not in possession of the accused, there are, on the other hand, other statements which would certainly lead to that conclusion.

I would, therefore, accept the Reference, set aside the conviction and the sentence, and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 22, r. 3 (2) (1) and r. 12—Decree under old Code for ascertainment of mesne profits in execution—Death, if causes abatement.—Substitution, if necessary.

Proceedings for ascertainment of mesne profits under a decree passed when the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, was in force are proceedings in execution and not proceedings in the suit. Or. 22, r. 12, of the Civil Procedure Code, applies to them, so that no substitution is necessary in the case of death and no abatement under Or. 22, r. 3 (2), sub-r. (1).

This was an appeal (No. 101 of 1923) from a decree, dated the 10th March 1921, of the High Court at Patna, which dismissed an application for the revision of an order, dated the 9th April 1920, of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr.

In 1901 Bhup Narain Singh and Baijnath Singh instituted a suit against Baijnath Goenka, the father of the present Appellant, for the recovery of possession of a certain estate by setting aside a revenue sale thereof and for mesne profits.

The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge on the 28th November 1905 and his decision was affirmed by the High Court in 1908, and by the Privy Council in 1913 (vide 17 C. W. N. 485).

The order in Council provided for the ascertainment at the execution stage of mesne profits and the Plaintiffs were each awarded their definite share in the mesne profits so to be ascertained.

In August 1914 the Plaintiffs applied for ascertainment of mesne profits and the Subordinate Judge held that they should be calculated only from the date of the Order in Council.

The High Court on appeal (Chapman and Roe, JJ.) decided on the 8th August 1917 that mesne profits were to be ascertained as from the said 28th November 1905.

Bhup Narain Singh died in January 1918 and Baijnath Singh a month later. On the 24th January 1920 the Appellant, who had been substituted on the record for his father applied for an order that the suit had abated.

On the 14th February 1920 the sons of Bhup Narain Singh obtained an order ex parte to be substituted on the record for their deceased father. On the 13th March 1920 the Appellant made the application now under appeal that the order of substitution might be cancelled and for a declaration that the suit had abated.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application holding that the inquiry as to mesne profits was a proceeding in execution of a decree within the meaning of Or. 22, r. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code and that therefore r. 3 of that order providing for abatement did not apply thereto.

An application by the Appellant for revision was refused by the High Court and the Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The judgment of the High Court was pronounced by Das, J., who inter alia stated as follows: "In dealing with the question whether mesne profits could be ascertained in the suit itself or in the execution proceedings, we must be guided by the Code of 1882, for the decree was passed while the Code of 1882 was in operation, but, in dealing with the question whether the proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits have abated. we must be controlled by the Code of 1908, for the application for the ascertainment of mesne profits was made after the Code of 1908 came into operation. Now it may be conceded at once—it was conceded before us in the arguments—that if the provision of Or. 22, r. 3 (2) applies, then the proceedings have abated, as confessedly no application was made under sub-r. (1) within the time limited by law. But then Or. 22, r. 12, provides that nothing in r. 3 shall apply to proceedings in execution of a decree or order; and it was argued before us that as mesne profits under the Code of 1882 could only be ascertained in the execution department, the proceedings in connection with the ascertainment of mesne profits in this case must be regarded as proceedings in execution, and, accordingly outside the operation of Or. 22, r. 3.

The decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge provided that the mesne profits from the date of the decision was to be assessed at the execution stage. This decree was upheld first by the Calcutta High Court and then by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If this decree was in conformity with the procedure as laid down in the Code of 1882, then it must follow that the proceedings directed by the decree in this case are proceedings in execution and therefore within r. 12 of Or. 22.

In my view, there is no possible room for controversy in this matter. Sec. 211 gave power to the Court, in a suit for recovery of immoveable property, to provide for the payment of the mesne profits in respect of such property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the successful party and sec. 244 provided that questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed inquiry and questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits which the decree has made payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit, between the date of its institution, and the execution of decree, shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree. I have no doubt whatever that the policy of the Code of 1882 was to make the proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits proceedings in execution; the decision in Ram Kishore Ghose v. Gopi Kanta Shaha (1) furnishes a direct authority in support of this view.

But it was argued that Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen (2) has laid down a contrary rule. No doubt there are observations in this case which, if taken out of the context, would seem to support the contention of the Petitioner; but the actual decision amounts to no more than this, that proceedings for ascertaining the amount of mesne profits awarded by the decree in accordance with the provisions of sec. 211 or 212 of the Code of 1882 are not proceedings in execution of a decree in regard to any fixed sum, but merely in continuation of the original suit, so that such proceedings were not governed either by Art. 178 or by Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877.

* * * * *

We were, however, referred to the following passage in the judgment of the Full Bench:—‘The proceedings, therefore, in determining the amount of the wasilat are not proceedings in execution of a decree in regard to any fixed sum, but merely a continuation of the original suit and carried on in the same way as if a single suit were brought for mesne profits by itself.' Two arguments were founded on this passage—first, that proceedings for ascertainment of mesne profits are not proceedings in execution, and, secondly, that such proceedings are proceedings in continuation of the suit. So far as the second point is concerned, it does not carry us very far, for it has been held that proceedings in execution and indeed proceedings in appeal are all proceedings in continuation of the suit. Quite apart from the fact that there is a wide difference between a proceeding in the suit and a proceeding in continuation of the suit, it must be remembered that the learned Judges in the case cited discussed the problem from the point of view of limitation and nothing else. On the first point, the learned Judges were very careful to say, not that the proceedings in determining the amount of wasilat are not proceedings in execution of a decree, but that such proceedings are not proceedings in execution of a decree in regard to any fixed sum. I may point out again that the whole problem was discussed from the point of view of limitation. If it was a proceeding in execution of a decree in regard to a fixed sum, then there would be a decree to execute, and consequently limitation would apply. The conclusion that a proceeding is not a proceeding in execution of a decree in regard to a fixed sum, does not, in my view, negative the conclusion that such a proceeding is a proceeding in execution.

I hold that under the Code of 1882, a proceeding for the ascertainment of mesne profits was a proceeding in execution and that, as the decree, in the present case, was passed under the Code of 1882, such proceedings must be held in execution and not in the suit. That being so, Or. 22, r. 12 applies, and it must follow that substitution was not necessary."

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.—The proceedings in question were original and the parties to the suit or their representatives were necessary parties to be on the record for the ascertainment of mesne profits. On the death of each of the Plaintiffs their representatives should have been brought on the record; on the expiry of six months from the dates of their deaths the proceedings abated and any application to set aside that abatement became barred on the expiry of 60 days therefrom.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge though made in 1905 was not confirmed until the Order in Council in 1913 and the Code of 1908 is to be applied.

The Code of 1908 expressly altered the law; for whereas under sec. 244 of the Code of 1882 mesne profits could be ascertained by the Court executing the decree, under the 1908 Code the relevant section is sec. 47 and the proceedings have been taken out of the execution provisions.

The proceedings therefore do not come within Or. 22, r. 12 and the provision of Or. 22, r. 3 (2) applies.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD SHAW.—The question raised on this appeal is one of procedure. The judgments of the Courts below are concurrent; they are gathered together in the final paragraph of the judgment of the High Court, in which Mr. Justice Das says:—

"I hold that, under the Code of 1882, a proceeding for the ascertainment of mesne profits was a proceeding in execution and that, as the decree, in the present case, was passed under the Code of 1882, such proceedings must be held in execution and not in the suit. That being so, Or. 22, r. 12, applies, and it must follow that substitution was not necessary."

Their Lordships have heard a persistent argument criticising the entire authorities cited in the case; they have considered that argument and the authorities; and they now declare that nothing has been urged which would induce them upon this point of procedure to express disagreement with the result arrived at in the Courts below.

In their Lordships' opinion, the appeal accordingly ought to be dismissed, and advice will be humbly tendered to His Majesty in that sense.

legally attested and it could not be enforced against the executant merely because she admitted that she signed it.

The words of sec. 70 of the Evidence Act applies to a document duly attested.

This was an appeal (No. 6 of 1924) from a decree, dated the 10th June 1921, of the High Court at Patna, which modified a decree, dated the 26th September 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of Patna.

The suit was brought by the Respondents to enforce a mortgage bond alleged to have been executed in their favour by the Appellant.

The bond was executed on the 17th August 1906 as security for an advance of Rs. 29,000. The Appellant who was a purdanashin lady denied its validity on the ground that she was under the influence of her husband and had no independent advice when entering into the transaction. She further contended that the mortgage was not attested in accordance with the provisions of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The District Judge found all the material issues against the mortgagor and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs.

The High Court (P. R. Das and Adami, JJ.) found that the document itself did not show that it was attested in the manner required by sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, but they were of opinion that the admission of execution made by the Appellant in her evidence at the trial was sufficient to dispense with the requisite proof.

'THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DARLING.—This is an appeal

HIRA BIBI v. RAM HARI LAL.

from a judgment and decree, dated 10th June 1921, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, partly affirming and partly reversing a judgment and decree of the District Judge of Patna. The suit was brought to enforce a mortgage, dated 17th August 1906. It was pleaded by the Defendants (Appellants) that the mortgage bond is void by reason of its not being attested in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, sec. 59.

The only important question upon this appeal is in regard to the Appellant Musammat Hira Bibi and her liability on the mortgage bond. It is admitted that she actually signed the bond, but it is a document which requires attestation by witnesses, as is provided by statute.

Hira Bibi is a purdanashin lady. The evidence shows, beyond contest, that when Hira Bibi signed the mortgage bond not one of the persons who signed as witnesses was present or saw her sign it. She was behind the purdah. Anant Prasad, her son, took this deed, and others, inside the purdah. He came out and told those outside, and out of sight of Hira Bibi, that she had signed the deed, and after this all those signed whose names appear as witnesses.

The learned Judges from whose judgments this appeal is brought have themselves declared that this is wholly insufficient to comply with the statute relating to the due execution and attestation of such a document as this mortgage bond, but they have held that the deed is good as against Hira Bibi, because she has admitted that she signed it.

Mr. Justice Das—with whose judgment Mr. Justice Adami agreed—put the case thus :—

"If the matter were res integra I should doubt whether the admission of a party can render valid that which is invalid. The question is—Is the rule enunciated in sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act a rule of law affecting the validity of the mortgage or is it a rule of evidence affecting the proof of the document? If it be a rule of evidence the question becomes one of proof and the admission of a party would be in the circumstances quite sufficient. But if it be a rule of law then it is difficult to understand how the admission of a party helps the solution of the problem. My own view is that sec. 70 of the Evidence Act operates only where the mortgagee has not given any evidence at all of due execution of the document by the mortgagor, but relies on the admission by the mortgagor. If, for instance, the mortgagor admits the execution of the document in the written statement it is wholly unnecessary for the mortgagee to adduce any evidence as to the execution of the document. But the matter would stand on an entirely different footing if the mortgagee produces his evidence of execution and that evidence establishes that the document was not attested in the manner required by sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. I am, however, bound by the decisions of the Calcutta High Court and of this Court. In accordance with those decisions I must hold that the admission of the Defendant renders it unnecessary for the Plaintiffs to prove that the document was executed and attested in the manner required by sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act."

It appears, then, that the Judges of the High Court of Patna would have held that this mortgage bond was not duly executed by the Appellant, Hira Bibi, had they not felt bound to follow earlier decisions of that Court and of the High Court of Calcutta. They appear to have been unaware of several cases decided on appeal by this Board, and directly dealing with the matter in question. When these are considered it appears to their Lordships that this case is already concluded by authority. It is needless to do more than to call attention to them very briefly :—

Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (1) decides that to be a good signature attested by two witnesses, within the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, sec. 59, the persons signing as witnesses must be present at the execution of the instrument. Their Lordships adopted these words of Dr. Lushington [in Bryan v. White (2)]: "'Attest' means the persons shall be present and see what passes, and shall, when required, bear witness to the facts." And they followed the decision of the House of Lords in Burdett v. Spilsbury (3) to the same effect.

(1) L. R. 89 I. A. 218; s. c. 16 C. W. N. 1009 (1912).

HIRA BIBI v. RAM HARI LAL.

The case of Padarath v. Ram Nain Upadhia (4) is in its material facts totally different from this one, and has, therefore, no bearing on the question here to be decided. But another case—Gunga Pershad Singh v. Ishri Pershad Singh (5)—is in almost all particulars identical with this present one, and in that instance the mortgage deed was declared to be void as not being duly executed and attested.

These cases sufficiently confute the argument founded upon the words of sec. 70 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, that—

"The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested."

Those words apply only to a document duly attested. The mortgage deed here in question was not, in a legal sense, attested; for it was merely signed by persons who professed to be witnesses to its execution, although in truth and in fact they were not so.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that, as against the Appellant Musammat Hira Bibi, the mortgage decrees of both the Courts below should be set aside with costs, and the suit dismissed as against her. With regard to the other Appellants the decrees should stand.

The costs of Musammat Hira Bibi should be paid by the contesting Respondents, but the other, and unsuccessful Appellants, should pay the costs of such of the Respondents who appeared. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

the property was put up to sale and was purchased by Defendant No. 12. The Plaintiff thereupon deposited the decretal money together with the usual compensation and had the sale set aside. The Plaintiff brought a suit claiming contribution from the several Defendants in proportion to their respective shares and contended that the Defendant No. 12 was liable to contribute to the extent of the shares in which he was interested, viz., the shares of Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 acquired by purchase and the share of Defendant No. 1 of which he was the mortgagee :

Held—That the liability to contribution is not entirely contained in secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act although generally speaking a large number of cases do come within the purview of these two sections. The Court as a Court of justice, equity and good conscience may, in certain circumstances, although such circumstances do not bring the case strictly within the purview of these two sections, allow contribution if the claim appears to be either just or equitable.

That both secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act were applicable to the facts of the present case so far as regards the shares which were purchased by Defendant No. 12.

That the Plaintiff was interested in the payment of the money within the meaning of sec. 69 although he was also liable to pay a portion of the money.

That the Defendant No. 12 was bound to pay the money although he was not a party to the decree for rent and the period for which the rent was claimed was previous to his purchase, inasmuch as that rent was charged on the property purchased by him, and the section does not require the liability to be a personal liability.

That the argument that the Defendant No. 12 was not benefited because in the result he lost the benefit of his purchase of the entire property and was left only with the share which he held before was fallacious. The character in which the Plaintiff sued the Defendants and the character in which the Defendant No. 12 was charged with the liability was the character of co-sharers as between themselves and as the property was saved by the deposit the Defendant No. 12 was benefited to the extent of his share.

In a suit for contribution the respective liabilities of the parties should be ascertained and determined once for all and nothing should be left undetermined which may lead to further litigation for the ascertainment of such liability between two or more of the parties to the suit. The Court below therefore erred in making Defendants Nos. 1 and 12 jointly liable in respect of the share mortgaged by the former to the latter. The liability for the rent of this share being primarily Defendant No. 1's, the decree in regard to this share should be against Defendant No. 1 alone.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of February 1924 against the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Bhattacharjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 10th of December 1923.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant No. 12—the Registered

REGISTERED JESSORE LOAN CO., LTD. v. GOPAL HARI GHOSH CHOUHDURY.

Jessore Loan Company, Ltd., against a judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 10th December 1923, by which the suit of the Plaintiff for contribution was decreed in full. The question raised in this appeal is a question of law applicable to the facts of this case which are not disputed and they are as follows: The Plaintiff and the Defendants other than the Defendant No. 12 were the owners of a permanent tenure. The Defendant No. 12 purchased the share of the Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 which was 1 anna odd gundas in execution of a mortgage decree in his favour on the 20th June 1921. The said Defendant No. 12 is now also the mortgagee of a 3 anna odd gunda share which belonged to the Defendant No. 1. The Plaintiff's share in the tenure was 3 annas 4 gundas. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlords, the property was put up to sale and was purchased by the Defendant No. 12 on the 20th January 1923 for Rs. 25,000. The Plaintiff thereupon deposited the decretal money together with the usual compensation to the purchaser amounting to Rs. 17,000 odd and the sale was set aside. The Plaintiff brought the suit claiming contribution from the several Defendants in proportion to their respective shares and contended that the Defendant No. 12 was liable to contribute to the extent of the two shares in which, as already stated, he was interested, namely, the share of the Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 and the share of the Defendant No. 1. The decree was passed without contest against the Defendants other than the Defendant No. 12. The Defendant No. 12 alone contested the suit and resisted the claim of the Plaintiff on two grounds. It was contended, on his behalf, first, that the share of the Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 which the Defendant No. 12 purchased in execution of the mortgage decree against the said Defendants was not liable for the rent at the time when the Defendant No. 12 purchased the same; in fact, the arrears of rent for which the decree was obtained fell due before this purchase. It was next contended that, so far as the share of the Defendant No. 1 was concerned, the Defendant No. 12 was no more than a mere mortgagee of that share as the sale of that share had already been set aside; and, therefore, it was said that the Defendant No. 1 remained liable, if there was any liability for contribution to the extent of his share. Now, the learned Subordinate Judge, as already stated, passed a decree without contest against the Defendants other than the Defendant No. 12 and they do not question the decree made against them. It is the Defendant No. 12 alone who has preferred this appeal.

The learned Advocate who appeared for the Defendants-Appellants contended, first, that neither sec. 69 nor sec. 70 of the Indian Contract Act were applicable to the facts of the present case; and, therefore, he said that the Plaintiff was not entitled to any contribution from the Defendant No. 12 upon the payment made by him. It was stated that the elements necessary to attract the operation of sec. 69 did not exist in the present case nor did the provisions of sec. 70 apply to this case. As regards this point, I need hardly say that the liability to contribution is not entirely contained in the two sections of the Contract Act referred to above, although generally speaking a large number of such cases do come within the purview of those two sections. The Court as a Court of justice, equity and good conscience may, in certain circumstances—although such circumstances do not bring the case strictly within the purview of these two sections, allow contribution, if the claim appears to be either just or equitable. I need hardly cite more than one case in which the question was discussed, namely, the case of Matangini Debi v. Brajeswar Banerji (1). Mr. Justice Mookerjee in delivering the judgment in that case said as follows :—"The right of contribution has its foundation in and is controlled by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. It does not arise from contract, although it has sometimes been based on the theory of an implied contract for contribution supposed to exist between the parties jointly liable ex-contractu. Every joint debtor who has been compelled to pay more than his share of the common debt has the right of contribution from each of the co-debtors. The principle is that one who has discharged a common liability can recover from his co-obligors only the excess that he has paid over his share and each co-obligor is liable to contribute only in proportion to his share of the common debt or obligation." Now, the same case is also authority for the proposition that, in cases such as the present one is, both secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act are applicable. I shall presently refer to the distinction, which the learned Advocate for the Appellants has drawn as to why the same rule should not be applied to the facts of the present case.

Taking sec. 69 first, it enacts that "a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other." It is argued that the present Plaintiff cannot be said to have been interested in the payment because he was also liable to pay the money. It was also argued that the Defendant No. 12 was not bound to pay the money because he was neither a party to the decree for rent nor was the period for which the rent was claimed subsequent to his purchase. It appears to me that this contention is not sound. The Plaintiff was interested in the payment of this decretal amount. He was interested because it affected his property. He was further interested because there was the decree against him and he was interested to see that that amount was paid. A person may be interested in a payment, though he may be liable for or bound to pay only a part of the money. Here the Plaintiff was not bound to pay the whole of the money. The share, according to the Plaintiff, which the Defendant No. 12 held was liable for the money and, therefore, sec. 69 applies. I think, therefore, the argument that the Plaintiff was not interested within the meaning of sec. 69 is not tenable nor is the argument that the Defendant No. 12 was not bound to pay the same tenable, because, although the said Defendant was neither a party to the decree nor were the arrears due for a period subsequent to his purchase, he was bound in law to pay the same as the property which he purchased was liable for the payment of that money. The section does not speak of mere personal liability. There is abundant authority for the proposition which I have relied upon. Take the case of Manindra Chunder Nundy v. Jamahir Kumari (2), which the learned Advocate for the Appellants cited in support of his contention. In that case, Mr. Justice Ghose in delivering the judgment of the Court said that a mortgagee who purchased a tenure in execution of his mortgage decree purchased it subject to the liability for the rent with which the tenure was charged. It may be pointed out that rent is the first charge—a charge which is superior to the charge of the mortgagee himself. The learned Judge pointed out in that case that the reason for this view was that when a mortgagee in execution of his decree purchased the tenure the price that he paid must have been in view of the liability for the arrears of rent to which the tenure was subject. Therefore, in the present case, the share which the Defendant No. 12 purchased in execution of his mortgage decree was liable for the amount of the decree for rent, although the period for which the rent was due was anterior to his purchase. Other cases may also be cited in support of the same view; but it is not necessary to do so. I shall only quote the words used in the case to which I have just referred, namely, the case of Manindra Chunder Nundy v. Jamahir Kumari (2). It was held there that “a mortgagee who purchases a property at an execution sale is under a legal liability to pay the rent due upon the property at the time of the purchase and, therefore, cannot claim under sec. 69 of the Contract Act contribution from the mortgagor.” The Defendant No. 12 was, therefore, legally bound to pay a part of the money due on the decree.

Now, taking sec. 70 of the Contract Act, the argument advanced by the learned Advocate on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants was that the Defendant No. 12 was not benefited by the payment and, therefore, sec. 70 had no application to the case. It was conceded that the payment made by the Plaintiff was not a voluntary payment and, therefore, he did lawfully pay the money; but as the Plaintiff's deposit set aside the sale of the entire property, it was argued that the Defendant was not benefited, because, in the result, he lost the benefit of his purchase of the entire property and was left only with the share which he held before. In my opinion, there is a fallacy in this argument. The character in which the Plaintiff sued the Defendants and the character in which the Defendant No. 12 was charged with the liability was the character of co-sharers as between themselves; and, as the property was saved by the deposit, the Defendant No. 12 was benefited to the extent of his share. Whether his purchase in execution of the rent decree was a better bargain or not has no real effect on the question.

In my opinion, it is not necessary, therefore, to invoke any principle of equity or justice in the present case as I think that both secs. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act are applicable to the facts of the case so far as the share which the Defendant No. 12 purchased in execution of his mortgage decree is concerned, namely, the share which originally belonged to the Defendants Nos. 13 to 15.

But as regards the share which belonged to the Defendant No. 1, I think the position is different. The learned Subordinate Judge has made a joint decree against the Defendant No. 1 and the Defendant No. 12 so far as this share is concerned. This was obviously wrong. In a suit for contribution, the respective liabilities of the parties should be ascertained and determined once for all and nothing should be left undetermined which may lead to further litigation for the ascertainment of such liability between two or more of the parties to the suit. That is not the only error in the decree. It appears that, so far as the share of the Defendant No. 1 is concerned, the Defendant No. 12 was no more than a mere mortgagee—not a mortgagee in possession but an ordinary mortgagee. The property no doubt was liable for the rent due on it; but the liability was primarily the liability of the Defendant No. 1. So long as the Defendant No. 12 did not purchase in enforcement of his mortgage against the Defendant No. 1, the Defendant No. 1 was liable to pay the rent and, even if the Defendant No. 12 was obliged to make any payment to save the property from sale in execution of a rent decree, the Defendant No. 1 would be ultimately liable to pay that money to the Defendant No. 12 and the Defendant No. 12 would be entitled to add that money to the mortgage debt due to him by the Defendant No. 1. Therefore, so long as the Defendant No. 1 remained the owner of the property as a mortgagor and was in possession, the liability to save the property from sale in execution of the decree for arrears of rent was his liability and not the liability of the Defendant No. 12. Consequently, neither sec. 69 nor sec. 70 of the Contract Act would apply so far as the share of the Defendant No. 1 is concerned. The Plaintiff, therefore, has failed to establish any liability of the Defendant No. 12 for the amount due on account of the share which belonged to the Defendant No. 1.

In this view, I think that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge should be varied. The appeal should be dismissed so far as regards the amount due on account of the share of the Defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 and it should be allowed in so far as the decree of the Court below makes the Defendant No. 12 liable for the amount due in respect of the share which belonged to the Defendant

No. 1 who alone should be held liable. Costs will be in proportion to the respective success and failure of the parties in both the Courts. The hearing fee is assessed at Rs. 200.

There is a cross-objection by the Plaintiff and it raises only one question, namely, that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have allowed the Plaintiff interest upon the amount found due to him from the date of the suit. I think that that contention is right. The Plaintiff will be entitled to interest at six per cent. per annum on the amount found due to him by the lower Court from the date of the suit until realisation. No order is made as to the costs in the cross-objection.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 92, prov. (4)—Mortgage—Oral evidence to prove discharge partly by payment and partly by release, if admissible.

Oral evidence may be admitted to prove that a mortgage has been discharged partly by payment and partly by release of debt and there is nothing in sec. 92 of the Evidence Act to prevent such evidence being admitted.

MOHIM CHANDRA DEY v. RAMDAYAL DUTTA.

JAGANNATH v. SHANKAR (2) dissented from.

ARIYAPUTHERIA PADAYACHI v. MULTHUKOMARASWAMI PADAYACHI (3) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of March 1923, against the decree of B. K. Bose, Esq., 2nd Additional District Judge of Zilla Mymensingh, dated the 2nd of December 1922, affirming the decree of Babu Upendra Kumar Kar, Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 23rd of December 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Radhabenode Pal and Babu Hem Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Annoda Charan Karkoon for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on a mortgage bond. Both the Courts below found that the mortgage debt was discharged by the Defendant depositing Rs. 600 and odd with the landlord with the consent of the Plaintiff. The mortgage debt on that date came up to Rs. 673-7-0. Upon the finding that the mortgage debt was discharged as aforesaid both the Courts below dismissed the Plaintiff's suit. The Plaintiff appeals and the sole contention on his behalf is that oral evidence is not admissible to prove the discharge of the debt, inasmuch as it imports an agreement to relinquish Rs. 73 odd of the mortgage debt. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon two cases. The first of these is the case of G. P. Mallappa v. Matum Nagu Chetty (1). The head-note of the case runs thus :

(1) 11 L. R. 42 Mad. 41 (1918).

(3) 1 L. R. 37 Mad. 423 (1912)

" A subsequent oral agreement to take less than is due under a registered mortgage bond is an agreement modifying the terms of a written contract; and, if it is to be proved, oral evidence is inadmissible under sec. 92, proviso (4) of the Indian Evidence Act." In that case, however, it was held that the Defendant was exonerated from the liability of proving the agreement, because it was admitted by the Plaintiff. Under sec. 58 of the Evidence Act, such plea was taken into consideration and given effect to. The case only lays down the rule enacted under sec. 92 of the Evidence Act and can hardly be said to be an authority for the proposition advanced on behalf of the Appellant. The next case relied on is that of Jagannath v. Shankar (2). That case seems to be in point. There the debtor had alleged that he had paid a sum of money in full discharge of the mortgage debt although a larger sum was due on the mortgage bond. Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., observed at page 58 thus : " But the argument before us has been that there has not been subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify the mortgage, but there has been an actual discharge, and that oral evidence was admissible to prove a discharge. In my opinion, there is no substance in that argument. The Defendant's case must be that the mortgagee agreed to receive Rs. 800 in full satisfaction of the much greater amount which was due on the mortgage, and although he might have said when receiving Rs. 800, ' I now discharge you from the mortgage,' there was none the less an agreement which modified the original agreement of mortgage." With all respect I am unable to accept the reasoning of the learned Chief Justice. A mortgage is discharged either by payment of the full amount of the debt or by release of the debt itself. It has never been doubted that a discharge of the debt by payment may be proved by oral evidence. This point is not contested on behalf of the Appellant. The cases in support of this will be found referred to in Ariyaputhria Padayachi v. Multhukomaraswami Padayachi (3). Oral evidence of such discharge is not excluded by any provision of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act. A release of a debt also may be effected by parole, but if it is in writing it should be registered, if it falls within the provisions of sec. 17 of the Registration Act. The release for value is not a transfer of ownership, and though it is true a person who releases a security without consideration may be said to make a gift of it, the transaction does not fall under Chap. VII of the Transfer of Property Act, which deals only with gifts of tangible property. There is nothing in the law which requires a writing for a release of the debt by the creditor. What then is there to exclude oral evidence of the discharge of a mortgage bond when it is pleaded that it was made partly by payment of money and partly by release of the debt? If the creditor says to the debtor "I now discharge you from the debt" or if he says "I make a free gift to you of the money you owe me," I do not think that this can be called an agreement, as there is neither any promise to perform anything in future nor is there any consideration for it. Nothing has been left to be done and the transaction is completed at the moment when the release is made. Such a transaction does not fall within proviso (4) to sec. 92 of the Evidence Act and I do not think that oral evidence of it is excluded by that proviso. The fear expressed by the learned Chief Justice that it would be an extremely dangerous precedent if oral evidence were allowed of such a transaction does not also impress me and I think that the danger may be the other way. Such evidence has seldom been excluded in this province. It is common knowledge that when a debtor makes payment of his debt amicably to his mahajan a remission is often made of a part of the interest due on account of the mortgage bond. If it be held that this release cannot be proved by oral evidence, the mortgagee may sue his debtor for the amount remitted years after the debt was fully discharged; and this he may do, notwithstanding that he had returned the mortgage bond to the debtor on obtaining full satisfaction, for nothing but a proper document would prove the remission. This, however, would be a position which cannot be contemplated. I, therefore, think that oral evidence may be admitted to prove that a mortgage bond has been discharged partly by payment and partly by release of the debt and there is nothing in sec. 92 of the Evidence Act to prevent such evidence being admitted.

(2) I. L. R. 44 Bom. 55 (1919).

MOHIM CHANDRA DEY v. RAMDAYAL DUTTA.

On this ground, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE SUPERINTENDENT

Respondent.

Thumb impression of accused, taking of, in Court under orders of Magistrate—Comparison by expert of thumb impression so taken with others in evidence—Procedure, if proper and legal—Act XXXIII of 1920, sec. 5—Magistrate's power in this respect—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 45, ill. (c)—Opinion of expert on comparison of thumb impression.

The Respondent was prosecuted under sec. 82 of the Registration Act for having falsely personated another woman at the time of the registration of a document purporting to have been executed by the latter. Under orders of the trying Magistrate the Respondent's thumb impression was taken by an expert and compared with that on the document in question and relying on the evidence of the expert that the two tallied and were totally different from the thumb impression of the woman whom the Respondent had personated, the Magistrate convicted the accused but the Sessions Judge on appeal set aside the conviction and the local Government appealed:

Held—That sec. 5 of Act XXXIII of 1920 authorised the Magistrate to direct the thumb impression to be taken in the manner in which it was done and illustration (c) to sec. 45 of the Evidence Act makes it abundantly clear that in a case like the present the opinion of the expert formed by comparison of the various thumb impressions referred to is admissible in evidence. The procedure adopted by the Magistrate was therefore in strict accordance with law.

The High Court in setting aside the acquittal directed, upon a consideration of the circumstances of the case, that the Respondent should be released under sec. 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code on her entering into a bond with surety to appear and receive sentence when called upon within one year.

This was an appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge of Bankura, dated the 6th February 1925, setting aside an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Bankura, dated the 23rd December 1924, convicting the Respondent Kiran Bala under sec. 82, cls. (a), (b) and (c) of the Registration Act and sentencing her to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Ashraf Ali for the Appellant.

Babu Narendra Krishna Bose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, against the acquittal of the Respondent Kiran Bala Dassi by the learned Sessions Judge of Bankura by his judgment, dated the 6th February 1925.

The short facts are as follows:—The Respondent Kiran Bala Dassi along with three other persons, Upendra Nath Ghoshal, Kishori Mohan Misra and Panchu Gopal Chakravarti, was put upon trial for offences under sec. 82 of the Indian Registration Act. The case for the prosecution was that a deed of release, dated the 29th March 1923, purporting to have been executed by one Sindhu Bala Dassi in favour of Upendra Ghoshal was a forged document made at the instance of Upendra Ghoshal, that Panchu Gopal was the scribe and that he had signed the name of the executant and that Upendra Ghoshal procured the registration of the document by causing Kiran Bala, the Respondent before us, to personate Sindhu Bala Dassi before the Sub-Registrar of Assurances, and that Kishori Mohan falsely identified Kiran Bala Dassi as Sindhu Bala Dassi at the time of the registration of the document. During the course of the trial in the Court of first instance the learned Deputy Magistrate

THE SUPDT. & REMBR. OF LEGAL AFFAIRS OF BENGAL v. KIRAN BALA DASSI.

Mr. Ahmed directed that the Respondent Kiran Bala Dassi should give her thumb impression. Accordingly her thumb impression was taken and it was compared by an expert witness, being P. W. 17, Jnanada Chandra Bose, with the thumb impression purporting to be that of Sindhu Bala Dassi which was on the bond and which had been taken at the time of the registration of the deed and in the Sub-Registrar's book. The evidence of the expert was to the effect that the three thumb impressions, namely, that of Kiran Bala taken in the Court before the learned Magistrate, that which appeared on the deed and purported to be the thumb impression of Sindhu Bala and that which appeared in the Sub-Registrar's thumb impression book and which also purported to be the thumb impression of Sindhu Bala were in fact and in truth the thumb impression of one and the same person, and that the thumb impression of Sindhu Bala who had been examined as a witness for the prosecution and whose thumb impression had been taken in Court did not tally with the thumb impressions hereinbefore referred to. The learned Magistrate who tried the case acquitted Panchu Gopal, but he found that the three other accused persons, Upendra, Kishori and the present Respondent Kiran Bala Dassi were guilty and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment. So far as Kiran Bala was concerned the sentence on her was that she should undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of six months. The accused persons thereupon preferred an appeal before the learned Sessions Judge of Bankura. But it having appeared that there had been no compliance with the provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., a retrial was ordered. On retrial by the learned Magistrate the accused were again convicted and sentenced to the same terms of imprisonment as in the previous trial. There was then an appeal to the Sessions Judge and by his judgment, dated the 6th February 1925, the accused persons were acquitted. As regards the two accused Upendra Ghoshal and Kishori Misra the learned Sessions Judge held that there was not sufficient legal evidence against them to warrant a conviction. But as regards Kiran Bala Dassi the learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that her thumb impression taken at the time of the trial was inadmissible in evidence, as such thumb impression had been taken illegally. Thereupon the present appeal has been preferred as stated by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs.

It is contended on behalf of the Government by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that the Sessions Judge was clearly in error in holding that the thumb impression in question, namely, one that had been taken in Court of the Respondent Kiran Bala Dassi had been taken illegally, and in support thereof he has drawn our attention to the provisions of sec. 5 of Act XXXIII of 1920, being an Act which authorizes the taking of measurements and photographs of convicts and others. Sec. 5 of Act XXXIII of 1920 runs as follows:—"If a Magistrate is satisfied that for the purposes of any investigation or proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, it is expedient to direct any person to allow his measurements (measurements as defined in the Act include finger impressions and foot-print impressions) or photograph to be taken, he may make an order to that effect, and in that case the person to whom the order relates shall be produced or shall attend at the time and place specified in the order, and shall allow his measurements or photograph to be taken, as the case may be, by a Police Officer." We think this is sufficient authority for the course that was adopted by the learned Deputy Magistrate. As is well known, before the passing of the Act there was considerable controversy as to whether thumb impressions could be taken of a person by order of a Magistrate, and to settle all such doubts this Act was passed.

Then the question arises whether the evidence of the expert who had an opportunity of comparing the thumb impression of Kiran Bala which had been taken in Court with the thumb impressions on the deed and in the Sub-Registrar's thumb impression book is admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. Sec. 45 of the Indian Evidence Act makes the opinion of an expert on a matter like this admissible in evidence. Illustration (c) to sec. 45 makes it abundantly clear that in a case like the present the opinion of the expert formed by comparison of the various thumb impressions hereinbefore referred to is admissible in evidence. It would therefore follow that the procedure which was adopted by the Magistrate was one in strict accordance with the provisions of the law and that the learned Sessions Judge was not correct in saying that the thumb impression of Kiran Bala Dassi which had been taken in Court was one which had been taken illegally and against a fundamental principle of law. That being so, it is impossible to resist the conviction that the thumb impression which had been put on the deed at the time of the registration of the document was one which had been put not by Sindhu Bala Dassi but by Kiran Bala Dassi; in other words we are satisfied on the evidence on the record that it was Kiran Bala Dassi who had personated Sindhu Bala Dassi at the time of the registration of the document.

We must therefore allow the appeal, and the only question now before us is what the sentence should be on Kiran Bala. She is stated to be a widow of over 15, and although there can be no doubt whatsoever that she did personate Sindhu Bala Dassi at the time of the registration of the document before the Sub-Registrar it is abundantly clear from the evidence on the record that she was a puppet in the hands of other accused. Under these circumstances we have anxiously considered whether we should pass a sentence of imprisonment on her, and we have come to the conclusion that having regard to the amended provisions of sec. 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, this is a case in which we can take action thereunder, and instead of sentencing Kiran Bala Dassi at once to any punishment we direct that she should be released on her entering into a bond with one surety of one hundred rupees to appear and receive sentence when called upon during the period of one year.

ANAJALI and ors.,
Appellants,

THE KING-EMPEROR,
Respondent.

Circumstantial evidence, when sufficient for conviction—Verdict of jury—Verdict of guilty of murder with dacoity—No direct evidence and circumstantial evidence wholly insufficient—Accused acquitted by High Court on the ground of no evidence—Conviction of murder and sentence of imprisonment, impropriety of—Judge's duty when in his opinion verdict not right.

lar place as reapers of paddy went away on a particular night with a quantity of paddy loaded in two boats belonging to them and accompanied by one K and his son for whom they had worked. K had a boat of his own which was lashed to one of the boats belonging to the accused. The accused reached their place of destination with their boats but K and his son and their boat were never seen again. The defence was that K and his son did not accompany the accused who went home after finishing their work with their share of the paddy to which they were entitled. The accused were tried on a charge under sec. 396, I. P. C., of committing dacoity with murder and un-animously found guilty by the jury and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment:

Held—That circumstantial evidence in order to bring a charge home to an accused person must be such as to show that within all human probability the act alleged must have been done by the accused persons.

Here the utmost proved was that the two presumably deceased persons went away with the accused on a windy night in accused's boat of their own free will, having their own boat in attendance and were never seen again, and it was impossible to say from this that they were murdered and the charge of dacoity also failed in the absence of evidence that the paddy did not belong to the accused.

The High Court finding that there was no evidence to substantiate the charges acquitted the accused.

Held further—That if a Judge accepts a finding of murder there are only two penalties and he has no right to pass inadequate sentences. If he does not believe the verdict is right it is his duty to refer it to the High Court.

This was an appeal preferred on the 24th of August 1925 against an order of the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge of Zillah Backerganj (Mr. N. Lahiri), dated the 16th June 1925.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee and Moulvi Syed Nowsher Ali for the Appellants.

Mr. Khundkar (Deputy Legal Remembrancer) for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The five Appellants have been put on their trial along with two others who have not appealed on one charge under sec. 396, I. P. C., of committing dacoity with murder of one Kamaluddi and his son Abdul Majid at a place between Kachupatra and Keshabpur on or about the 22nd Pous 1329 (January 6th, 1923). They were tried by the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj with a jury and were unanimously found guilty and sentenced Mafizuddi to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, Hoshanali to three years' rigorous imprisonment and the other three to 4 years' rigorous imprisonment on the 16th June 1925. It appears there were previous trials which were set aside by this Court.

The facts of the case according to the prosecution are as follows:—

Kamaluddi, an inhabitant of Keshabpur, had certain paddy lands at Kachupatra. He engaged 13 reapers including the present Appellants to reap his paddy and the 13 reapers, who were apparently people unknown to him before, came in two big boats at the beginning of Agrahayan and settled on the land and during Agrahayan and Pous reaped his and some other people's paddy for them—the terms of their remuneration being that they were to get either 1/8th or 1/10th share of the produce—(the evidence on this point is discrepant) for their services. They completed their work. On the 6th January after night-fall eleven of the reapers (two staying behind) started back with 160 maunds of paddy, without being paid for their services, in two boats with Kamaluddi and Abdul Majid to take the paddy to Keshabpur. Kamaluddi had a small (dingi) boat which was lashed to one of the two reapers' boats. Since that date Kamaluddi and Abdul Majid have not been seen again, nor has their dingi boat. These eleven reapers reached their own homes, which are in a village in the Dacca District, shortly before the end of Pous, and there is evidence to show that they then unloaded the paddy of their two boats and took it by the help of pack-ponies to their headman's (Mofizuddi, Appellant No. 3) house.

The evidence further shows that when Kamaluddi and his son Abdul Majid left Keshabpur on the 6th January with the eleven reapers he left behind him besides the two other reapers another son of his, Abdul Karim, the complainant in this case. The evening after the boats left, some co-villagers of his arrived at Keshabpur and told him his father and brother had not reached home when they left. He then went to call the other two reapers who had been left behind and found they had disappeared leaving certain articles of little value behind them. He then started at once for home and found his father and brother were not there. He searched various waterways and then sent information to the thana and himself reported to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Patuakhali on the 13th January that his father was missing. Enquiries were made and it was found the 11 reapers had arrived safely at their house with paddy. The defence is that Kamaluddi and his son did not go away from Kachupatra with the eleven reapers at all. The reapers went home with their share of the paddy, a share to which they were entitled, after finishing their work in Kachupatra.

In the present trial a nolle prosequi was entered against one of the reapers and he was called as a witness for the prosecution. He has given evidence but has supported the defence version.

Whatever may have been the charges at the previous trials (the case was originally instituted under secs. 364 and 407, I. P. (1.) we are only concerned here with the charge of dacoity with murder.

The verdict of the jury and the charge of the Additional Sessions Judge are assailed on two points:—

(1) The direct evidence as to how much paddy the reapers actually had with them on their arrival home, i.e., whether they had more than what was their proper remuneration for their work is unreliable and the Judge has misdirected the jury on the point.

(2) There being no direct evidence of either dacoity or murder the Judge has failed to direct the jury as to what is sufficient circumstantial evidence on which to justify a conviction. Indeed there was no case to go to the jury at all on a charge under sec. 396.

As to (1) the evidence as to how much paddy was due to the reapers for their services is most meagre; they were entitled to a share not only of Kamaluddi's crop but of the other crops they reaped and the evidence of how much paddy the reapers actually had in their boats on their arrival home is that only of two of the owners of pack-ponies. Whatever else the evidence shows, it does not prove what amount of paddy reached the reapers' houses. We have only a rough guess at the most that can be deduced from the evidence of these two witnesses.

The second point however is the more important. If the complainant is to be believed (and the jury apparently believed him) Kamaluddi and his son undoubtedly left Kachupatra in the reapers' boat and were never seen alive again. The two reapers left behind mysteriously disappeared. There is therefore ground for suspicion, but is there anything more?

Circumstantial evidence, in order to bring a charge home to an accused person, must be such as to show that within all human probability the act alleged must have been done by the accused persons. Here the utmost proved is that the two presumably deceased persons went away from Kachupatra with the accused on a windy night in accused's boat of their own free will, having their own boat in attendance, and were never seen again. It is impossible to say from this that they were murdered; they may have got into their own boat and been drowned; they may have fallen out of the boat of the reapers and been drowned; anyway there is no conclusive evidence that any of the reapers caused their death. There is then no evidence of murder. Equally too there is no evidence of dacoity (robbery with violence); the offence of dacoity assumes that the reapers not being in possession of the paddy by violence seized it. The complainant himself says they took the paddy into their boats; he says it was his father's paddy but admittedly part was the share of the reapers who had cut paddy for him and there is nothing to show that the rest was not the paddy earned for cutting the crop from the other people for whom they worked at Kachupatra.

The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has admitted that there is difficulty in supporting the finding of the jury—which to our mind is due to the fact that the meaning of circumstantial evidence, sufficient for conviction, in the absence of direct evidence, was not explained to the jury—but has asked us to consider whether we cannot find a minor offence such as criminal misappropriation or breach of trust committed.

We are unable to accede to his request. In previous trials these unfortunate reapers, who have now been off and on before the Courts for nearly three years, were tried on various charges. A last effort has apparently been made to get them convicted by getting one of their number to give evidence on a new charge, not as an approver, but as an ordinary witness. This has failed and we must say that if this witness had supported the prosecution at this late stage we should have held his evidence of little value.

In the result we find there is absolutely no evidence to substantiate the charges and acquit the present Appellants. Two persons have not appealed—on them the sentences are two years' imprisonment. We are precluded from passing any orders in respect of them but in view of our judgment (a copy of which will be sent to the Legal Remembrancer forthwith) leave it to the Local Government to act under sec. 401, Cr. P. C., if so advised. We cannot close this case without two remarks. The re-trial on the present charge was only justified if the approver witness supported the case. He should have been examined at an early stage and when he failed to support the prosecution case (we have little reason to disbelieve him) the case should have been withdrawn.

It is also difficult to harmonise the sentences with the findings of the jury on the charges. Murder is murder and if a Judge accepts a finding of murder there are only two penalties. He has no right to pass inadequate sentences. If he does not believe the verdict is right it is his duty to refer it to this Court. Let the Appellants be released at once.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APP. No. 747 OF 1925.

PAGE, J.	}	VICTOR
MUKHERJI, J.		v.
1926,		THE KING-EMPEROR.
20, January.

Security for good behaviour—Suspicious persons, inability to prove source of livelihood, if ground for action against—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 109 (b), evidence justifying order under—Secs. 109 and 118, Cr. P. C.

If a person is unable to prove the source of his livelihood he ought not to be ordered to execute a bond under secs. 109 (b) and 118, Cr. P. C., unless there is reasonable ground for suspecting that he is sustaining himself by dishonest means.

Passing the time in a certain street to all outward appearances innocently and in a manner void of suspicion would not bring him within the ambit of secs. 109 (b) and 118.

If proceedings under sec. 109 (b) are taken against a person because he cannot give a satisfactory account of himself, the Magistrate would not be justified in passing an order under sec. 118, Cr. P. C., merely because he is unable to prove that he spends his time or at least his leisure hours in a satisfactory manner.

In such a case the prosecution must satisfy the Magistrate that suspicion that he is being dishonestly attaches to the accused because of his failure to give a satisfactory explanation when called upon to account for his presence in the place where he is found, e.g., if he fails to account for being discovered in the company of persons living a dishonest or criminal life or detected in some place where he has no legal right to be.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th December 1925 against an order of the 3rd Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta (A. Z. Khan, Esq.), dated the 20th October 1925, whereby he directed the Appellant to execute a bond for Rs. 100, with one surety for Rs. 100, to be of good behaviour for one year, or in default, simple imprisonment for one year or until the security is furnished.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

No one appeared in this appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

PAGE, J.—On the 6th September 1925 at 10-30 in the forenoon the Appellant was accosted by a police officer in Lindsay Street, Calcutta. He was unable to satisfy the police that he was doing any work, or to provide them with the address of any place where he was residing. The only information which he gave to the police to account for his presence in Lindsay Street on that morning was that two or three days previously he had come to Calcutta from Tatanagar. He was straightway taken to the thana, hailed before a Magistrate, remanded pending enquiries and on the 5th October 1925 under secs. 109 and 118 of the Cr. P. C., ordered to execute a bond for Rs. 100 with one surety for Rs. 100 to be of good behaviour for one year and in default to suffer simple imprisonment for one year or until the security was furnished. The question which falls for determination is whether there was sufficient evidence to justify the order which was passed.

Under sec. 109 of the Cr. P. C., "whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class receives information that there is within such limits (i.e., the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction) a person who has no ostensible means of subsistence, or who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself, such Magistrate may, in manner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with sureties, for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix." The provisions of sec. 109 (b) being disjunctive the accused was liable to have an order passed against him under secs. 109 and 118 if the evidence disclosed that he had been brought within the terms of either branch of sub-sec. 109 (b) and sec. 118. From the evidence adduced before the Magistrate it appeared that nothing was known concerning the accused at Tatanagar; that previously an order had been made against him under secs. 109 and 118, and that he had been convicted for an offence in connection with the sale of opium. Further it was stated that on several occasions he had been arrested under sec. 54, Cr. P. C., but in each case the charge against him had been dismissed. He was also suspected by the police of pilfering from motor cars. On the morning when he was arrested, however, his conduct in Lindsay Street appeared to be innocuous, and his presence there did not give rise to suspicion. Now, I am not disposed to place restrictions upon the discretion of a Magistrate in administering sec. 109, but the salutary provisions of this section are so stringent that it may be made an engine of oppression unless care is taken by Magistrates to prevent its abuse. The object of the section is "to enable Magistrates to take action against suspicious strangers lurking within their jurisdiction"—Satish Chandra Sarkar v. The King-Emperor (1). But merely to be penniless or out of work is not an offence—many an honest man may find himself in either predicament—and in a country where there are workless people but no work-houses, and casual labourers but no casual works, if it were the law that persons are exposed to proceedings under sec. 109 (b) merely because they cannot give a satisfactory account of the manner in which they are eking out a precarious existence, the Magistrates' hands would be full indeed, and much injustice might be done to innocent persons; see Sheikh Piru v. King-Emperor (2). In my opinion, however, that is not the meaning or effect of secs. 109 (b) and 118. As I construe the provisions of these sections if a person is unable to prove the source of his livelihood he ought not to be ordered to execute a bond under secs. 109 and 118 unless there is reasonable ground for suspecting that he is sustaining himself by some dishonest means, for such an order can only be made where "it is necessary for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour." Again, if proceedings under sec. 109 (b) are taken against a person because he "cannot give a satisfactory account of himself," in my opinion, the Magistrate would not be justified in passing an order under sec. 118, merely because the accused is unable to prove that "he spends his time or at least his leisure hours in a satisfactory manner" [per Chamier, J.—in Sharif Ahmad v. King-Emperor (3)]. In such a case the prosecution must satisfy the Magistrate that suspicion that he is living dishonestly attaches to the accused because of his failure to give a satisfactory explanation when called upon to account for his presence in the place where he is found, e.g., if he fails to account for being discovered in the company of persons living a dishonest or criminal life, or detected in some place where he has no legal right to be. But the poor and the outcast and the old offender must somewhere live and move and have their being, and, in my opinion, the Appellant who, during the morning of 6th September 1925, was passing the time in Lindsay Street to all outward appearances innocently and in a manner void of suspicion was not brought within the ambit of secs. 109 (b) and 118 merely because he was unable to prove that he was working for his living. If the order under appeal were upheld an old offender would be at the mercy of the police, for any ill-disposed police officer would be able to deprive him of personal freedom and procure his return to jail as his caprice or fancy moved him. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order passed upon the Appellant in this case cannot be sustained in law, and must be set aside. The Appellant will be released.

MUKHERJEE, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 403—Bengal Food Adulteration Act (VI, B. C., of 1919), sec. 21, failure of prosecution under, for want of sanction—Subsequent prosecution after sanction properly obtained, if lies—Autre fois acquit, principle of, when applies.

Prosecution of the accused for an offence under sec. 21 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act having fallen through for want of a valid sanction and the accused acquitted under sec. 245, Cr. P. C., the Municipal Commissioners later at a meeting passed a resolution sanctioning the prosecution of the accused under the said Act and he was again prosecuted and tried for the same offence:

Held—That the previous acquittal of the accused did not operate as a bar to his subsequent trial.

There having been no order or consent in writing of the Municipal Commissioners sanctioning the prosecution of the accused for any offence under the Bengal Food Adulteration Act, the prosecution was incompetent and no cognizance could have been taken by any Court of any offence, and as such there could have been no trial of the accused within the meaning of sec. 403, Cr. P. C.

A verdict of acquittal is no doubt immune from challenge; but it is only when an accused has been tried and acquitted of an offence that the immunity arises.

This was a Rule granted on the 16th September 1925 against an order of the

P. BANERJEE v. BEPIN BEHARY GHOSE.

Deputy Magistrate of Howrah (Nawabzada Syed Ali Ashraf, Esq.), dated the 25th August 1925, acquitting the accused under sec. 245, Cr. P. C., of the charge under sec. 21 of Act VI, B. C., of 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Basu and Babu Symadas Bhattachariya for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. C. Chatterji and Babu Lalit Mohan Sanyal for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate and the accused why the order of the 25th August referred to in the petition should not be set aside and the case tried according to law.

The facts are as follows :—It appears that on the 8th November 1924, the Sanitary Inspector of the Howrah Municipality filed a complaint before the Deputy Magistrate of Howrah against the accused under sec. 21 of Act VI of 1919 (the Bengal Food Adulteration Act, 1919) for selling adulterated milk in contravention of sec. 6, sub-cl. (1) of the said Act. The prosecution of the accused was under the orders of the Chairman of the Municipality and at the time the prosecution was instituted there was no order or consent in writing of the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah within the meaning of sec. 15 of the said Act. In that state of things the Deputy Magistrate, before whom the case was pending, passed the following order :—“ The offence as taken cognizance of stands ipso facto vitiated for want of a valid sanction under the recent ruling of the High Court. The subsequent confirmation of the Chairman's action by the Municipal Commissioners cannot cure the inherent defect of the present proceeding as it is. Accused acquitted, sec. 245, Cr. P. C.” This was on the 27th March 1925. On the 15th May 1925, the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah passed a resolution at a meeting, sanctioning the prosecution of, among others, the said accused under the said Act. Accordingly on the 15th June 1925, a petition of complaint against the accused persons was filed before the Deputy Magistrate, but on the 25th August the Magistrate acquitted the accused by the following order :—“ I find that the present accused was acquitted by Babu D. R. Ghose, Deputy Magistrate, on the 27th March 1925, in a previous case which was brought against him by the Municipality for committing the very same offence with which he is charged in this case. I don't think the accused can be tried in this case for the same offence so long as the order of acquittal in a previous case is not upset by some higher Court. The case cannot proceed any further. Accused acquitted, sec. 245, Cr. P. C.”

Against the last mentioned order the present Rule is directed and it is contended on behalf of the complainant that the previous acquittal having been because of the want of sanction under sec. 15 of the Act and that defect having been now cured, there was nothing to prevent the Magistrate going on with the present trial, as the previous acquittal could not operate as a bar. It is also argued that there having been no “ trial ” within the meaning of sec. 403, Cr. P. C., of the accused in the previous case, the order of acquittal, dated the 27th March 1925, could not stand in the way of the present trial.

We think that the contentions urged on behalf of the complainant are sound and ought to be given effect to. Sec. 15 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act, 1919. runs as follows:—"No prosecution for any offence under this Act shall be instituted without the order or consent in writing of the local authority within whose jurisdiction the offence is committed." The expression "local authority" is defined in the Act itself as meaning in the case of any Municipality the Municipal Commissioners. It would therefore follow on the facts set out above that there having been no order or consent in writing of the Municipal Commissioners prior to the 15th March 1925, sanctioning the prosecution of the accused for any offence under the said Act, the prosecution of the accused undertaken previously was incompetent and no cognizance could have been taken by any Court of any offence alleged to have been committed by the accused. It would further follow that in the circumstances mentioned above there could have been no trial of the accused within the meaning of sec. 403, Cr. P. C. A verdict of acquittal is no doubt immune from challenge; but it is only when an accused has been "tried" and acquitted of an offence that the immunity arises. In this case no question of immunity can possibly arise and we are of opinion that the previous acquittal cannot operate as a bar to the present trial. [See in this connection, Emperor v. Umenooddin (1)]. We therefore make the Rule absolute and send the case back to the District Magistrate for trial by such Magistrate as may be nominated by him.

CHERAGALI BEPARI and anr., Accused, Petitioners,
v.
SATISH CHANDRA GHOSH, Complainant, Opposite Party.

Previous acquittal on a charge under sec. 193, Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Subsequent trial on charges under secs. 465, 471, 120B—Facts exactly the same—Subsequent proceedings quashed—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 403.

The Petitioners had previously been tried under sec. 193, I. P. C. and, upon a careful and exhaustive consideration of the whole evidence, acquitted. He was again put on his trial under secs. 465, 471 and 120B:

Held—That inasmuch as the facts on which the complainant founded the present case were inseparable from those upon which the previous case was proceeded with, the proceedings should be quashed.

This was a Rule granted on the 25th of August 1924, on an application praying for the quashing of proceedings pending in the Court of Mr. S. C. Sinha, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunj, on charges under secs. 465, 471 and 120B, I. P. C.

The facts of the case shortly were as follows:—

On the 25th September 1923, the complainant lodged a complaint before Mr. P. N. Mukerji, Deputy Magistrate of Munshigunj, charging the Petitioners with having committed offences under secs. 193, 465, 467 and 423, I. P. C., on the allegation that there having been a long-standing enmity between complainant and Petitioners Protap Das and others

CHERAGALI BEPARI v. SATISH CHANDRA GHOSH.

(the present Petitioner being a tenant of Protap Das), with a view to cause loss to the complainant, Petitioners had entered into a conspiracy to execute a false kabuliyat in respect of the land belonging to the former and let out to the present Petitioner, and in pursuance thereof made a false kabuliyat purporting to have been executed by the Petitioner Cheragali and to have been attested by Protap Das.

Upon this complaint Petitioners were placed upon their trial before Mr. S. N. Chatterji on a charge under sec. 193, I. P. C., neither the complainant nor the Crown took any exception to the proceedings of the Magistrate, nor was any superior Court moved to get a charge of forgery framed in the case. The Magistrate by his judgment, dated the 28th May 1924, acquitted the Petitioners.

Thereafter on 20th June 1924 the complainant lodged a fresh complaint before Mr. S. C. Sinha, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunj, in respect of the same matter charging Petitioners with offences under secs. 465, 467, 471 and 120B, I. P. C. and sec. 109, I. P. C., leaving out sec. 193, I. P. C. The allegations in the second complaint were substantially similar to those in the first excepting in one particular. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate after perusing the judgment of acquittal and hearing the complainant's pleader summoned Petitioners to answer charges under secs. 465, 471 and 120B, I. P. C.

The Petitioners put in objection against the contemplated fresh trial but the Magistrate disallowed the objection.

Babus Narendra Kumar Bose and Radhika Ranjan Guha (for Babu Prokash Chandra Pakrashi) for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

As to the two grounds upon which this Rule was issued we are of opinion that they are not well-founded. The grounds are to the effect that the present proceedings are barred by the provisions of sec. 403, Cr. P. C., and that the facts alleged in the petition of complaint and examination of the complainant under sec. 200, Cr. P. C., do not constitute in law the offence of forgery within the meaning of that word as used in the Indian Penal Code. But on a reference to the judgment of the learned Deputy Magistrate who dealt with the case against the accused that is referred to in the petition we find that the present proceedings should not have been allowed to be instituted. The learned Magistrate went very carefully into the cases set up on behalf of the parties, dealt exhaustively with the evidence that was adduced in the case, considered the probabilities thereof and came to the conclusion that the culpability of the accused had not been established beyond reasonable doubt. Although the accused were tried in that case only on a charge under sec. 193, I. P. C., the facts upon which the complainant founded the present case with regard to the offences under secs. 467, 471 read with 120B, I. P. C., are wholly inseparable from the facts upon which the previous case was proceeded with.

We therefore think that the Petitioner was entitled to a Rule upon the third ground stated in his petition. We have asked the learned vakil appearing on behalf of the Opposite Party to show cause with regard to that ground. Having heard both parties we have come to the conclusion that the present proceedings should be quashed on the said ground.

We accordingly quash the said proceeding and make the Rule absolute.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

LORD SUMNER.

LORD BLANESBURGH.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

MR. AMEER ALL.

LORD SALVESEN.

Heard, 30, April

Judgment,

12, June.

NOWROJI RUSTOMJI WADIA, Appellant,
v.

THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY,
Respondent.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 54, as amended—Valuation, question of, judgment of reversal on—Privy Council, appeal to—Practice—No interference except on question of law or principle.

Upon a question of valuation, where the opinions of competent Courts in India differ (and a fortiori where they concur), it is not the practice of the Board to interfere as an Appellate tribunal unless there appears to be error in law (including error in appreciating or applying the rules of evidence or the judicial methods of weighing evidence) or miscarriage of justice.

Where no error in principle or law was found in the method adopted by the High Court in arriving at its valuation of land which had been compulsorily acquired, the Privy Council refused to go into the question of valuation raised in an appeal preferred to it under sec. 54 of Act I of 1894, as amended.

This was an appeal (No. 43 of 1921) from a decree of the High Court at Bombay, dated the 20th September 1921, which modified a decree of the said Court, dated the 30th August 1920, on a reference thereto under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, I of 1894.

The Appellant was the owner of certain property in Bombay known as Chinchpokli, which was compulsorily acquired by Government for the extension of the Municipal hospital for infectious diseases in Arthur Road.

The Deputy Collector awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 8 per square yard. On a reference the High Court (Kajiji, J.) increased the compensation to Rs. 10 per square yard and on appeal the High Court (MacLeod, C. J. and Shah, J.) restored the Collector's award. The only question on the appeal was as to the amount of compensation to which the Appellant was entitled.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., A. M. Tulbot and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SUMNER.—In 1917 the Municipality of Bombay acquired a plot of land for purposes connected with an existing hospital, and the usual statutory proceedings took place before the Collector of Bombay to fix the amount of compensation to be paid for the land. The owner, being dissatisfied with the amount awarded, viz., Rs. 98,724, claimed a reference to the High Court, and in 1920 Kajiji, J., varied the Collector's award by increasing the rate to be allowed per square yard superficial from Rs. 8 to Rs. 10. This raised the total compensation to Rs. 1,39,970. Upon an appeal by the Municipality the High Court set aside the learned Judge's decree and dismissed the reference. They thus in effect confirmed the Collector's award. From this decision the claimant now appeals.

NOWROJI RUSTOMJI WADIA v. THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY.

The value to be placed at a given moment on a plot of land, which is not in the market or the subject of bargain and sale, but owes a large part of any value it possesses to the prospective results of development work, to be undertaken thereafter at an uncertain time and at an estimated cost, is not only in its essence a question of fact but is one upon which, almost above any other, opinions will differ, without its being possible to give irrefragable reasons for any particular conclusion.

It has been declared in decisions of the Board, by which their Lordships are now bound, that appeals in valuation cases will only be entertained on questions of principle. [See Secretary of State v. India General Steam Navigation and Railway Company (1) and Rangoon Botatoung Company, Limited v. The Collector, Rangoon (2), per Lord Macnaghten; Charandas v. Ameer Khan (3), per Lord Buckmaster—"this Board will not interfere with any question of valuation"—and Rai Bahadur Lala Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India (4)]. Errors in law, including errors in appreciating or applying the rules of evidence or the judicial methods of weighing evidence, are matters that can and will be dealt with on appeal by this Board, but when, as in the present case, a difference of opinion has occurred between two Indian Courts upon the number of rupees per yard to be allowed for a plot of land, as to which their Lordships can form no opinion of their own, it would be alike unprofitable and impracticable to embark on a comparison of the decisions of these Courts. In cases relating to the acquisition of land the whole matter, both of fact and law, is a proper subject of appeal in India, for there local knowledge and experience enable the learned Judges to form useful judgments upon the whole case. The amending Act of 1921 declares awards under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, to be decrees, so as to bring them within the general rules as to appeals to this Board, but it does not prescribe any special mode, in which they are to be treated. This Board has found it necessary to limit the extent of the inquiry, in order to spare the parties costly and fruitless litigation. Just as in cases where there are concurrent findings of fact in the Indian Courts, it has long been the general rule of the Board not to allow such findings to be re-opened here [Naragunty Luchmedavamañ v. Vengama Naidoo (5) and Umrao Begum v. Irshad Hussain (6)], so it has now been settled that this Board will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon questions of value. Where their Lordships have neither the materials nor the experience on which to found an opinion of their own, in a matter where the opinions of competent Courts in India differ (and a fortiori where they concur), it is not their practice to interfere, as an Appellate tribunal, unless there appears to be error in law or miscarriage of justice.

In view of this practice the present case may be shortly dealt with. The plot to be acquired was irregular in shape and contour. Except at one point, and there only by a narrow passage, it had no access to any road. Part of it was hollow and low-lying, so that in the rains water accumulated there to the depth of several feet. No transactions were proved in respect of land closely adjacent to or precisely similar to this plot and such transactions as had occurred were cases of development and sale at dates not at or about the material time, viz., 1917. The question, whether or not there had afterwards been an upward trend in market values generally, was not only highly disputable as a matter of opinion, but was not affirmatively supported by any satisfactory proof.

Both parties admitted that the most satisfactory use, to which the land could be put, was the erection of workmen's dwellings, and the value of the land for this purpose accordingly became the question to which both directed their attention. Development of this kind required the dedication of a considerable part of the surface, in order to provide an access road, and also the raising of the whole surface to one level, free from risk of flooding, by permanently filling in the cavities with suitable loose material. Estimates of the area of land required for the road and of the cost of filling in per cubic yard were accordingly prepared, and were agreed on both sides. It does not appear, however, that any allowance was made for the time required to enable the made ground to settle, or for the risk that unexpected settlements might take place, and probably these factors were beyond any exact estimation. Of course the circumstances that might exist, when the work was done and the realisable value of the developed site could be ascertained, were alike beyond human foresight.

Kajiji, J., appears to have addressed himself to the question of the fair compensation for land taken in 1917, to be allowed as at that date, as if it were an algebraic problem, which could be solved by an abstract formula. He sought to ascertain what value per yard the land might be supposed to have, if improved at some uncertain date, by treating the cost of filling in the cavities as a determined sum, to which there could not be any addition, and by deducting this sum alone from the supposed realisable value after future development. From these somewhat abstract factors he arrived at a concrete rate per superficial yard to be paid presently by way of compensation. In doing so he took no account of the factor of interest on the cost of the filling in and the other development work during the uncertain interval before the time of realisation might arrive.

From his conclusions thus arrived at the High Court dissented. Their reasons are not very clearly given, but this may be due to the fact that the evidence, which they discussed, is not very clearly recorded. At any rate, as it appears to their Lordships, they fell into no error of principle in their criticisms of the judgment of Kajiji, J., or in the process by which they arrived at their own conclusions. In dissenting from the method, which the learned Judge seems to have followed, they were certainly right. Factors such as he omitted to notice may be of great importance or of little, or even may be truly negligible, according to the circumstances of the particular case, but it cannot be right to ignore them altogether, as having no place at all in a rigid system of calculation. They were guided by their own view, as they were entitled to be, of the weight of the various pieces of evidence, nearly all of indirect bearing on the problem in hand—and in many cases only imperfectly developed. They thought, as they were entitled to think, that the grounds, on which the supposed rise in general market values was rested, were so unsubstantial in themselves and so distantly related to the circumstances of the site in question, as not to amount to any evidence on which to rest the judicial conclusion that something should be allowed for a rising market.

After carefully examining the evidence and the way in which the High Court appears to have dealt with it in arriving at the conclusion now under appeal, their Lordships are unable to find that there has been any error in principle or in law in the method of arriving at it. They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Hindu law—Shebait's right of worship of family deity, alienation to another member of family, if legal in the absence of custom—"Benefit to idol," if justifies alienation—"Consensus" of persons interested, if justifies alienation—"Benefit," what is.

There is a distinction between a shebait's obligation to perform the spiritual duties of his office and his obligation to manage the temporalities of the idol. A shebaiti primarily and mainly is a sacred office and because in certain circumstances a shebait may be entitled to alienate the temporalities of the deity, it does not follow that in similar or any circumstances he is entitled to transfer the spiritual duties and privileges which appertain to his office.

In the nature of things, there can be no necessity for a voluntary transfer of the spiritual duties of a shebait, and the doctrine that a shebait at his own will and pleasure is at liberty to alter the line of shebait on the ground that to do so would be for the benefit of the deity offends against the common law of India and is in conflict with the uniform rulings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Messrs. N. N. Sircar, B. K. Ghose and B. C. Kar for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. H. D. Bose and A. K. Deb for the Defendant.

Mr. H. D. Bose :—Kumar Girindra Narayan Deb, the original Plaintiff in this suit, was a shebait under the Will of the late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur. By a Bengalee arpannama, dated 13th September 1918, Girindra purported to make a gift of his turn of worship or pala under the said Will to the Defendant and his heirs, etc. Thereafter Girindra instituted this suit for a declaration that the said arpannama was a benami transaction and as such was void and inoperative in law. Pending this suit Girindra died leaving a Will by which he appointed the Plaintiff amongst others as an executor. The Plaintiff got himself substituted in place of Girindra and is continuing this suit.

My first point is that the present Plaintiff being only an executor has no locus standi and cannot continue this suit. [Cited sec. 89 of the Probate and Administration Act]. Moreover Girindra's legal heir is alive and he alone can challenge the transaction and not the present Plaintiff who had no title. My second point is that the arpannama having been executed by Girindra during his lifetime is valid and operative in law. [Cites Rajeswar v. Gopeshwar (23)].

PAGE, J.—In transferring the pala is not he defeating the object of the founder? In any event the transfer must be either for necessity or benefit of the idol.

Mr. Bose.—He is not defeating the object of the founder. And the transfer was for the benefit of the idol. I am the Defendant and a Plaintiff having no title cannot challenge mine.

Mr. Sircar.—The Plaintiff has good title to continue the suit for Girindra as will appear from the pleadings. As for the second point this is not an absolute dedication, so Girindra remained the owner of the property. The Privy Council have held under the common law of India the transfer of palas or turns of worship are not valid in Hindu law. [Cites Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Mutha (9) and Gnanasambanda Pandora v. Vellu Pandaram (6)].

PAGE, J.—It seems that such transfers are contrary to the principles of Hindu law.

Mr. Sircar.—Yes, shebait cannot transfer even to a co-shebait. [Cites Gobinda Kumar Roy v. Debendra Kumar Roy (21)].

Therefore under the law this transfer is invalid. Moreover there was no legal necessity or benefit to the idol.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

PAGE, J.—This case raises an issue of deep and general interest to the Hindu community, viz., whether a shebait is entitled to transfer the rights and duties which appertain to his office.

On the 19th April 1867 Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb died. He was an erudite Sanskrit scholar, and a personage of culture and distinction. He left surviving him three sons and numerous other relations of whom the following is a pedigree.*

On the 3rd August 1863 the Raja made his last Will which has been admitted to probate, although the terms thereof have formed the subject of much litigation. Under this Will a large estate passed to the executors and trustees subject to certain trusts, but for the purpose of my judgment in this suit, I need refer only to those set out in the 12th, 15th, 16th clauses of the Will. Under the 12th clause it is provided :—

The executors and trustees shall pay to my sons or their heirs and representatives such sums for the sheba or service of my family idols and the usual poojahs that are celebrated in my house and the periodical Sradhas of my ancestors, of my late wife and of myself when dead as to the executors and trustees may seem fit and proper, but the executor and trustees are not to be personally responsible for the proper performance of this trust, which is to devolve and be a burden and duty upon the recipient and recipients of the said sums.

(21) 12 O. W. N. 98 (1907).

Under the 15th clause provision was made for the mode in which the family dwelling-houses, including a certain garden-house at Sukchar, should be used. Under the 16th clause it is provided that—the clothes, ornaments, jewels and other articles for the use of the family idol, daily or on festive occasions and relating to the pujhas and ceremonies are to remain in the common custody of my sons and heirs, provided nevertheless that the articles above mentioned shall not be appropriated to any private use of my sons or their heirs.

By a decree of the High Court (Peacock, C. J. and Macpherson, J.), dated 20th September 1869, it was declared that the bequests contained in the 12th and 16th clauses were valid, and as regards the 15th clause it was declared that in so far as the terms thereof related to the dedication of property to the family idol, Gobinjee, the same were valid, but in so far as the said clause related to the use of the family dwelling-houses and garden, the directions of the testator must be limited to the members of the family who were living at the time of his death. By a decree of the High Court (Macpherson, J.), dated 6th October 1871, it was inter alia ordered that the worship of the idols was to be performed by the three branches of the family in palas of one year in succession and that the " garden with baitakkhana at Sukchar be enjoyed by the person or persons entitled to perform the deb sheba while performing the same during his or her turn of worship." Since that date further litigation in connection with the terms of the Will has taken place, but it is unnecessary, I think, that I should refer to these later proceedings except to mention that by a decree of the High Court (Sale, J.), dated 7th September 1899, the garden and house at Sukchar were included in the trusts under the Will of 3rd August 1863, provided that the same should be used in the manner prescribed under the decree of the 6th October 1871.

On the 13th September 1918 Girindra Narayan, the only son and heir of Raja Rajendra Deb, being entitled to a pala of the worship of the deities, referred to in the Will, executed in favour of the Defendant an indenture of arpannama in the following form:—

This indenture of arpannamah Patra made this thirteenth day of September in the Christian Year one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, between Kumar Girindra Narain Deb, son of the late Raja Rajendra Narain Deb Bahadur of the Sovabazar Rajbati in Raja Nabo Kissen Street in the town of Calcutta hereinafter called the grantor of the one part and Robindra Narain Deb, son of Monindra Narain Deb of the same place of the other part hereinafter called the grantee (in which term is included his lineal male heirs and representatives unless the context is repugnant thereto) whereas Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K.C.S.I. of Sovabazar in the town of Calcutta died on the nineteenth day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven leaving behind him three sons, viz: Kumar Mahendra Narain Deb, Kumar (subsequently Raja) Rajendra Narain Deb and Kumar Debendra Narain Deb and a Will bearing date the third day of August in the year of Christ one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three. And whereas a probate was obtained by the executor therein named of the Will from the Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction of the Hon'ble High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal on first day of May one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, and whereas the grantor herein Kumar Girindra Narain Deb, the only son and heir of Raja Rajendra Narain Deb, deceased, was born during the life-time of the said testator Raja Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and whereas under the terms and provisions of the said Will the grantor is sufficiently possessed of the right of worship of the family deity Sree Sree Iswar Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities in the manner indicated in clause 12 of the said Will and as such sufficiently entitled to and possessed of the right of enjoyment of certain properties, privileges, rights and liberties particularly set forth in the said Will by clause 12 and also by terms and provisions of the consent decree, dated 6th of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 and also under the decree in Suit No. 699 of 1899 in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction to any other rights, privileges in or any other deeds and documents and whereas the grantor herein is performing the daily worship of the said family deity Sree Sree Iswar Radha Gobinda Jew and other pujas according to his turn of worship and the annual Sradh in compliance with the terms and provisions of the said clause 12 of the said Will and in the manner indicated therein and the decrees and orders set forth above and is in full possession, enjoyment of the rights, privileges, etc., as set forth in the said Will of Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and the consent decree dated sixth day of October one thousand nine hundred and seventy-one made in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 and also of the decree of seventh day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine in Suit No. 699 of 1899 in the Original Side of the High Court and whereas the grantor has no male lineal descendant and has only a grandson Bireswar Mitra son of his deceased daughter Sreemuty Hemanta Kumari Dasi who the grantor holds and considers is unfit to perform the various orders and duties imposed upon him and enjoy the privileges by the terms and provisions of the Will of the late Raja Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and the decree set forth above by reason of his want of training and defective moral character and whereas the grantor hath given the grantee sound and regular training as to the way in which the said worship of the family deities Sree Sree Laksmi Narain Jew Salgram established and consecrated by his late father and also of the periodical Sradh from his infancy and believes and considers the said grantee the best person to perform truly and faithfully the worship of the said deities and is best able to manage the properties and control the affairs in connection with the worship of the said family deities other pujahs and Shradhs of the late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur instead of the grantor and whereas the said grantee Robin-dra Narain Deb is great great grandson of the said testator Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K.C.S.I. in the male line of succession and best able to perform the worship of the said deities. Now this Indenture witnesseth that in consideration of the said grantee being a great great grandson of the said testator Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur in the male line of succession and by his character, education and training is best able to perform the worship of the said family deity Sree Sree Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities of late Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and of Sree Sree Laksmi Narain Jew Salagram as above stated and in consideration of the fact that the arrangement will be beneficial for the said deities as it will be conducive to the proper conduct of the worship the grantor Kumar Girindra Narain Deb doth hereby convey, confer, alienate and transfer his right, title and interest to and in the worship of the said family deity Sree Sree Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities with all rights and privileges that he is entitled to under the will of the said Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K.C.S.I. and the consent decree dated the 6th day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1866 on the Original Side of the High Court and by any other document for the performance of the said seva and pujah to be held and enjoyed by him so long as he shall be alive and capable of performing the seva or service of the family deity etc., and the usual pujahs that are celebrated in the house of Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K.C.S.I. to be continued to be so held and enjoyed by his heirs in the male line of succession only on condition of their duly performing the seva and service of the said family deities etc., with other usual pujahs that are held and celebrated in the family Rajbati and not for any personal gain and that in the event of failure in the male line of succession of the same grantee the grantor doth hereby confer or convey and alienate his right of worship of the said family deities etc and privileges attached thereto under the Will of the late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K.C.S.I., and the consent decree of the sixth day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1866 in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal or by any other deed or deeds in favour of Dwijendra Narain Deb the third son of Monindra Narain Deb and in his absence his heir or heirs in the male line of succession who may be living at the time to be held and enjoyed by him or them only on condition of his or their performing the seva or service of the said deities, etc., and in his or their absence the grantor doth hereby confer, convey, transfer and alienate his right of worship of the said family deities and the several pujahs and all rights and privileges attached to the same under the terms and provisions of the Will of late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and those of the consent decrees of sixth day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1866 and the decree dated seventh day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine in Suits No. 699 of 1899 in the Original Side of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal to the nearest male agnate that may be alive at the time to the exclusion of Sachindra Narayan Deb eldest son of Monindra Narain Deb and his representatives.

In witness whereof I do hereunto affix my signature.

On the 14th September 1918 Girindra executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of the Defendant empowering him inter alia to represent Girindra in all matters connected with the trust estate, and to receive monies for the purpose of the deb sheba expenses. After executing the said documents Girindra went to Benares, and in his absence the Defendant performed the Durga Puja of 1918. In December 1918 Girindra returned to Calcutta, and becoming suspicious of the manner in which the Defendant was managing his affairs cancelled the said power-of-attorney, and on the 23rd June 1921 filed the present suit, praying inter alia that the said indenture of arpan-nama be declared invalid and void, and that the said indenture be cancelled, and for incidental relief. On the 20th April 1923 Girindra died, and on 3rd July 1923 an order was made substituting his two executors as Plaintiffs in his stead. On the 7th March 1924 one of the executors died, and on the 14th April 1924 an order was made directing the present Plaintiff, as the sole surviving executor to prosecute the suit.

The Defendant has based his defence upon three grounds : (1) that the present Plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit ; (2) that Girindra did not execute the said indenture of arpannama with the intention thereby of defeating or delaying his creditors, as the Plaintiff alleged, or in the alternative, if such was his intention, that the said creditors were thereby defeated and/or delayed ; (3) that the transfer of Girindra's rights and interests in the turn of worship of the said deities was for the benefit of the deities, and that Girindra executed the said indenture bona fide in the interest of the deities in order that the worship should be more fittingly celebrated and the endowment more effectively managed.

As regards the first ground of defence, the Defendant urged that as the subject-matter of the suit related to a personal right of worship vested in Girindra as the heir of Rajendra, the cause of action, if any, which Girindra possessed did not pass to his executors, for actio personalis moritur cum persona. In my opinion, there is no substance in this contention. Apart from the question as to whether, having regard to the interlocutory proceedings in this suit, it is open to the Defendant to raise this contention, by para. 27 of the plaint the Plaintiff alleged that his " turn of worship commenced from the 1st Bysack 1328 (14th April 1921), and he had begun to perform the worship of the deities in accordance with the testator's Will at his own expense. The Plaintiff has been put to great hardship in consequence of the withdrawal of the funds by the said trustee at the instance of the Defendant." This allegation is not denied in the written statement, and the executors clearly are entitled to recover from the trust estate the reasonable expenses of the palas which Girindra incurred, and this relief they cannot obtain unless and until the indenture is cancelled, or declared to be void. In my opinion, the cause of action is not merely of a personal nature, and the Plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit. [Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendra Nath Mukerjee (1)].

In support of the second ground of defence, evidence was led, and arguments were addressed to me for the purpose of casting aspersion upon the moral conduct, and impugning the financial dealings of the parties in connection with this debutter estate. Now, this is a dispute between relatives, and the parties are members of a well known and distinguished family. It is very desirable, I think, that I should not embark upon a discussion of the matters raised in this ground of defence, for the result inevitably would be to embitter, and not to heal, the dissensions which have arisen among the members of this family; unless, indeed, I am compelled to do so in order to determine the issues raised between the parties.

It is a source of satisfaction to me that I am not called upon to express any opinion upon the second ground of defence, for, in my opinion, the terms of the indenture of arpannama are such that I must hold the indenture to be in law void and inoperative. It is to be observed that by the operative words in the indenture the grantor "doth hereby convey, confer, alienate and transfer his right, title and interest to, and in the worship of, the said family deity Sree Sree Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities with all rights and privileges that he is entitled to under the Will of the Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb and the consent decree, dated the 6th October 1871, in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 on the Original Side of the High Court, and by any other document for the performance of the said sheba and pujah to Robindra, to be held and enjoyed by him so long as he shall be alive and capable of performing the sheba or service of the family deities." And later: "doth hereby confer, convey, transfer and alienate his right of worship of the said family deities, and of the several pujahs and all rights and privileges attached to the same to the nearest male agnate that may be alive at the time to the exclusion of Sityendra Narain Deb, eldest son of Monindra Narain Deb, and his representatives."

It is conceded that the rights and privileges conveyed by the indenture are solely those relating and attached to the worship of the deities, and that the line of succession to the shebaiti set out in the indenture is neither that laid down by the founder, nor that prescribed by the principles of the Hindu law. It is contended, however, that inasmuch as the provisions of the indenture were "for the benefit of the deities," and the grantee was a member of the founder's family, the indenture was one that Girindra as shebait was competent to execute, and that the transaction should receive the sanction of the Court. I have to determine whether this contention is sound or not.

A Judge who is not a Hindu must needs approach the consideration of such a question with diffidence, but I have had the advantage of hearing the matter exhaustively argued by distinguished Hindu Counsel, and I have myself explored the case-law and such Hindu texts as bear upon the subject. The ancient sages for the most part are silent on the subject of shebaiti rights and duties, [per Seshagiri Aiyer, J., Annaya Tantri v. Ammakka Hengsu (2)], but the decisions are numerous, and conflicting and I find myself, therefore, at liberty—indeed I am constrained to express my own opinion on the matter.

Now, "sheba" means "service," and whenever an image or idol is set up and consecrated, there must needs be a shebait to serve and sustain the deity whose tabernacle the image is. The duties and the privileges of a shebait primarily are those of one who fills a sacred office. He must take the image into his charge and custody; he must see that it is washed and fed and clothed and tended, and that due provision for its worship is made: "We need not describe here in detail the normal type of worship of a consecrated image—the sweeping of the temple, the process of smearing, the removal of the previous day's offerings of flowers, the presentation of fresh flowers, the respectful oblation of rice and flowers and water and other like practices. It is sufficient to state that the deity is in short conceived as a living being, and is treated in the same way as the master of the house would be treated by his humble servant. The daily routine of life is gone through with minute accuracy, the vivified image is regaled with necessities and luxuries of life in due succession, even to the changing of clothes, the offering of cooked and uncooked food, and the retirement to rest." [Per Mookerjee, J., in Rambrama v. Kedar (3)]. The main concern of a shebait, therefore, is duly to carry out the sacred duties of his office. He may perform his spiritual functions personally or he may—indeed, if he does not possess the necessary qualifications to enable him to celebrate the worship of the deity he must,—appoint a qualified deputy to officiate in his stead. [Annaya Tantri v. Ammakka Hengsu (2)].

Now, it usually happens when an image is consecrated that property, moveable or immoveable, is dedicated to its use. This is the common, indeed, almost the invariable, practice. After dedication the proprietary title to the property is vested in the idol, the right to possess and the duty to manage the property in the shebait. [Jagadindra's case (4)]. "As regards the property the manager is in a position of a trustee, but as regards the service of the temple and the duties that appertain to it, he is rather in the position of the holder of an office or dignity [Per Lord Macnaughten; Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (5)]. There is "no distinction between the office and the property of the endowment; the one is attached to the other [Per Sir Richard Couch in Gnanasambanda Pandara v. Velu (6)] but, in truth, it is the endowment which is attached to the office, not the office to the endowment; for while there may be a shebait without endowed property, there cannot be property dedicated to an idol without a shebait to manage it. "I might at once say that in respect of such a religious office it is not the right of the office-holder to receive emoluments which is the important or principal right, but, in my opinion, it is the right of the deity to have certain services performed to it which is a primary right. I also think that as regards the religious office itself the duties of the office should be considered as the substance of the office, the right to receive the emoluments being only an appurtenance of the said deity . . . I am inclined to hold that it is the rights that are subordinate and appurtenant to the duties, and it is not the duties that are subordinate and appurtenant to the rights" [per Sadasiva Aiyer, J., in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yoga Varma Gurukhal (7)].

I have emphasised the distinction between the shebait's obligation to perform the spiritual duties of his office, and his obligation to manage the temporalities of the idol, because it is important to bear in mind that a shebaiti primarily and mainly is a sacred office, and that it does not follow, because in certain circumstances a shebait may be entitled to alienate the temporalities of the deity, that in similar or any circumstances he is entitled to transfer the spiritual duties and privileges which appertain to his office.

Now, on the question which falls for determination the authorities in India are numerous, but, as I apprehend them, the decisions sometimes are inconsistent, sometimes inconclusive, and if I refrain from examining them in detail, I do so, not out of want of respect for the learned Judges who were parties to the decisions, but because I am content to found my judgment upon the common law of India and the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which, to my mind, put the matter beyond controversy. In 1869 an appeal was heard by the Judicial Committee in which the issue was whether a shebait was entitled to sell certain jammās connected with a taluk which had been dedicated to an idol. The Judicial Committee held that "The taluk itself with which these jammās were connected by tenure was dedicated to the religious services of the idol. The rents constituted, therefore, in legal contemplation, its property. The shebait had not the legal property, but only the title of manager of a religious endowment. In the exercise of that office she could not alienate the property, though she might create proper derivative tenures and estates conformable to usage." [Maharani Shibessuree Debya v. Mothooranath (7a)].

In 1875 in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand (8), Sir Montague Smith, in the course of the judgment, observed that "there is no doubt that as a general rule of Hindu law property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of charities connected with it is inalienable But notwithstanding that property devoted to religious purposes is, as a rule, inalienable, it is in their Lordships' opinion, competent for the shebait of property dedicated to the worship of the idol in his capacity as shebait and manager of the estate to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks and other like objects. The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them . . . It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol; and the possession and management of it must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as shebait, or manager. It would seem to follow that the person so entrusted must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol, and for the benefit and preservation of its property, at least to as great degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so, the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted, and its worship discontinued for want of the necessary funds to pr serve and maintain them."

In 1876 in Raja Vurma Valia v. Ravi l'urmah (9) the issue was whether the urallars or managers of a pagoda were entitled to assign the conduct of the worship and the right to manage the property of the endowment to the Raja of Cherakel. The deed of assignment recited that "the pagoda and its dependent institutions belong exclusively to the four tarwads of the urallars; that they are in debt to the amount of Rs. 46,000; that as the property was insufficient to conduct the affairs of the pagoda, this debt was likely to increase, that the Cherakel was willing to pay off the debts and take over the pagoda and its property and conduct all the ceremonies, and that the urallars had received in cash Rs. 46,000 to pay off debts and Rs. 10,000 for their own use. In consideration of the above the deed assigned over to the Raja all the property, moveable and immoveable, of the pagoda, and the uraima right of the four families, with the reservation of the right to join in the assembly for conducting the ceremonies and to receive the privileges attached thereto."

Sir James Colville who in this appeal delivered the opinion of the Board, observed: "The first question is whether, independently of custom, the persons holding such a trust are capable of transferring it at their own will. No authority has been laid before their Lordships to establish this proposition; principle and reason seemed to be strongly opposed to such a power and particularly to such an exercise of it as has taken place in this instance. The unknown founder may be supposed to have established this species of corporation with the distinct object of securing the due performance of the worship, and the due administration of the property by the instrumentality and at the discretion of four persons capable of deliberating and bound to deliberate together; he may also have considered it essential that those four persons should be the heads of particular families resident in a particular district, open to the public opinion of that district and having that sort of family interest in the maintenance of this religious worship which would ensure its due performance. It seems very unreasonable to suppose that the founder of such a corporation ever intended to empower the four trustees of his creation at their mere will to transfer their office and its duties with all the property of the trust to a single individual who might act according to his sole discretion, and might have no connection with the families from which the trustees were to be taken. Such a transferee might be a powerful man, as probably this Cherakel Rajah is; and therefore, the less amenable to public opinion, the less capable of being reached by the Courts, and the more likely to deal with the institution with a high hand. Mr. Mayne almost admitted that the broad principle delegatus non potest delegare would prima facie apply to such a case." After discussing the authorities, his Lordship added: "This being the state of the authorities, their Lordships are of opinion that there is no authority binding even on the Court of Madras which is inconsistent with the judgments under appeal; that the general principle affirmed by those judgments is correct; and consequently that the uraima had no power under what may be termed the common law of India to transfer their uraima right to the Plaintiff, the Cherakel Rajah. But it is said that in India, and particularly in that part of India in which this pagoda is situated, custom must prevail against the general law. That such would be the consequence of a well-proved and established custom their Lordships do not deny But their Lordships are of opinion that no custom which can qualify the general principle of law has been established in this case, and they desire to add that if the custom set up was one to sanction not merely the transfer of a trusteeship, but as in this case the sale of a trusteeship for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee, they would be disposed to hold that that circumstance alone would justify a decision that the custom was bad in law."

In 1899 in Gnanasambanda Pandara v. Velu (6) a later Board of the Judicial Committee restated the same rule: "In Raja Vurma Valia v. Ravi Vurmah

NAGENDRA NATH PALIT v. ROBINDBA NARAIN DEB.

Mutha (9) this Committee held that an assignment by the urallars of a pagoda of the right of management thereof was beyond their competence under the common law of India, and that no custom to do so had been established. There is no proof of any custom in this case, and consequently these deeds of sale are void, and do not give any title to the purchaser." Alienations by a shebait in contravention of the law as laid down in these decisions are void and need not be set aside: Raja Vurma v. Ravi Vurmah (9); Narayanam v. Lachamanan (10) and such an alienation may be declared void even at the instance of the alienor [Jagat Mohini Dasi v. Sukhimani Dasi (11), Sreemuty Mallika Dasi v. Ratanmani (12)]. The Judicial Committee have never deviated from the principles laid down in the above cases, and it is settled law that "in the absence of any custom or usage to the contrary or any term to that effect in the deed of endowment a religious trust or the right of management of a religious or charitable endowment or a religious office attached to a temple or any other endowment cannot be alienated by the holder [per Mookerjee, J., in Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Halder (13)].

In the present case it is conceded that no usage obtains in the family which would render valid the indenture of arpannama, if otherwise it is void under the common law of India. I need not therefore, embark upon the still unsettled question as to whether, and if so, in what circumstances, the Courts would sanction an usage under which rights of worship have been alienated by a shebait. Again, there is authority for the proposition that the consensus of all the persons interested in the worship may "give the estate another direction," [Raja Vurma Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Mutha (9), Khetter Chunder Ghose v. Haridas Bandopadhyaya (14) and Promotha Nath v. Pradyumna Kumar (15)]: but so far as I know the Judicial Committee in no case have determined that such a consensus of opinion would justify a transfer of the spiritual rights and duties of the office of a shebait: Sethurama Swami v. Meruswamy (16). In this case, however, it is admitted that Girindra executed the arpannama entirely at his own will, and upon his own initiative, and that he neither invited nor obtained a consensus of opinion among those interested in the worship of the deities in favour of the course which he pursued. It is further urged that Girindra as shebait was competent and entitled to execute the indenture of arpannama provided that either of the following conditions was fulfilled: (1) that the assignment of the pala was to a member of the founder's family qualified to perform the duties of shebait, or (2) that the assignment was "for the benefit of the deities." As regards (1) it is well settled that "according to Hindu law, when the worship of a thakur has been founded, the shebaitship is held to be vested in the heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, or there has been some usage, course of dealing, or some circumstances to show a different mode of devolution" [*Goswami Shree Gree Dhariji v. NAGENDRA NATH PALIT v. ROBINDRANATH DEB.

The High Court at Madras consistently has held that an alienation by a shebait of the corpus of the dedicated property, either to a member of the founder's family or to a stranger, is utterly void, Kuppa v. Doraswami (18), Narayana v. Ranga (19) and Sundarambal Ammal's case (7); see also Juggurnath Roy Chowdhury v. Kishen Pershad (20), Narayana Chintaman (20a), Shri Ganesh v. Keshavarav (20b), Mallika's case (12), Gobinda Chowdhury v. Deb Kumar Roy (21). In Sm. Mallika's case (12), Banerjee, J., observed that "It has been held in a uniform current of decisions both in this and in the High Courts of Bombay and Madras that a priestly office with emoluments attached to it is inalienable If it were necessary to give reasons for such a proposition so amply supported by authority as the proposition contended for on behalf of the Respondents, I may say that it would be contrary to public policy to allow an office like this to be transferred either by private sale or by sale in execution of a decree. The Defendant in this case is one of several *shebait*s of the idol, his turn of office extending for 11 days in a month; the emoluments consist of votive offerings, and if a person professing a religion different from Hinduism were to become the execution purchaser, it would lead to no end of complications and disturbances, which would be detrimental in the highest degree to the interests of other *shebait*s and of votaries generally."

It is not settled whether the renunciation of a shebaiti by the office-holder in favour of a sole immediate heir would be void: [Narayana v. Ranga (19)]. It may be—though I do not decide—that such an alienation would contravene the doctrine of delegatus non potest delegare: [Raja Vurma Vadia v. Ravi Vurmah Mutha (9)], but if it be assumed that a shebait is competent to abdicate from his office, in my opinion, such an act would operate to transfer the office to the persons entitled thereto as reversioners under the foundation, or in default of any directions by the founder or of custom according to the principles of the common law of India. The office would not pass under or by virtue of any assignment of his office by the abdicating shebait whether it purported to be in favour of the sole immediate heir or of any other person, for every such assignment in my opinion is wholly void and inoperative. If the view of the position and status of a shebait which I have expressed is correct, it follows that the case of Muncharam v. Premshunker (22) was wrongly decided and ought not to be followed. Rajeswar Mullick v. Gopeswar Mullick (23) and Gobinda Kumar Roy's case (21). As regards (2) it is urged that the assignment in suit is valid and should receive the imprimatur of the Court because the transfer of the pala was "for the benefit of the deities." In support of this contention learned Counsel for the Defendant referred to the decision of this Court in Nirad Mohini Dasi v. Shevadas Pal

NAGENDRA NATH PALIT v. ROBINDRA NARAIN DEB.

Dewasin (24) and the dictum of Mitra, J., in Rajeswar Mullick's case (23). With all respect to the learned Judges who decided these cases, for the reasons which I am about to state, I am of opinion that the decisions in Nirad Mohini Dasi's case (24) and in Rajeswar Mullick's case (23), so far as it is founded upon the same reasoning, are not in accordance with the law of India as enunciated by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and I cannot acquiesce in them.

The contention which learned Counsel has urged upon the Court, in my opinion, is founded upon a heresy which has crept into the Hindu law, and ought to be exposed and eradicated. This is not the only branch of law in which the words "for the benefit" have caused error and confusion [see Barwick v. The English Joint Stock Bank (25), Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (26)]. Who is to determine whether any particular alienation is "for the benefit of the deity?" Is it the founder? Is it the persons interested in the worship? Is it the *shebait*s, or one or more of them? Is it the Court? I do not pause to hazard a conjecture, for, in my opinion, the doctrine contravenes the Hindu law, and in any event cannot be extended to an alienation of the spiritual rights and duties of a shebait. The genesis of the heresy may be found, I think, in a misapprehension of certain observations of Sir Montague Smith in Prosunno Kumari's case (8): "The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager for an infant heir which was thus defined in a judgment of this Committee delivered by Lord Justice Knight Bruce: The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is under the Hindu law a limited and qualified power; it can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate, but where in the particular instance the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bond fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance is the thing to be regarded." Hunooman Persaud Pandey v. Mussamat Babooi Munraj Kunwari (27). From the above passage the doctrine has been evolved that although there might be no necessity for any particular alienation of debutter property, yet, if the transfer was "for the benefit" or "for the clear benefit" of the endowment, it could be upheld according to the Hindu law. It is incumbent upon me, therefore, to examine more closely the rule propounded in Prosunno Kumari's case (8). It is to be observed that while Sir Montague Smith laid down that a shebait "may incur debts or borrow money for necessary purposes," his Lordship added: "The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them." Since 1875, the Judicial Committee have more fully defined the circumstances in which a shebait is empowered to alienate debutter property. In 1876 Sir Montague Smith, delivering the opinion of the Board in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram

NAGENDRA NATH PALIT v. ROBINDRA NARAIN DEB.

Chunder Sen (28) stated that the Rani Rashmoni, who had effected the alienation of the property then in suit "had, as the manager of the estate, power, if it were debutter dedicated to the idol, to alienate so much of it as was necessary to keep up the temple and worship of the idol; and if it were secular to alienate it if it became necessary to do so to preserve the rest of the family estate." And later in his judgment his Lordship, referring to Prosunno Kumari's case (8), observed that "in that case a shebait had incurred debts and mortgaged the property of the idol for the purpose of the necessary sustentation of the worship of the idol; and this tribunal held that the position of the shebait was analogous to that of a manager of an infant, and that he had the same authority, which in both cases arises from the necessity of the case, to raise money for the benefit of the estate." In that case their Lordships held that the "sale of part of the land was justified by the imperious necessity of finishing the temple which had been commenced." In Abhiram Goswamy v. Shyama Charan Nundy (29), Sir Andrew Scoble, delivering the judgment of the Board, observed that "it is well-settled law that the power of the mohunt to alienate debutter property is, like the power of the manager for an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity." Again, in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (30), Lord Atkinson laid down that "if for the reasons above mentioned the grant of a lease in perpetuity of debutter lands at a fixed rent requires to be justified by unavoidable necessity, it is difficult to see why an absolute alienation in perpetuity of the same kind of land in consideration of a premium should not equally require to be justified by the same kind of necessity, since it brings about quite as completely the same prejudicial results." His Lordship also observed that "the only specific point touching the present case actually decided in these three authorities was this: that a debutter estate may be mortgaged to secure the repayment of money borrowed and applied to prevent its own extinction by sequestration. No indication is to be found in any of them as to what is, in this connection, the precise nature of the things to be included under the description 'benefit of the estate.' It is impossible, their Lordships think, to give a precise definition of it applicable to all cases, and they do not attempt to do so. The preservation, however, of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it from injury or deterioration by inundation, this and such like things would obviously be benefits. The difficulty is to draw the line as to what are in this connection to be taken as benefits, and what not." An examination of these authorities leads to the conclusion that the power of a shebait to alienate the corpus of debutter property is to be measured by the exigencies of the occasion. An alienation of such property, in my opinion, cannot be justified unless it is impracticable duly to carry out the service and worship of the deity, and matters incidental thereto, or to preserve the dedicated property without incurring the expenditure, to defray which it is proposed to effect the alienation; and further, unless the required expenditure cannot be met out of the income of the endowment, and without alienating the corpus of the estate. In short, the shebait's power of alienation must be exercised for purposes of defence and not of aggrandisement, as a shield and not as a sword. Occasions which would justify the alienation of the corpus will not frequently arise, for "even in cases where owing to causes beyond the control of the manager such as famine, etc., the income falls off, the uniform and approved practice of the country has been to regulate the scale of the services with reference to diminished income until the income returns to its normal condition, and not to keep up the service on a scale rendering the incurring of debts necessary, nor is money ever borrowed even for the purpose of repairs. One reason why a manager never thinks of mortgaging or selling the corpus for such a purpose is that he will ordinarily not be able to find a mortgagee or purchaser among the members of the community since the principle that property dedicated to a god ought never to be diverted for other purposes, operates so strongly on the mind of the community that even innocent participation in such diversion is understood to be sinful, and to forbode evil to the participant . . . Nor should it be forgotten that as shown by the formula with which grants and donations to charities usually conclude, the people take it that to renovate is even more meritorious than to found. In such circumstances it is obvious that the manager's powers are quite limited. He can only do what is necessary for the services of the idol, and he need only preserve and duly manage what property may belong thereto. It is no part of his duty to effect improvements with reference to existing endowments when the funds in his hands do not admit of it; nor is he called upon to enter into transactions for the purpose of augmenting the funds of the institution. He cannot in any manner subject the institution in his charge to duties, obligations and burdens to which with reference to the nature of the foundation or otherwise the institution is not inherently or necessarily subject" [per Subramania Iyer (A. C. J.) in Nallayappa Pillian's case (31)].

Where there is an "imperious necessity" or an "unavoidable necessity" in the above sense compelling the shebait to alienate the property, such an alienation clearly is "for the benefit of the deity," but if there is no such necessity, the fact that the value of the estate will be increased if an alienation by sale, mortgage, exchange or otherwise is effected, will not justify such a transaction, although thereby it may be that the endowment can be benefited [per Subramania Aiyer (A. C. J.) in Nallayappa Pillian's case (31); per Lord Atkinson in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (30), Bhugvandas Naik v. Mahadeo Prasad (32) and Shankar Sahai v. Bechu Ram (33)]. As it is admitted that there was no necessity in the sense I have indicated which would justify the execution of the arpanama in suit, in my opinion, the contention that the Court ought to uphold the arpanama on the ground that it was or might be "for the benefit of the deities" is misconceived, and irrelevant, and I reject it.

I desire to add that, in my opinion, the rule of necessity extends only to an alienation of the temporalities of the idol. It does not, and in my opinion, it cannot be made to apply to an alienation of the spiritual rights and duties, the fulfilment of which is the primary function of a shebait. To apply such a rule to the spiritual duties of a shebait would be to contravene the fundamental principle of the Hindu law, and to violate the religious instincts of all orthodox Hindus. Indeed, in the nature of things there can be no necessity for a voluntary transfer of the spiritual duties of a shebait [Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyānidhi Tirtha Swami (34)], and the doctrine that a shebait at his own will and pleasure is at liberty to alter the line of *shebait*s on the ground that to do so will be "for the benefit of the deity" offends against the common law of India and is in conflict with the uniform rulings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. For these reasons, in my opinion, the indenture of arpanama of the 13th September 1918 must be declared void and inoperative and there will be a decree in favour of the Plaintiff.

v.

CUMING, J.

B. B. GHOSE, J.

1925,

14, December.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF THE DACCA-MUNICIPALITY,
Defendant, Respondent

Bengal Municipal Act (III, B. C., of 1884), secs. 102, 103—Re-valuation of holdings without a fresh determination of percentage rate, if ultra vires—Sec. 113—Privy and water tax, assessment of owner for occupier and vice versa—Remedy—Civil action, if maintainable where remedy given by Act not availed of.

Sec. 102 of the Bengal Municipal Act provides that once a percentage on the valuation of holdings at which the rate shall be levied has been fixed it shall remain in force until rescinded or until the Commissioners at a meeting determine some other percentage at which the rate will be levied from the next year. Reading the Act as a whole, it is not required that whenever a fresh valuation is made the Commissioners must hold a meeting to fix the percentage. It is open to them by not holding any meeting to levy at the old rate of percentage on the new valuation.

Though it may be business-like, after a valuation has been made, to consider how much money is required and therefore what the percentage rate should be, the omission to do so does not render the preparation of the valuation and rating list null and void.

Per CUMING, J.—Where the Municipality erroneously assesses the owner with the water and privy tax where they ought to assess the occupier and vice versa, the aggrieved person has his remedy by application to the Commissioners under sec. 113 of the Act, and he is not entitled to invoke the assistance of the Civil Courts until he has exhausted his remedies which the Act provides.

This was an appeal against the decree of R. F. Lodge, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Dacca, dated the 24th of November 1924, confirming the decree of Babu Rebati Ranjan Mukherjee, Additional Munsif of that place, dated the 26th of May 1924.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Sir Benode Charitra Mitter and Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha for the Appellants.

Mr. B. L. Mitter (Advocate-General) and Babu Prokas Chandra Pakrasi for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CUMING, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Bhuban Mohan Basak on his own behalf and on behalf of the rate-payers of Dacca against the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Dacca for a declaration that the last assessment made by the Dacca Municipality is null and void, illegal and ultra vires and that there is no municipal tax payable for the years 1923-24. He also prayed for a permanent injunction to restrain the Municipality from realising the taxes.

His case was briefly as follows :—

On the 28th June 1922 the Commissioners passed a resolution that the general revision of the assessment of holdings be undertaken without delay as it was overdue. In pursuance of this resolution an Assessor was appointed to value the holdings and also an Assistant

Assessor. Valuation was duly made and accepted and the new assessment was made. There was no change in the percentage charged on the valuation, which remained as it was before. This assessment was brought into force for the years 1923-24. The Plaintiff complained that the assessment was illegal for the following reasons :—

(1) That the resolution of 28th June was illegally passed, the objection, if I understand it rightly, being that an amendment and substantive motion were put at the same time.

(2) That no percentage was fixed before the assessment and that under the resolution the Commissioners cannot assess any tax without first fixing the percentage.

(3) That Government and Railway buildings have not been properly assessed and many holdings have not been assessed at all.

(4) The Assistant Assessor had no power to assess any buildings.

(5) The privy and water tax being payable by the occupiers, assessment of the owners to pay it is illegal.

(6) That assessment of privy and water tax of houses let when the occupier was living elsewhere was illegal. *

(7) That the assessment made being on a different basis is illegal.

(8) That as the money realised by the assessment exceeded the expenditure by Rs. 1,04,000, it was illegal.

A number of issues were framed.

The trial Court for reasons which it is unnecessary to specify found against the Plaintiff and dismissed his suit.

The Plaintiff appealed to the District Court where he was equally unsuccessful. He now appeals to this Court.

His grounds of appeal number some 20

BHUBAN MOHAN BASAK v. THE CHAIRMAN

but the following points only have been urged :—

(1) The meeting of the 22nd June 1922 resolved that there should be a new assessment and this means that there should be both valuation and the fixing of the actual percentage.

(2) The percentage at which taxes are to be levied must be fixed before the valuation or rating list is prepared and that whenever there is a fresh valuation there must be a fresh fixing of percentage.

(3) That it is illegal to assess the water and privy tax on owners.

(1) The whole of the argument here centred round what did the Commissioners mean when in their resolution they resolved that there should be a fresh assessment. Did they mean both valuation and fixing of the percentage or did they mean only a valuation of holdings?

Sir Benode Mitter for the Appellants contends they meant both valuation and percentage and that as they have not fixed the percentage the assessment is illegal. The learned Advocate-General contends that "assessment" was used loosely by the Commissioners to mean "valuation." It seems quite clear to me that what the Commissioners resolved to do at their meeting and what they meant in their resolution by the expression "assessment" is a question of fact. The lower Court of Appeal has found that by the expression "assessment" they meant a valuation of the holdings. In second appeal we cannot go behind this finding of fact unless it can be argued that it is based on no evidence. There is, however, no suggestion in any of the 20 grounds of appeal that this finding of fact was come to without any evidence and in these circumstances the Appellant cannot be allowed to argue that it was not. It cannot be said that the determination of the point depends on the construction of any document. The document on the construction of which it is contended that the point depends is merely the record of the proceedings of the Commissioners and what we are concerned with is what the Commissioners mean by their resolution. It is not suggested that the record of the proceedings is inaccurate or that it does not represent what the Commissioners resolved. This disposes of the Appellant's first contention.

(2) The decision on the second point requires the consideration of certain sections of the Municipal Act, viz., sec. 96, secs. 97, 97-A, sec. 102 and sec. 103. Sir Benode Mitter contends that the Commissioners have not complied with sec. 103 of the Act and hence their action is illegal.

Sec. 103 runs as follows :—

"As soon as possible after the percentage at which the rate is to be levied for the next year shall have been determined under the last preceding section the Commissioners shall cause to be prepared a valuation and rating list which shall contain the following particulars—

- (f) amount of rate payable for the year,
- (g) amount of quarterly instalment.

Sec. 102 which is referred to in this section provides that at a meeting to be held before the close of the year next preceding the year to which the rate will apply the Commissioners shall determine the percentage on the valuation of holdings at which the rate shall be levied and the percentage so fixed shall remain in force until the order of the Commissioners determining such percentage shall be rescinded and until the Commissioners at a meeting shall determine some other percentage. Sir Benode Mitter argues that if sec. 102 and sec. 103 are read together it is clear that the valuation and rating list can only be prepared shortly after a meeting has been held to fix the percentage and that as no such meeting was held after the valuation was made the assessment was illegal. I do not think that this is necessarily the interpretation to be placed on these sections. Sec. 102 provides that once a percentage has been fixed it shall remain in force until rescinded or until the Commissioners at a meeting determine some other percentage at which the rate will be levied from the next year. The reasonable interpretation to be put on this section then is that the rate fixed continues unchanged and is to be considered as the rate for the year until altered. It might be said that by implication the rate is to be considered as fixed each year at the same rate until changed and this although there is no formal meeting to do so. The Commissioners by holding no meeting to change it by implication fixed the rate at the old rate. There is no provision in the Act which provides that every time there is a fresh valuation there must be a formal meeting to fix the percentage even though the Commissioners intend the same percentage to continue.

It no doubt might be argued that the Commissioners should after they have made a valuation take into consideration the percentage rate and consider how much money they require and therefore what the rate should be. No doubt if the Municipality was properly managed, as a business concern should be, this would be done, but the fact that it has not been done does not, I think, render the assessment invalid. I do not think reading the Act as a whole that it is required that whenever a fresh valuation is made the Commissioners must hold a meeting to fix the percentage. I think it is open to them by not holding any meeting to levy the rate at the old rate of percentage on the new valuation.

(3) The last point to be dealt with is the privy and water tax.

It seems to be the case of the Appellant that the privy and water tax is payable by the occupier and it is illegal to assess owners to privy and water tax. Sec. 279 (3) provides that the water rate shall be paid by the occupier and sec. 281 provides that such occupier may recover $\frac{1}{4}$ share from the owner.

Sec. 282 provides that when the house is unoccupied the owner will pay $\frac{1}{4}$ rate. Sec. 312 provides that if the house is occupied by more than one tenant severally it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to recover the rate from the owner. With regard to privy tax the provisions are more or less similar. It is thus clear that in some circumstances the owner and in other circumstances the occupier is liable. There is therefore nothing illegal in assessing an owner to pay privy and water tax. It may be, however, that the owner is wrongly assessed in some cases while in other circumstances the assessment is legal, for it cannot be said that in no circumstances is the owner liable. The Municipality may owing to ignorance of the facts assess the owner where they ought to assess the occupier and vice versa. The aggrieved person has his remedy under sec. 113 which provides that a person who disputes his liability to be assessed may apply to the Commissioners under sec. 113. Clearly this was the remedy open to the Plaintiff of which he did not avail himself.

Until the aggrieved person has exhausted the remedies which the Act provides he cannot invoke the assistance of the Civil Courts. This point is also decided against the Appellants.

BHUBAN MOHAN BASAK v. THE CHAIRMAN OF THE MUNICIPAL COMRS. OF DACCA.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

B. B. GHOSH, J.—I agree. The first point argued in the appeal that the resolution of 28th June 1922 of the Commissioners was not given effect to is based on the ground that there has not been revision of "assessment" of holdings but only a valuation. This depends upon the meaning of the word "assessment" as used in the resolution. The Court of Appeal below has held that the word is not necessarily of wider import than the word "valuation." It is argued that this is a question of construction and may be raised in second appeal. The expression "construction" as applied to a document includes two things: first, the meaning of the words; and secondly, the effect which is to be given to them. It is well settled that the meaning of words is a question of fact in all cases. The effect of the words is a question of law. This distinction between the meaning and the legal effect of expressions used must be always borne in mind. This question cannot therefore be raised in second appeal. Moreover as the learned District Judge points out the words "assessor" and "assessment" have been rather loosely used in the Municipal Act itself.

The second and most important question is whether the valuation and rating list prepared under sec. 103 is null and void, as the procedure prescribed in sec. 102 of the Bengal Municipal Act has not been followed. Sec. 102 provides that the Commissioners at a meeting, before the close of the next preceding year to which the rate will apply, shall determine the percentage on the valuation of the holdings at which the rate shall be levied, and the percentage so fixed shall remain in force until that order is rescinded or some other percentage is determined. This seems to imply that when once the percentage is determined that will continue in force for each succeeding year so long as it is not altered in the manner provided in the section. It follows that if there is no intention to rescind or alter the percentage which has been once fixed it is not necessary that the Commissioners should at a meeting determine that the same percentage on the valuation should remain in force. Stress, however, is laid upon the opening words of sec. 103 by Sir Benode which runs as follows:—"As soon as possible after the percentage at which the rate is to be levied for the next year shall have been determined under the last preceding section" and it is contended that this provision shows that a valuation and rating list cannot be prepared unless the percentage is determined under sec. 102 after a new valuation and Sir Benode further argues that it is necessary that this should be done in order to ascertain the gross amount of taxes to be levied after a re-valuation. It appears to be quite reasonable and proper that the percentage should be determined after a new valuation. But the question is whether the omission to do so renders the preparation of the valuation and rating list null and void. It seems to me upon a consideration of the relevant sections in the Act that the passage relied on is only for the purpose of instruction and guidance of the Commissioners in order to enable them to give notice in due time of the rates to be levied for the next year, or in other words, as directory only. No time is fixed for doing the act, and no imperative language is used that there should be a fresh determination of the percentage on a re-valuation, and there is the provision that if there is no fresh determination the percentage previously fixed shall remain in force. The omission to fix a percentage after the re-valuation did not operate to the prejudice of any person, as the old rate continues. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the omission to hold a meeting does not carry with it the consequence of nullification of the preparation of the list under sec. 103.

With regard to the third point relating to the water and latrine tax, the Plaintiffs are not, in my opinion, entitled to maintain the suit. It has been found that these Plaintiffs are liable to pay the rates. They are not persons in the same interest, as provided in Or. 1, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, with persons who might have been illegally rated, if there are any such. If the rating on the Plaintiffs is excessive that is not a matter for the Civil Court to revise. The appeal should therefore be dismissed with costs.

MOTILAL LTOHHALAL

GANDHI, Appellant,

v.

HAJI MOOFA HAJI

MAHOMED,

Respondent.

Vendor and purchaser—Time made essence of contract—Waiver—Settlement of terms—Notice by vendor to purchaser to engross conveyance for signature and pay money within four days, if unreasonable, specially when purchaser gave assurance that he had money.

Though time was originally of the essence of a contract of sale of land, the parties having allowed the negotiations to continue far beyond the time appointed, the condition as to time being of the essence of contract was, by conduct of the parties, obliterated therefrom.

When subsequently the negotiations were concluded and all the terms were settled and only two things remained to be done to complete the transaction, viz., the engrossment of the conveyance for signature and the payment of the money, and the vendor then pressed for early completion of the purchase at the same time expressing doubts as to whether the purchaser had money and received an assurance that he had :

Held—That in the circumstances the vendor did not act unreasonably in thereupon demanding that the contract should be completed within four days.

That the purchaser was estopped from urging that the assurance he gave that he had money was unfounded.

That irrespective of the estoppel created by the assurance, the vendor was in the circumstances justified, in a time of financial strain, in demanding the completion of the little that remained to be done within four days.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 20th December 1921, of the High Court at Bombay, which reversed a decree of that Court, dated the 6th September 1921, in its Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted by the Respondent for specific performance of a contract for the sale of immoveable property in Bombay.

The contract was made on the 27th February 1919 and was to be completed within two months.

That stipulation was, however, waived. Requisitions were made and answered and on the 29th July, the Appellant having approved the draft conveyance asked for an early appointment for completion.

MOTILAL ITCHHAHAL (GANDHI) v. HAJI MOOSA HAJI MAHOMED.

On the 23rd August the Appellant complained of the delay and on the 27th August they gave notice that unless the sale were completed by the 7th September he would treat the contract as broken.

On the 6th September the Respondent tendered the purchase money, and on the tender being refused, instituted this suit.

The trial Judge was of opinion that the Appellant was entitled to limit a reasonable time within which the contract should be performed and that the notice given was reasonable. The appeal Court (Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J.) reversed that decision and decreed specific performance.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

The Respondent was not represented.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD SHAW.—The Board is at a considerable disadvantage in this case on account of the absence of the Respondent. The case, however, has been explained with complete candour and fullness by Sir George Lowndes, on behalf of the Appellant.

In the contract for the sale of this immoveable property, made in the month of February 1919, there was a clause making the settlement and the payment of the price subject to the condition that time was of the essence of the contract. The negotiations, however, proceeded, and the parties entered into communication with regard to the furnishing of a title, requisitions were made and answered, and arrangements with the municipality, usual in Bombay, had to be come to so that the battaki announcements should be made in the District.

It is quite clear to their Lordships that the time allowed for completion was far exceeded and the condition as to time being of the essence of this contract was, by the conduct of the parties, obliterated therefrom.

The circumstances which are argued to be alone relevant to the issue, are said to begin late in the month of August 1919. But their Lordships desire it to be understood that they make no pronouncement with regard to whether a notice as to completion would be reasonable or abrupt in the case of a contract made at that period. The contract had been made months before. What had happened was that before the period in August 1919, alluded to, a clean title had been furnished, a draft conveyance had been prepared, it had been approved by the vendor and had been sent to the agents for the purchaser; and that nothing de facto remained to be done of this transaction—every kind of complication being removed—except the mere clerical item of engrossing the draft, and the financial result, namely, the payment of the price. Those two matters alone remained: the price to be paid and the draft conveyance engrossed for signature.

In those circumstances, on the 23rd August 1919, the vendor's agents wrote saying that the matter must be completed without delay. They intimated by their letter of that date that nearly six months had elapsed since the agreement was executed, and the sale must accordingly now be completed. The letter may be fully quoted. It is as follows, viz. :—

“Bombay, 23rd August, 1919.

“Messrs. Rustamji and Ginwala.

“Re Sale of Property at Ardeshir Dady Street.

“DEAR SIRS,

“We extremely regret to note that we have not yet received the engrossment of the Conveyance for our comparison. Requisitions on title were answered long ago. Your client had inspection of Trust Deed, and they have been satisfied on all the points. Our client has waited sufficiently long for completion.

"Our client says that your clients have no money and that they have purchased the property from our client only with a view to profiteering. They are out for some purchaser but they have not been able to secure any. It is nearly six months that the agreement was executed and the sale must now be completed without any delay. You should not lose sight of the fact that the agreement provides that the time for completion is the essence of the contract.

"We are therefore instructed to request you to send us the engrossment for comparison. The draft conveyance has already been sent to you duly approved. We are expecting the engrossment within four days from the receipt hereof by you.

"Yours truly,

"(Sd.) MOTICHAND AND DEVIDAS."

This letter of the 23rd August was not unnatural in the circumstances which their Lordships have stated, namely, that everything except the clerical part of engrossing the draft and the financial part of payment had been already finished.

In answer to the letter of the 23rd August this letter, dated 25th August 1919, was, however, received by the Defendant's agents from the agents for the Plaintiff, the purchaser. They say:—

"Bombay, 25th August, 1919.

"Messrs. Motichand and Devidas.

"Re Sale of Property at Dady Street.

"DEAR SIRS,

"With reference to your letter dated the 23rd instant we beg to state that the delay was on your client's part in not replying to the requisitions in time and not furnishing the Municipal bill for a very long time.

"We received the Battaki only recently and have since then taken the engrossment in hand which we shall let you have as soon as it is ready. Your client's suggestion that our client has no money or that he is trying to secure a purchaser is an imaginary one.

Our client's moneys are lying idle with him since two months past and he is more eager to complete this matter than your client.

"Yours truly,

"(Sd.) RUSTAMJI AND GINWALA."

This letter accordingly cleared away any doubt or hesitation on the part of the vendor and his advisers as to the reasonableness of making an immediate demand for the completion of the sale and the payment of the price. They thereupon wrote the letter of the 27th August giving the five days' notice, which was received on the 28th August, so that four days remained during which these two simple things had to be done, namely, engross the deed and pay the money.

The question before their Lordships is not any serious or complicated question as to what would be a demand of equity in the completion of a transaction of sale recently made, with reference to which many practical things had to be done by way of clearing the title, and reasonable time for needful business arrangements had to be taken into account. In the circumstances of this case it is simply the ordinary commonplace question: Was it reasonable, with the assurance given by a purchaser that he had the money in the bank and the title in his land, to say, "Well, the contract having been made months ago, do this little matter within four days or the contract is off"?

The Board, having considered the matter, is of opinion that there was no abruptness whatsoever in the conduct of the Defendant's agents or in their letter of the 27th August 1919, and, there being no abruptness in it, the unreasonableness falls to the ground, because the unreasonableness of the demand consists, not in its method, but would have consisted in this, that it would have put the purchaser, whose finances might have been allowed to drop owing to the dragging on of the negotiations, into a position of much embarrassment on such a short notice being given.

Their Lordships are further of opinion that it is not open to this purchaser to set up such a case because the purchaser had given, prior to that notice, the very assurance that no abruptness could be felt by the two statements that he had made, namely, that his money was ready and his title was engrossed. In these circumstances the case for the purchaser falls to the ground. It is explained to the Board that the letter of the 25th August had misstated the facts and that it was not in accordance with truth that (inter alia) he was ready with the purchase money. It is clear that he is estopped from maintaining that the facts are otherwise than his letter of the 25th August 1919 represented them to be.

But their Lordships are further of opinion that, whether he was estopped or not, the circumstances of a long-drawn-out transaction in which all remaining to be done was the engrossment of the deed of sale and the payment of the price, demonstrate that as between purchaser and vendor of immoveable property in a time of financial strain it was not a reasonable position for a purchaser to occupy to be unable to complete within four days.

For these reasons their Lordships have to take the course which will presently be announced, but before doing so they have to note that prior to these proceedings the vendor, who was in possession of a certain deposit of Rs. 500, had made offer to refund that if the transaction went off. Through his counsel, an intimation has been made to the Board that he does not resile from that position. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to put this into the decree, but it will be recorded in their judgment and the vendor will act accordingly.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, and that the decree of the trial Judge should be restored, with costs in both Courts. The Respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 2268 AND 2269 OF 1923.

CUMING, J.	}	RADHABINODH MONDAI,
B. B. GHOSE, J.		Defendant No. 12,
1925,		Appellant,
3, December.		v.
		NABA KISHORE MONDAL and ors., Respondents

Suit for rent—Joint co-sharer, if alone may sue for his share of the rent.

The Plaintiff and his brother were joint owners of one-third of an estate. He sued the Defendant for his one-sixth share of the rent:

Held—That the Plaintiff and his brother being joint proprietors with regard to the one-third share of the rent payable to them the Plaintiff was not entitled to enforce his claim to the one-sixth share of the rent as against the tenants without their consent.

The Plaintiff might sue for the enforcement of the entire contract between him and his brother by making his brother a party Defendant but he was not entitled to enforce a part of the contract between himself and his brother on the one hand and the tenants on the other.

These were appeals against the decrees of Babu Durga Prosad Ghose, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, 24-Perganahs, dated the 3rd day of July 1923, modifying the decrees of Mr. Khirode Ranjan Dhar, Munsif, 3rd Court, Alipore, dated the 30th June 1921.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta and Babu Radhika Ranjan Guha for the Appellant.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Mukherjee, Babus Indu Bhusan Mukerjee and Biraj Mohan Mazumdar for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

(HOSE, J.—These two appeals arise out of two different suits for rent brought by the Plaintiff against a number of Defendants. Defendant No. 12 is the Appellant before us; and the only point that requires consideration is whether the Plaintiff's suits are maintainable as framed. The Plaintiff claims 1/6th share of the rent alleging that that is due to him on account of the holdings.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the co-sharers who own 2/3rd share in the estate were collecting their share of the rent separately for a considerable time, and the Plaintiff and his brother were collecting their 1/3rd share jointly. But the Plaintiff and his brother started collecting their shares separately from the beginning of 1321 B. S. The claim is for the rent of the years 1319 to 1322 B. S. Both the Courts below decreed the Plaintiff's suit for the rent of his 6th share.

The principal ground urged on behalf of the Appellant is that the Plaintiff is not entitled to maintain his suit for his 1/6th share of the rent. It is urged that the fact that the Plaintiff and his brother Gopi Kishor were collecting their 1/3rd share jointly might raise an inference that the Defendants had agreed to pay the rent for the 1/3rd share belonging to the two brothers jointly and the rent for the other 2/3rd share to the other co-sharer, but there is nothing to show that the Defendants ever consented to pay the Plaintiff the rent for his 1/6th share separately. The question, therefore, is whether the Plaintiff and his brother being joint proprietors with regard to the 1/3rd share of the rent payable to them the Plaintiff is entitled to enforce his claim to the 1/6th share of the rent as against the Defendants without their consent. Obviously he is not so entitled. The Plaintiff alone may sue for the enforcement of the entire contract between him and his brother by making his brother a party Defendant. But he is not entitled to enforce a part of the contract between himself and his brother on the one hand and the tenants on the other.

It is argued on behalf of the Respondents that the Defendants are not in any way prejudiced by this procedure and it is supported by the case of Raj Narayan Mitra v. Ekadasi Bag (1) which has been cited by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is difficult to say that the Defendants would not be prejudiced by such a claim of the Plaintiff, because the Defendants would be liable to be harassed by two suits where one could only have been brought. Moreover if the Defendants had succeeded in establishing in the present suit their other plea that they were not liable to pay any rent on account of the jama being non-existent and obtained a decree in their favour the brother of the Plaintiff would not be bound by such a decree. The case of Raj Narayan Mitra v. Ekadasi Bag (1) was a different one in which the parties prayed for apportionment of rent by a decree of the Court in the presence of all the parties.

RADHABINODE MONDAL v. NABA KISHORE MONDAL.

The result therefore is that it must be held that the suit as framed by the Plaintiff in which he does not show under what circumstances he is entitled to enforce a portion of the claim as maintainable must be dismissed.

A belated prayer was made that the Plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint. But we are not inclined to grant that application in second appeal having regard to the fact that this objection had been taken by the Defendants in the trial Court as well as in the Court of Appeal below and no application for amendment of the plaint was made at all except at the close of the arguments here.

Another point was urged on behalf of the Appellant that by a decree of this Court passed since the decision of the appeal in this case in the lower Appellate Court it has been declared that Defendant No. 12 is not liable to pay any rent for the jama. We are unable to decide the question in the present appeal as the proper materials have not been placed before us with regard to the identity of the lands concerned in the declaratory decree.

On these grounds the appeals must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1271 of 1923.

SUBHAWARDY, J.

MUKERJI, J.

1925,

Heard, 24 and 25, November.

Judgment,

17, December.

GANGAPROD CHAUDHURY, Defendant,
Appellant,

v.

KULADANANDA ROY,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11—Res judicata, as amongst co-Defendants, conditions necessary therefor—Construction of deed by Court, if necessarily res judicata as between co-Defendants—Deed of endowment by a Hindu—Dedication of property to deity and appointment of trustees to manage—Properties, if vested in trustees for a specific purpose—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 10—Trustee, if may prescribe against deity.

Per MUKERJI, J.—In order that a decision of a conflict between co-Defendants should operate as res judicata, it is enough that its adjudication was necessary to determine the claim put forward by the Plaintiff whether in the Plaintiff's favour or against him.

Where a Plaintiff asked for the construction of a deed in order to determine whether the Plaintiff or her heirs had any right to a certain property thereunder, and certain Defendants filed a joint written statement denying her title, and the Court in determining the issue held that the property in question had by the deed been absolutely given to one of the latter:

Held, per CUMING.—That the decision was not res judicata as between the co-Defendants.

Per MUKERJI, J.—The decision was not res judicata as between the co-Defendants in the absence of anything to show that a conflict was raised as between them and such a conflict could not be presumed by reference to the doctrine of constructive res judicata contained in Expt. IV to sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the absence of a conflict as between the co-Defendants, the other Defendants could not appeal against the adverse finding when no relief was given to Plaintiff.

Nor was it a case in which all the parties to the litigation invited the Court to construe the deed in order to ascertain or adjust their respective rights.

GANGAPROSAD CHAUDHURY v. KULADANANDA ROY.

The rulings in HOOK v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL (29), RAM KRIPAL SUKUL v. RUP KUARI (30), T. B. RAMA CHANDRA v. A. N. S. RAMA CHANDRA (31) and BADAR BEE v. HABIB MERICAN NOORDIN (33) do not in any way qualify the provisions of sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code in their application to cases coming within the scope of the section or affect the question of res judicata when a previous decision in a suit is alleged to operate as a bar in a subsequent one as between persons who were co-Defendants in the previous suit.

GOKUL MANDAR v. PUDMANAND SINGH (34) referred to.

Per CURIAM.—Where the effect of a deed of endowment executed by a Hindu was to vest the properties in the deity and not in the trustees for a specific purpose, though trustees were appointed for the management of the properties, sec. 10 of the Limitation Act had no application, in view of the pronouncement of the law made in VIDYAVARUTHI TIRTHA v. BALUSAMI AYYAR (35), and a trustee in such a case could prescribe against the deity either by disclaimer or by open and clear assertion of hostile title.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of April 1923 against the decree of P. E. Cammiade, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 27th March 1923, reversing the decree of Babu Nagendra Nath Chatterji, the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 13th of December 1920.

The facts of the case fully appear from the judgment of Mukerji, J.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose (with him Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter) for the Appellant submitted that the decision in Katyayani's suit on the construction of the deed holding that the house in suit was absolutely given to Makhan is res judicata as between the Plaintiffs and the Defendant who is claiming through Makhan. Gopal Lal Sett v. Purna Chandra Basak (42), Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (33) and Rama Chandra v. Rama Chandra (31).

The construction placed on the deed not only in Katyayani's suit but in other later suits is the true construction.

Makhan was in adverse possession for over 12 years. Sec. 10 of the Limitation Act did not apply, as the property did not vest in the trustees as such for a specific purpose. There is no specific direction in the deed as to this property which vested in the deity. Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami (35).

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose (with him Mr. Jyotish Ch. Pal) for the Respondent.—There was no issue as between the co-Defendants in Katyayani's suit. The latter filed a joint written statement which simply denied that Katyayani had any title. Assuming that there was a conflict between the Defendants inter se, the Plaintiff's suit was dismissed, and therefore the decision was not necessary to give any relief to the Plaintiff. Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury (1), Kevan v. Crawford (2), Sheikh Hassan v. Mahomed Ali (43) and Gopal Jew Thakur v. Radha Binode (21). The test is whether the Defendants other than Makhan could appeal. If Plaintiff's suit was wholly dismissed, there was nothing to appeal against. Brojo v. Kedar (20). The condition that the Plaintiff should get some relief for which the dispute amongst co-Defendants must be adjudicated is a corollary to the general requirement of the rule of res judicata, that the matter in dispute must be substantially and not incidentally in issue. If the Plaintiff gets no relief whatsoever, then it is immaterial whether Defendant A or Defendant B is held to be the person entitled. The issue as between the Defendants becomes incidental by the result of the suit. Katyayani's suit was not a suit in which all the parties were, as in a suit for partition, substantially Plaintiffs as well as Defendants; the Plaintiff and the Defendants did not invite the Court to construe the deed for the determination of their rights inter se.

On the construction of the deed, Makhan and his heir were merely given the right to hold the property as trustee and not absolutely.

As to limitation, sec. 10 of the Limitation Act applied, because there was here an express declaration of a trust by a trust deed. The Plaintiffs are not the shebais of the deity but trustees appointed by the deed. They did not hold the properties by reason of the general fiduciary position attaching to their office, as executors or shebais do, but under the express terms of the trust deed. Therefore Vidyavaruthi's case (35) does not apply. Moreover, literally interpreted, this decision will repeal sec. 10 of the Limitation Act altogether for India so far as Hindu and Mahomedan religious and charitable trusts are concerned. Later decisions of the Privy Council show that they are not prepared to fully accept all that is laid down in Vidyavaruthi's case (35). See Srinivasa v. Evalappa (36) and Subbaya Pandaram v. Maharaj Mustapa (37). Further, Vidyavaruthi's case (35) and Naina Pillai v. Ramathan (38) speak of title by estoppel and not by adverse possession, a title which does not enure beyond the life-time of the trustee concerned, in this case beyond Makhan's life-time. Moreover Makhan having taken possession as trustee, assertion of adverse title did not change the nature of his possession. He could not prescribe against himself. Limitation must remain suspended so long as the trustee continues in office. See Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkatavarada Iyyengar (39) and 19 Hals. 165, para. 341.

A party against whom a suit has been dismissed may appeal against an adverse finding. Krishna v. Mahesh (44). Upon the question of limitation, referred to Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das (40) and submitted that the law as laid down in Vidyavaruthi v. Balusami (35) applied to the case. The deed of endowment did not make any difference in its application.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the Plaintiff asked for a declaration that a certain house situated in the town of Burdwan is a part of an estate of which he alleges he is now one of the trustees, and also for recovery of possession thereof.

The trust was created by one Annoda Prosad Ghose by a deed which was called a Niyam-Nirbandhapatra in 1305. He died in the year 1308. Shortly after his death his daughter Katyayani instituted a suit being No. 438 of 1901 wherein she prayed for a declaration that the deed executed by her father was void and inoperative and in the alternative she prayed for construction of the deed. In this suit she impleaded as Defendant her step-mother Haribhabini, and the trustees named in the deed and also other persons in whose favour certain bequests had been made by the deed. The deed, it may be observed here, purported to dedicate certain properties to the family deity Sri Sri Iswar Sridhar Jieu and creates an endowment for the sheba of the said deity and for meeting the expenses for certain religious observances and the feeding of the guests connected with the worship of the said deity. Certain bequests were also made in favour of others. He appointed himself as trustee to act during his life; and, to act after his death as trustees nine other persons were named. No provision was made in the deed as regards Haribhabini and she took no active part in the suit. Three of the trustees named in the deed, namely, Sarada Prosad Chawdhury, Makhan Lal Chawdhury and Kuladananda Roy as well as others with whom we are not concerned at this stage contested the suit. During the trial of the suit Katyayani, the Plaintiff, withdrew her case as to the validity of the deed. She pressed her case so far as the construction of the deed was concerned and the deed was construed. One of the clauses of the deed which dealt with the house which forms the subject-matter of the present suit was construed and it was held that Annoda Prosad Ghose had made an absolute gift of it with the execution of its western room to Makhan Lal Chawdhury, one of the trustees named in the deed. Similarly, all the other clauses of the deed were also construed. Subsequently Kuladananda Roy and Sarada Prosad Chawdhury, two of the aforesaid trustees, took out letters of administration in respect of the properties covered by the deed and administered the properties. The present suit has been instituted by Kuloda Prosad Ray as shebait of Sri Sri Sridhar Jieu and as a trustee in respect of the trust properties left as aforesaid by Annoda Prosad

GANGAPROSAD CHAUDHURY v. KULADANAN DA ROY.

Ghose for ejecting the Defendant-Appellant, who is the son of Makhan Lal Chaudhury, on a declaration that the house in question is the debuttar property of the said deity. The suit has had a long and chequered career. The decision, which is now under appeal, has been in Plaintiff's favour.

The questions which arise for our consideration, upon the arguments addressed to us, are four in number: 1st, whether the decision in suit No. 438 of 1901 operates as res judicata; 2nd, what is the true construction of paragraph 21 of the deed; 3rd, whether the suit is barred by limitation; 4th, whether the Defendant has acquired a title by adverse possession.

The contention of the Appellant on the question of res judicata is two-fold: It is urged in the first place that the previous decision operates as res judicata as all the requirements for the application of that doctrine as between co-Defendants are present in the case, and nextly, it is said that even if strictly speaking that doctrine cannot be applied, then the Court having construed the deed in the presence of all the parties interested, its conclusions are binding on them all on general principles. To this contention a preliminary objection is put forward on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondent. The objection is to the effect that this contention is not entertainable at this stage.

It would be convenient, first of all, to dispose of the preliminary objection. The suit was dismissed in the first instance by the trial Court on the ground of res judicata. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decision and remanded the suit for determination of the other issues involved. Those issues were then decided by the trial Court and the records together with the decision on those issues were sent back to the District Judge and then the appeal was finally decided by him. It is said that the Appellant should have appealed against the order of remand which was founded upon a decision adverse to him on the question of res judicata, and that, not having done so, he is now precluded from challenging that decision in this appeal by reason of the provisions of sec. 105, sub-sec. (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure. This preliminary objection must, however, be overruled as the order of remand on the face of it purports to have been one under Or. 41, r. 25 and it was expressly declared by the learned Judge to have been made by him under that rule upon a petition filed by the Appellant with the object of finding out its true nature and effect.

In order to deal with the contention of res judicata upon the principle as embodied in sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and when it is to be applied to parties who were in the position of Defendants in the earlier suit, tests have from time to time been laid down by learned Judges, but these tests owe their origin to a well-known rule which was expressed by Wigram V. C. in Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury (1) in these words: "If a Plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-Defendants the Court will try and decide that case, and the co-Defendants will be bound. But if the relief given to the Plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-Defendants, the co-Defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the Plaintiff obtains." The same rule was suggested by Jessel, M. R., in Kewan v. Crawford (2), when he said: "What right has a Court of justice to in-investigate a claim by title paramount by one co-Defendant against another? I am not aware of any. The answer is, if you wish to assert these claims you must assert them in a proper action . . . Where a Plaintiff obtains relief against one or more Defendants, and there are subordinate questions either necessary to be gone into to work out that relief completely for the benefit of the Plaintiff or necessary to adjust the rights of the Defendants consequent on the relief so obtained by the Plaintiff, the Court may, by enquiries in chambers, work out the equities between the co-Defendants. But there is no case produced in which any such enquiries were directed where the Plaintiff's case wholly failed." It is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the observations, which I have quoted above, go to indicate that it is only when some relief is granted to the Plaintiff that the adjudication of a conflict as between co-Defendants will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit as between them. It will be seen, however, that the cases of Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury (1) and Kevan v. Crawford (2) were both instances where, when after the determination of questions which were necessary to be determined in order to give relief to the Plaintiff and when the Plaintiff was out of the way, as it were, it was sought to have certain matters gone into and adjudicated upon as between the Defendants, it being alleged that the adjudication might be binding between the latter for the future as having finally adjusted their rights. This peculiar feature of the cases, therefore, necessitated those observations. They were not cases in which any question arose as to whether any previous decision operated as res judicata in respect to the cases themselves. To accept the Respondents' contention in this respect would be to hold that a decision will be res judicata only if the suit ends in a particular way. Such a position is hardly tenable. On the other hand there are many reported decisions in which notwithstanding the dismissal of the Plaintiff's suit, the decision has been held to operate as res judicata as between co-Defendants: e.g., Venkayya v. Narasamma (3), Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. The Zamorin of Calicut (4) and Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi (5). The true rule was enunciated by West, J., in his judgment in the case of Ram Chandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (6) in these words: "There must be a conflict of interests amongst the Defendants, and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the Defendants inter se. Without necessity the judgment will not be res judicata amongst the Defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have collectively been defeated in resisting a claim to a share made against them as a group." This statement of the rule has been accepted as settled law in the generality of cases. Maulvie v. Kelu (7), Ahmad Ali v. Najabar Khan (8), Chhajjin v. Umrao Singh (9), Balambhat v. Narayan Shah (10), Muhamad Kuni Rowthan v. Visvanathayier (11), Magniram v. Mehdi Husain Khan (12). The rule has been stated in some other decisions as requiring the fulfilment of three essential conditions: (1) that there should be a conflict of interest between co-Defendants, (2) that it should be necessary to decide on that conflict in order to give to the Plaintiff the relief appropriate to his suit, and (3) that the judgment should contain a decision on the question as between co-Defendants. Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrakali Singh (13) and Jadab Chandra v. Kailas Chandra (14). Courts are reluctant to apply the doctrine as between co-Defendants unless clear indications appear of the presence of all the requisite conditions, and in the generality of cases where it has been applied, it has been applied with great caution [observations of the learned Judges in the case of Jadab Chandra v. Kailas Chandra (14)]. So chary are the Courts of applying this doctrine in the case of co-Defendants that in some cases the Courts have enunciated the rule as limited to cases of active contest, e.g., Ramanaya Ayyangar v. Narayana Ayyangar (15), Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. Zamorin of Calicut (4), Ramasamy Reddi v. Abhoy Chandra (16), Mahoyaddin Ali Saheb v. Bacha Sahib (17), Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi (5), Nanda Lal Pal v. Naresh Chandra Dev (18) and Mohendra Nath v. Shamsunnessa Khatun (19).

Bearing these principles in mind, when we come to examine the facts of the present case we find that Makhan and Kuloda were arrayed as Defendants in the suit of 1901. The validity of the deed was challenged by Katyayani, and she also prayed for a construction of the deed on the ground that "if the deed was held to be operative there was a chance of her rights being injured and therefore it was necessary to determine what rights she has in her father's estate under the deed, and if the said deed be not construed, her rights and that of her heirs will not be settled." Makhan, Kuloda and Sarada jointly filed a written statement in that suit presumably for the purpose of defeating the Plaintiff's claim. The whole of the written statement deals with the validity of the deed and challenges Katyayani's right to have it construed. It does not appear that they set up any claim, far less any conflicting claim, to the house which is now in suit. The deed was construed as it had to be for the purpose of finding out what the rights of Katyayani and her heirs were. Under cl. 21, she was found to have no rights and it was held on a construction of the said clause that the house had been made an absolute gift of to Makhan and his heirs. In the decree that was drawn up it was only declared that the deed was construed. To apply the doctrine of res judicata to the case a contest will have to be presumed from the mere fact that Kuloda might and ought to have contested the title of Makhan, that is to say, the doctrine of constructive res judicata founded upon Exp. IV to sec. 11 of the Code will have to be invoked. The tendency of Courts is to apply this doctrine within very narrow limits even as between Plaintiffs and Defendants, and there is scarcely any room for its application as between co-Defendants. At any rate, there is no authority that the doctrine may be applied as between them in a case where they made a joint defence to the Plaintiff's suit. The Plaintiff got some relief, which was said to be a "nominal" one in the judgment, but none under cl. 21 of the deed. The view of the Court as to the meaning of the clause was embodied in the judgment—but the course of the proceedings do not suggest that any conflict inter se as between Kuloda and Makhan was decided, such as might give Kuloda a right of appeal. One Defendant may under certain circumstances prefer an appeal against another, although the Plaintiff's suit has been wholly dismissed in respect of adverse findings in the judgment: but such an appeal is maintainable only when the adjudication has been upon a real conflict as between the co-Defendants. In the present case no such conflict is discernible. There was a joint defence and the construction of the deed seems to have been made in order to find out the rights of the Plaintiff and her heirs. It is difficult to see how Kuloda could have appealed against the decree as against Makhan; and, if he could not then on the principle laid down in the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Brojo Behary Mitler v. Kedar Nath Majumdar (20), the previous decision cannot be held to operate as res judicata. This principle has been followed in a recent decision of this Court in the case of Sri Sri Gopal Jew Thakur v. Radha Binode Mondal (21).

It is also contended that on the principles which are applicable to suits for partition or for construction of a Will, the decision must be held to be binding as against all the parties to the suit. Suits for partition have always been regarded as standing on a different footing. A decree for partition made in a suit instituted by a member of a joint Hindu family is res judicata as between all co-sharers who are parties to the suit. [Nalini Kanta v. Sarnamoyee (22)]. A decree for partition is a joint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property of which partition is sought, and when properly drawn up, it is in favour of each share-holder or set of share-holders having a distinct share; Pursotam Rao Tantia v. Radha Bai (23), Khurshed Husam v. Nabbee Fatima (24), Dust Mohamed Khan v. Sayad Begum (25), Assan v. Pathumma (26) and Ashidbai v. Abdulla Haji (27). In the last mentioned case, it will be observed, it was laid down that where a Plaintiff brings a suit for partition and fails, it is not open to any of the Defendants to claim that the partition suit should go on in order that the share of one or more of the Defendants may be determined. The difference is probably attributable to the fact that a conflict between the Plaintiff and each Defendant or set of Defendants involves necessarily, in most cases, a conflict between the Defendants or sets of Defendants inter se. Where in a prior suit for partition certain parties were arrayed as co-Defendants and the decision in that suit did not decide any question of partition amongst them inter se that decision does not operate as res judicata. Mahomed Ahmad v. Zahur Ahmed (28).

their being judgments in rem. Cases of construction of deeds which all the parties to a litigation submit before the Court in order to ascertain or adjust their respective rights fall within the principle that where the parties to a litigation submit a question for the decision of the Court and the Court gives a decision on being so invited that decision binds all the parties for the future.

Lastly, it is contended that even if the rule of res judicata as embodied in sec. 11 of the Code does not apply the decision is conclusive on the general principles which relate to the conclusive character of judgments inter partes. Reliance has been placed as regards this branch of the contention upon certain cases which have now to be considered. The case of Hook v. Administrator-General (29) is one of these cases. In this case it was pointed out by the Judicial Committee that the question of res judicata is not completely governed by sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the said section prevents the re-trial in a subsequent suit of an issue which was directly and substantially in issue in a previous suit and does not deal with cases where the same issues arise in the same suit but at a later stage of it. Their Lordships quoted with approval the pronouncement of the Board made in the case of Ram Kripal Sukul v. Rup Kuari (30) as to the applicability of the general principles which prevent a case being twice litigated. The next case relied upon is that of T. B. Ram Chandra v. A. N. S. Ram Chandra (31). In that case it was held that a decision of a competent Court even in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, will operate as res judicata and the same question cannot be re-opened in subsequent litigation as between the parties, it having been erroneously supposed in the Courts in India on a misapprehension as to the effect of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rangoon Botatoung Company, Ltd. v. The Collector of Rangoon (32), that the judgment, since it arose out of proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, could not operate as res judicata. The case of Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (33) cited in the judgment of the last mentioned case is also referred to. From the judgment of their Lordships in that case it is clear that there was a previous decision inter partes in which it had been held that the Defendants were estopped from questioning a decree which made a certain declaration but they did not appeal from that decision as the interest then at stake was of trifling value and afterwards attempted to question its correctness when the interest at stake was much larger. Their Lordships observed: "It is not competent for the Court in the case of the same question arising between the same parties to review a previous decision not open to appeal. If the decision was wrong, it ought to have been appealed from in due time. Nor can the residuary legatees be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. If such a plea were not admissible there would be no finality in litigation. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute."

GANGAPROSAD CHAUDHURY v. KULADANAN DA ROY.

These cases do not in any way qualify the provisions of sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure so far as regards cases which come within the scope of that section, or affect the question of res judicata, when a previous decision of a suit is alleged to operate as a bar in a subsequent one as between persons who were co-Defendants in the previous suit. As observed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanand Singh (34) the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction.

For the foregoing reasons I agree with the learned District Judge in holding that the decision in the suit of 1901 does not operate as a bar on the question of construction of cl. 21 of the deed upon which the title of the Appellant rests.

I now proceed to consider the second question, namely, the construction of the clause. I have very carefully read the deed several times, especially as I have been unable to agree with the view taken of it by several Bengali Judicial Officers whose interpretation of the deed, which is in Bengali, is naturally entitled to every respect. The governing intention of the author of the deed is to create an endowment in favour of the deity Sri Sri Iswar Sridhar Jieu and the feeding of the guests connected therewith, the house is item No. 1 of Schedule Uma which along with the properties in the other schedules, namely, ka to gha are dedicated in cl. 1 for the worship of the said deity and the feeding of the guests connected therewith. Cl. 21 opens with a clear and unambiguous statement making the said house together with the surrounding lands and trees, etc., as debotter property of the deity. To construe the remainder of the clause it will have to be seen whether there is anything therein which is necessarily repugnant to the intention so unequivocally expressed in the opening words. The wording of the whole deed is somewhat clumsy but the meaning of the clause does not appear to be ambiguous. The clause has been put into English by the learned Subordinate Judge and I adopt his translation with some slight variation. It would run thus:—"My Burdwan lodging house (consisting of) a dalan (pucca building) with lands on all sides and trees, etc., is given to debotter. But so long as Sreeman Makhan Lal remains in Burdwan, after educating his son (and) on making him a trustee in his place will enjoy and remain in possession (of the same) oirup uttaradhikarirupey and he will remain on paying taxes and making necessary repairs. But the western room in which I put up remains mine. When the trees dry up Makhan Lal will be entitled to use them as fuel. There is a talk of purchasing the lands to the west and north of the dalan (pucca building) on payment of their price. In future Siman Saroda, Rajendra or Jogesh will be entitled to build houses. But if any (of them) quarrels with each other, the trustees will disappoint them all. (As to) the house and garden given to Mukshoda by me, no one will have any concern therewith. He will enjoy and remain in possession thereof, putrapoutradhikramey (from generation to generation)." The learned Subordinate Judge has translated the words "oirup uttaradhikarirupey" as "in the same way as an heir" and in this, in my opinion, he was in error. In my opinion the words mean "as successor in the same way," that is to say, as trustee appointed in the place of Makhan Lal and possessing the same rights and privileges as Makhan Lal. It is noteworthy also that these properties find no place in any of the eight schedules at the end of the deed, namely, schedules 1 to 8 wherein bequests in favour of certain persons are specified. Other grounds have been given by learned District Judge in support of the view he has taken and I agree generally with his reasoning. In my opinion, beyond the right to enjoy the properties in the manner indicated and subject to the conditions prescribed, no other right, far less any absolute interest, was created in favour of Makhan.

(34) A. C. J. 29 Cal. 707: s. c. 6 C. W. N. 625 (P. C.) (1902).

The question of limitation has next to be considered. On this question the point to be considered is whether sec. 10 of the Limitation Act applies to the case. For this section to apply it will have to be held that the property became vested in Makhan in trust for a specific purpose, that is to say, two conditions must combine; there must be a trustee with an express trust and an estate or interest vested in the trustee; in other words, the trust must have been created for some specific purpose and the property must have become vested in the trustee with the object of carrying that purpose into effect. In this connection the true effect of the deed has to be construed.

The deed expressly dedicates the properties, including the house which is mentioned in Schedule Uma for the worship of Sri Sri Iswar Jieu and the feeding of the guests connected therewith. In the opening lines of para. 21, the house is expressly dedicated to the said deity. In paragraph 2 the trustees are appointed for the purpose of "protecting, managing and so forth" the properties so dedicated. In para. 1 Annoda Prosad Ghose declares thus:—"To all those properties I shall have in future no right other than that of mere superintendence. All the aforesaid properties shall come under the management of the trustees named below from the moment I shall depart from this place for good." The different paragraphs of the deed lay down rules for the guidance of the trustees. In para. 15 it is repeated that the properties are dedicated for the worship of the deity and the feeding of guests. In several places in the deed the estate is called the debottar estate. The effect of the deed clearly, in my opinion, is to vest the properties in the deity and not in the trustees for a specific purpose. The mere use of the word "trustee" is of no consequence if what I have said is the real import of the deed. The distinction between the two classes of cases has been pointed out in the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Vidya-varuti Tirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (35), where their Lordships after quoting the words of sec. 10 of the Limitation Act observe thus: "The language of sec. 10 gives the clue to the meaning and application of Art. 134. It clearly shows that the article refers to specific trust and relates to property 'conveyed in trust.' Neither under the Hindu law nor in the Mahomedan system is any property conveyed to a shebait or mutwalli in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interests regulated by custom and usage. Under the Mahomedan law the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakif and vest in God Almighty, the curator, whether called mutwalli or sajja-danishin or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a 'trustee' as understood in the English system." After this pronouncement it is difficult to maintain that sec. 10 has any application to the case of an endowment in which there is a dedication in favour of the deity, as I hold there has been in the present case. To my mind it is clear that the properties vested in the deity and the management, control and possession remained in the so-called "trustee." Certain passages from some of the later decisions of the Judicial Committee were cited before us on behalf of the Respondent, namely, from the decision in the case of T. P. Srinivasa Chariar v. C. V. Eyalappa Unadatra (36), A. S. S. Subbayya Pandaram v. Mahamad Mustapa Maracyar (37) and Naina Pillai Marakayar v. T. A. R. Ramanathan Chettiar (38), as apparently qualifying to some extent the pronouncement of the law as made in Vidyavaruthi's case (35). This matter, however, need not be discussed, for so far as regards the cardinal principle to which I have referred, the law must be taken to have been finally settled. For the contention that sec. 10 applies to the case reliance was placed on behalf of the Respondent upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkatavada Iyyengar (39), but that was a case of an executor and trustee appointed under a Will. In the present case as I have already said the mere use of the word trustee signifies nothing. The article which would apply in a case of this nature is either Art. 142 or Art. 144. For this proposition reference may be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das Aurora (40).

So long as Annoda was alive there is no question that the deity was in possession through him. On the death of Annoda, Makhan came to be in possession, but in view of his knowledge of the deed, it must be taken that he came into possession in the fiduciary character conferred on him by the deed, and the possession of the deity must be presumed to have continued unless it is proved that Makhan set up a title hostile to the deity. The onus is on Makhan to shew that he did not come in in that character or if he did, that his possession subsequently became adverse to the debutter either by disclaimer or by open and clear assertion of a hostile title. It is therefore immaterial whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 applies, and the real question is whether Makhan's possession at any time became adverse and if so has this possession continued for a sufficient length of time to extinguish the Plaintiff's title and create a title in Makhan and the Appellant.

This brings us to a consideration of the last question which arises in this appeal, namely, whether the Appellant and his father Makhan has been in adverse possession for a period of twelve years. On the facts found, Makhan contested the suit of Katyayani, but did not do any other act as trustee under the deed. The learned District Judge remarks in his judgment that in the written statement Makhan claimed the house as his own, but in this he has been in error. Nor, on the other hand, was the learned District Judge, in my opinion, right in treating the filing of the written statement in Katyayani's suit as acceptance of the trusteeship. No doubt an executor trustee by proving the Will is deemed to have accepted the trusts of the Will; Mucklow v. Fuller (41). But the filing of a written statement, such as it was in the present case, asserting the validity of the deed and opposing its construction when its validity was challenged by Katyayani, in my judgment, does not go so far. At any rate it was not inconsistent with Makhan having accepted the position of a "trustee" not in respect of all the properties included in the deed but only in respect of such of them which were found by the Court at that time to have been dedicated to the deity. On the question of adverse possession the learned Subordinate Judge held that Makhan through his pleaders in the suit of 1901, must have set up a hostile title to the property, and that as the Plaintiff was one of the pleaders such assertion must have been to the knowledge of the Plaintiff.

Though there is no direct evidence of this assertion of a hostile title, yet all the circumstances point to such an assertion having been made on behalf of Makhan by his pleader and that to the knowledge of the Plaintiff who was also one of the pleaders for Makhan in that suit. The decision of that suit as also of several suits which subsequently came on, all affirmed the view that Makhan was the absolute owner. It is not unreasonable to suppose—in fact any assumption to the contrary would be most unreasonable—that Makhan continued to possess the property with the knowledge of the Plaintiff on the assertion of the title which was found in his favour in several successive suits. No particular form of expression of an intention is necessary to constitute adverse possession; it is always a question of animus which has to be gathered from all the circumstances. The character of the possession of Makhan since the time of those suits, till the time when the Appellant has been in possession has remained the same, and the one conclusion that follows is what has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge, namely, that there has been adverse possession for over twelve years, and the Plaintiff's title has been extinguished.

The appeal therefore must be allowed, the decree of the learned District Judge reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court.

SUHRWARDY, J.—In Katyayani's suit she invited the Court to construe the deed of endowment for the purpose of finding if any term of it was invalid so that the property not validly dedicated would descend on her as the heir of the settler. She did not ask the Court to construe the terms of the deed in order to determine the real nature and effect of the settlement. The construction in Katyayani's suit upon cl. 21 of the deed, therefore, is not, in my opinion, res judicata as between Plaintiff and Makhan.

I agree with my learned brother in the interpretation of the document and in holding that the Plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation.

SATYA CHARAN MITTER v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Commitment based on such evidence, validity of—Powers of the Police, how regulated, in the Presidency Town, in the mofussil—Police, if they have any general inherent power in matters of investigation into an alleged offence, apart from the powers conferred on them by Acts and Circulars.

A complaint was preferred before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, charging S and others with cheating, forgery, theft, etc. The Magistrate directed an enquiry into the matter. In the course of the enquiry, the Investigating Police Officer went to Howrah and got a statement from S. No requisition was made to the Superintendent of Police, Howrah, in this behalf, under sec. 78A (3) of the Calcutta Police Act. The Magistrate on the evidence contained in the statement committed S for trial at the High Court Sessions :

Held—That the evidence was inadmissible in evidence and the commitment was bad. All investigations of the police must be controlled in Calcutta by the Calcutta Police Act and by any Circular issued on that behalf, and in the Mofussil by the Code of Criminal Procedure; apart from these Acts and Circulars, the police has no general inherent powers in such matters. The Investigating Police Officer in this case had no power to take the statement without requisition being made to the Superintendent of Police, Howrah. The attendance and questionings contemplated by sec. 78A, sub-secs. (1) and (2) of the Calcutta Police Act are intended to take place within the Presidency Town itself but if information has to be obtained from outside the Presidency Town, the procedure laid down in sub-sec. (3) has to be followed.

This was a Rule issued on the 26th January 1926 against an order of commitment of the Petitioner for trial at the Sessions made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta (T. Roxburgh), on the 21st January 1926.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—One Girija Bhusan Sarkar on behalf of his mother-in-law, widow of the late Dr. Satya Saran Mitter of Howrah, preferred a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, charging the Petitioner, his son Sashibhusan Mitter and one Dayal Hari Banerjee with forgery, theft, cheating, etc. The Chief Presidency Magistrate thereupon took cognizance of the complaint under sec. 190, Cr. P. C., examined the complainant and directed an enquiry. In the course of the investigation, the Investigating Officer went to Howrah and took from the Petitioner a statement, no requisition being made to the Superintendent of Police on that behalf.

The three accused were then produced before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, who after taking evidence, committed them for trial at the High Court Sessions. Before the Magistrate it was urged on behalf of the accused that the statement of the Petitioner obtained by the Investigating Officer was inadmissible in evidence having regard to the provisions of sec. 162, Cr. P. C., and if that statement were excepted, there was no evidence before him for committing the Petitioner for trial. The learned Magistrate while holding that there was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury against the Petitioner if his own statement were excepted, admitted the same as evidence, subject to such objection as might be taken at the trial regarding its admissibility and committed the Petitioner to the Sessions.

The Petitioner moved the High Court against the order of the Magistrate and obtained this Rule.

Mr. B. C. Chatterjee, Babus Mritunjoy

Chattopadhyaya and Biraj Mohan Ray for the Petitioner.

Messrs. B. L. Mitter (Advocate-General), Khundkar (Deputy Legal Remembrancer), S. K. Sen and Narendra Kumar Bose for the Crown.

Mr. B. C. Chatterjee on behalf of the Petitioner submitted that under sec. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the statement of the Petitioner was inadmissible. Further the statement was obtained without any requisition being made to the Superintendent of Police, therefore the Investigating Officer was not acting under sub-sec. (3) of sec. 78A of the Calcutta Police Act. Sub-secs. (1) and (2) of sec. 78A do not apply to the facts of the present case. Therefore the statement, on both grounds, was inadmissible. Besides the statement there is no other evidence to go to the jury against the Petitioner, so the commitment should be quashed.

The Advocate-General (Mr. B. L. Mitter) for the Crown.—Calcutta Police Act does not contain all the powers vested in the Calcutta Police. They have much wider powers given to them by Circulars. They also have inherent powers besides those given to them by Acts and Circulars. Acting under these powers the Investigating Officer could take the statement as he has done. The statement therefore was admissible. Under the general law, such a statement was admissible in evidence. The commitment was right.

See Queen-Empress v. Nilmadhab Mitter (1).

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—This Rule was granted by my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose sitting with Mr. Justice Mukerji and the object of the Rule was to secure the quashing of an order of commitment passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. The statement contained in the petition upon which the Rule is based is that on the 10th November one Girija Bhusan Sarkar on behalf of his mother-in-law preferred a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, charging the Petitioner and the Petitioner's son and another person with forgery, cheating, theft, etc., and it is said that the Chief Presidency Magistrate therefore took cognizance of the complaint under sec. 190, Cr. P. C., examined the complainant under sec. 200 and directed an enquiry under sec. 202 and that under these circumstances a certain statement which was taken from the Petitioner by an Investigating Police Officer is not admissible in evidence under the provisions of sec. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I do not think, however, that this contention is well-founded. If one turns to the original application which was made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate one finds that it is made in general terms. It stated that a certain Satya Charan Mitter died and that he was the holder of certain Government securities and that some difficulties having arisen after his death with regard to these securities it was necessary that certain enquiries should be made, and the actual application that was made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate was for a stop order in respect of the securities referred to in the petition and for a direction on the C. I. D. Police to make enquiry into the matter. The order passed on that application by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was to send the matter to the C. I. D. for enquiry and report, and with regard to the stop order the Magistrate stated that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the order at that stage. I think, therefore, that the arguments based on the contention to which I have referred are not well-founded and that the Chief Presidency Magistrate was merely acting under the provisions of sec. 156 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure which empower the Magistrate to order an investigation in the terms stated in the section. But the real point that we have got to decide is based on a consideration of the powers of the Calcutta Police under the Calcutta Police Act. The facts being as I have stated they clearly show that sec. 162, Cr. P. C., does not directly apply, for the investigation that was directed was carried on by the Calcutta Police under the provisions of the Calcutta Police Act, and it appears that what happened was that after the Chief Presidency Magistrate made his order the Petitioner's son having been already arrested the Police Officer went to the Petitioner and took from him a statement which is now sought to be used in evidence against the Petitioner, and on the strength of which he was committed by the Magistrate for trial at the Sessions, it being admitted that apart from this statement obtained from the Petitioner the evidence on the record is not sufficient to justify the committal, and indeed the Magistrate very frankly so states.

(1) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 595 (F. B.) (1888).

Turning to the provisions of sec. 78A of the Calcutta Police Act, which is the Act applicable as the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to the Calcutta Police except as expressly indicated in that Act, one finds that according to the provisions of sec. 78A (1) the Commissioner of Police, if in the course of any investigation he thinks a cognizable offence has been committed, can by an order in writing require the attendance before himself or any officer serving under him not below the rank of an Inspector, who is investigating a cognizable offence, of a person within the limits of Calcutta or within a radius of 30 miles. Sub-sec. (2) provides that the Commissioner of Police can examine orally the person who attends in accordance with the order passed under sec. 78A (1) and that the person so attending is bound to answer all questions. Then comes sub-sec. (3). That provides that the Commissioner of Police may forward to the Superintendent of Police of the District in which any person from whom any information is required relating to the facts or circumstances of the case under investigation is believed to be, such questions and such statements as may be necessary for the purpose of obtaining the information desired, that is to say, the scheme of sec. 78A in my reading of the section is to enable the Commissioner of Police to procure the attendance before him or any officer deputed in that behalf of any person for the purpose of obtaining information from such person; and as I have already stated sub-sec. (2) authorises the oral examination of the person whose attendance is procured. Then under sub-sec. (3) the Commissioner of Police is empowered to obtain the assistance of the Superintendent of Police in a District outside Calcutta for the purpose of having questions put to a person from whom information is desired but who for some reason cannot attend. As I understand sec. 78A (1) and (2) the attendance and questionings are intended to take place within the Presidency Town itself; and sub-sec. (3) only comes into force if for some reason it is difficult or undesirable to require the attendance of the person from whom information is desired within the precincts of the Presidency Town itself. Now what the In-investigating Officer apparently did in this case was to go to Howrah and take from the Petitioner a statement which contains the evidence upon which the committal order has been made by the Magistrate. I do not think, therefore, that he was acting under the provisions of either sec. 78A (1) or (2), nor do I think that he was in fact acting under the provisions of sec. 78A (3), for I do not understand that any requisition was made to the Superintendent of Police of Howrah for the purpose of procuring the information which was desired, and if in fact the Investigating Officer had been acting under the provisions of sub-sec. (3) he would by virtue of cl. (3) of the Police Act, III of 1888, be acting under the direction of the Superintendent of Police of Howrah and the matter would accordingly be governed by the provisions of sec. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for that Act of course applies to Howrah. I think, therefore, we are met with this difficulty that if what the Police Officer says he did falls within sec. 78A (3) then sec. 162, Cr. P. C., applies for the reasons I have indicated. But in my opinion the Investigating Officer was not acting under sec. 78A at all, and the question therefore we have got to see is whether he was justified in the course which he took, and whether the statement which he took from the Petitioner is under the circumstances admissible in evidence.

It is suggested by the Advocate-General that the Calcutta Police Act does not contain all the powers vested in the Calcutta Police and then there are in existence certain Circular Orders which give or may give wider powers in this matter than are contained in sec. 78A, but no such order has been produced before us and I do not think we are justified in assuming that such an order exists. Then a further contention is urged before us. It is said that the power to investigate contains an inherent power to take a statement such as this and that accordingly under the general law this particular statement is admissible in evidence against the accused, and we are referred in support of this argument to the case of Queen-Empress v. Nilmadhab Mitter (1), which is a decision of the Full Bench of this Court, as an authority for the proposition that there are certain powers inherent in the Police which are not expressly set out in the four corners of the Calcutta Police Act; for instance, it is said that there is no provision in the Calcutta Police Act providing for the taking of confessions; and yet according to the decision of the Full Bench the confession that was taken in that case was admitted in evidence although as I have stated there was no power to take confession expressly included within the provisions of the Calcutta Police Act. But in that case the confession was taken within the town of Calcutta itself and consequently that case cannot be prayed in aid to support the procedure adopted here. And we are not prepared to assent to the proposition that in criminal matters there is this inherent power such as the Advocate-General contends exists. All investigations by the Police it seems to me must be controlled, in the mofussil, by the Code of Criminal Procedure and in Calcutta by the Police Act itself or by any Circular Orders issued. I am not prepared to say that in a matter of this nature we can safely import a power such as the Advocate-General seeks to import of taking statements generally by the Police apart from the provisions of any Act and then put the statements so taken in evidence against the person by whom they were made. I think that would be to strike at the principles, to preserve which the provisions of sec. 162, Cr. P. C., were enacted and would introduce a very dangerous principle.

For the reasons, therefore, we have indicated I think the Rule should be made absolute and the commitment order of the Petitioner should be quashed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 236, 237—Trial on charge of abetment of forgery—Conviction for using a forged document, if legal.

In a trial on a charge of abetment of forgery under sec. 467 read with sec. 109, I. P. C., the accused cannot be convicted of using a forged document under sec. 471, I. P. C. Secs. 236 and 237, Cr. P. C., do not warrant such a conviction.

The offence of abetment of forgery is complete when the document is written and signed but the user is a distinct and different offence for which the accused is entitled to be separately charged.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st August 1925 against an order of the Sessions Judge of Cachar (Mr. A. dec Williams), dated the 4th June 1925, convicting the Appellant under secs. 467/471, I. P. C., and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 6 years.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee and Satyendra Kishore Ghose for the Appellant.

Mr. Ashraf Ali for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellant before us has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Cachar under secs. 467/471, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of six years. He was put on his trial along with four others—Shajid Ali, Atar Ali, Yakub Ali and Salim Mia, they being charged under sec. 467 with forgery and he being charged under sec. 467 read with sec. 109 of abetment of forgery. The four others were acquitted. The trial was with the aid of three Assessors who found the accused guilty of having abetted the forgery of a certain document.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused Shajid Ali had written out a kobala by which Mahomed Yusuf and Sultan Mahomed purported to convey to the accused Harun Rashid 120 bighas of land for Rs. 4,000, the consideration being accounted for as follows, namely, Rs. 2,000 due to Harun Rashid on account of a certain debt and Rs. 2,000 as commission due to him from them. In other words, no money was alleged to have been paid at the time of the execution of the kobala. The three witnesses to the execution of the kobala were the accused Atar Ali, Yakub Ali and Salim Mia who were discharged by the Judge as not knowing that the deed was a forgery. As regards the accused Shajid Ali, there was evidence that he had written out the kobala in question. The Assessors found him guilty of forgery but the learned Sessions Judge, being of opinion that there was nothing to show that Shajid Ali did not write out the kobala bonâ fide at Harun's request, acquitted him as stated above. The charge against the Appellant Harun Rashid was that he had abetted the forgery of a valuable security which was forged in consequence of his abetment.

The evidence goes to show that he presented the kobala for registration at the Sub-Registrar's Office. The Sub-Registrar thereupon called on the alleged executants to attend and thereafter the alleged executants appeared and denied execution of the document. The learned Sessions Judge found on the evidence that there could be no doubt whatsoever that the kobala in question was a false document. It was clearly a valuable security and its very nature showed that it was made with intent to cause the alleged executants to part with property. It was therefore a forged document. He found that there was no evidence worth the name that Harun had abetted the forgery by entering into a conspiracy to procure the forgery, but he was of opinion that the transaction as disclosed in the evidence pointed rather to Harun having committed an offence punishable under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code, i.e., Harun had used the document as a genuine one knowing that it was a forgery and that the recitals in the said document were all untrue and that his intention was to cause wrongful loss to the alleged executants. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that Harun should have been charged under secs. 467/471, I. P. C., the user of the forged document being its presentation to the Sub-Registrar for registration. He accordingly convicted him under the said sections and sentenced him as stated above.

On behalf of the Appellant it has been argued that he having been tried on a charge of abetment of forgery cannot be convicted under sec. 471 of using a forged document as genuine without a trial having been held on a charge under sec. 471, I. P. C. It appears from the record that the learned Sessions Judge relied upon the provisions of sec. 237, Cr. P. C., as authorising him to convict the Appellant under sec. 471, I. P. C. It therefore becomes necessary for us to examine the provisions of sec. 237, Cr. P. C., and see whether the procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge is legal. Sec. 237, Cr. P. C., runs as follows:—"If in the case mentioned in sec. 236 the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he has committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it." It will be seen that sec. 237 is only applicable to cases which properly fall within the scope of sec. 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which says: "If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences." We do not think that sec. 236 and sec. 237 can apply in this case. The charge was abetment of forgery—an offence which is complete when the document was written and signed. But the conviction is for a subsequent act. The forgery purports to be on the 30th March 1924. The date the document was presented for registration and used was the 31st July 1924. The user is therefore a distinct and different offence for which the accused is entitled to be separately charged.

Before a person is convicted under a particular section of the Indian Penal Code or of any other enactment it is imperative that subject to the provisions of sec. 237, Cr. P. C., he should be formally charged with having committed the offence specified in the section and be given an opportunity to defend himself against the specified charge. That has not been done in this case and we are constrained to hold that the conviction and sentence in the present case cannot stand. The result therefore is that the conviction and sentence in this case are set aside and the case is sent back in order that the Appellant may be re-tried according to the provisions of the law after framing suitable charges. The Appellant will remain on the same bail as he is on now, pending further orders of the Sessions Judge.

Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), secs. 101, 102, 126—Will—Construction—Absolute gift accompanied by void settlement, or estate for life—Gift to daughters for life, remainder to children on attaining 21 years—Gift to class—Perpetuity, rule against, in England and India—Act VIII of 1921.

The testator, a Hindu who died in 1904, bequeathed his estate to trustees with directions to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal shares as he might have daughters living at the time of his death or who having predeceased him should have left issue surviving the testator and to pay the income of each of such shares to his said daughters respectively during their respective lives, and from and after the decease of each of the said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter upon trust for the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of 21 years. All his three daughters having survived him:

Held—That there was no disposition in favour of the daughters of an absolute estate in the respective shares followed by a provision for settlement which became inoperative, within the meaning of sec. 126 of the Succession Act, the principle of which is not substantially different from that laid down in LASSENCÉ v. TIERNEY (2).

That the ultimate dispositions in favour of the daughters' children on their attaining the age of 21 years failed altogether as being obnoxious to the provisions of sec. 101 and sec. 102 of the Succession Act, the children of the daughters being intended to take as classes, within the meaning of sec. 102.

The difference between the rule obtaining in England and that laid down in sec. 101 of the Succession Act pointed out.

Whether Madras Act, I of 1914, was ultra vires or not, Act VIII of 1921 of the Indian Legislature made secs. 101 and 102 applicable to the Will.

The provisions of the Majority Act extending the period of minority in cases mentioned therein to 21 years did not validate the disposition, as at the testator's death, one could not be certain whether all or any of the members of the classes in whose favour the disposition was made would ever have guardians appointed as contemplated by the Act.

This was an appeal (No. 140 of 1923) from a decree of the High Court at Madras, dated the 16th December 1920, affirming a decree of the said Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 6th November 1919.

The suit was brought by the Appellants for the construction of the Will of their grandfather Colathaor Ratna Mudaliar against the Respondents, the other grandchildren of the testator.

The Will was dated 24th April 1897. The testator, who was a Hindu domiciled in the city of Madras, died in December 1904 leaving a widow and three daughters.

The material portions of the Will are set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee. The testator's eldest daughter had four children, three of whom were born before 1904 and one after that date.

The second daughter had one child born after 1904.

The third daughter had 6 children all born after 1904.

The Appellants were the three sons of the third daughter.

The trial Judge, Coutts Trotter, J., held on the construction of the Will that the testator gave a life estate to each of his daughters, that the gifts to grandchildren born after the testator's death were void but were validated by Madras Act, I of 1914.

The decree further stated "that the period of distribution is multiple, i.e., there is a distribution pro tanto as and when each of the said children reaches the age of 21, and the final distribution is to take place when the last of the children attains the age of 21 or dies.

On appeal the High Court (Wallis, C. J. and Ramesam, J.) were of opinion that Madras Act, I of 1914, was ultra vires and that the dispositions offended the rule against perpetuities and were bad under sec. 101 of the Indian Succession Act. They held, however, that the case came under sec. 126 of the Succession Act and operated as an absolute gift to each of the testator's daughters.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and Narasimham for the Appellants.—The Appellate Court was right in holding that the bequests were invalid as being gifts to unborn persons but it was wrong in deciding that there was an intention to confer an absolute gift on each daughter and make a settlement of it.

The true construction is that life estates were given to the daughters; the Appellants and the other grandsons are entitled absolutely to the residuary estate as upon an intestacy.

Sir Walter Schevaba, K. C., Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and A. M. Talbot for the Respondents.—The Will read as a whole shows an intention to give the daughters a one-third share each absolutely and as the High Court point out the further provisions are just the kind of settlement that a modern Hindu would be inclined to make upon his daughters.

Hulme v. Hulme (3), Ring v. Hardwick (4), In re Mercer's Trusts (5) and Whitehead v. Rennett (6).

Whether or not Act I of 1914 (Madras) was ultra vires it has been validated by Act VIII of 1921 and the gift to unborn grandchildren was good.

Sec. 102 of the Indian Succession Act does not apply to Madras Hindus.

Mr. Clouston, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The questions which arise for decision on this appeal relate to the construction and validity of the provisions of a Will, dated 27th April 1897, and made by a Hindu, C. Ratna Mudaliar, who died in 1904. He left a widow and three daughters. One of these daughters, Yasodammall, died in 1907; another, Rajammall, in 1908; and the third, Nilayathatchi Ammal, in 1918. Yasodammall had four children, as to three of them, two sons and a daughter, born before the death of the testator in 1904, and as to one of them, born afterwards in 1907. Rajammall, the second daughter, had a son Tirugnanasambandam, who was born in 1907. This child was constituted a Ward of Court in 1910. Nilayathatchi Ammal, the third daughter, had six children, three sons and three daughters, all born after 1904. Of these various families the three sons of the third daughter were Plaintiffs in the suit and are Appellants to-day. The others were Defendants and are now Respondents.

It will be convenient first of all to set out the material portions of the Will :—

"I give devise and bequeath all my estate and effects immoveable and moveable unto my Trustees Upon Trust that my Trustees shall sell call in and convert into money the same or such part thereof as shall not consist of money and shall with and out of the proceeds of such sale calling in and conversion and with and out of my ready money pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and shall stand possessed of the residue of such proceeds Upon Trust to set apart thereout and invest in promissory notes of the Government of India such a sum or sums of money as when so invested as aforesaid will produce by the income thereof a monthly sum of rupees one hundred and to pay such income monthly to my wife C. Andalammal during her life and from and after her decease to stand possessed of the said sum and the investments for the time being representing the same Upon the Trusts hereinafter declared concerning the residue of my estate. And as to the residue of my estate I direct that my Trustees shall at their discretion invest the same in any of the modes of investment in which trustees are by law authorised to invest trust funds and shall stand possessed of the said residuary trust monies and the investments for the time being representing same (hereinafter called "the residuary trust funds"). In Trust to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal parts or shares as there may be daughters of mine living at the time of my decease or who having predeceased me shall have left issue her or them and me surviving and to pay the income of each of such equal parts of shares to my said daughters respectively during their respective lives. And from and after the decease of each of my said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter Upon Trust for all the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of twenty-one years in equal shares and if there shall be only one such child the whole to be in trust for that one child and in the event of any of my said daughters dying without leaving lawful issue her or them surviving I direct that my trustees shall stand possessed of the share or shares so appropriated to her or them as aforesaid Upon Trust for all the children of the other or others of my said daughters who shall attain the age of twenty-one years as tenants-in-common in equal shares per stirpes. Provided always and I hereby declare that if any daughter of mine shall die in my lifetime leaving lawful issue at the time of my death such issue as shall attain the age of twenty-one years shall take and if more than one as tenants-in-common in equal shares per stirpes the share which would have been so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter of mine and her issue if she had survived me."

The suit was instituted in the High Court of Madras for a due construction of the Will and for administration. The

S. SOUNDARA RAJAN v. C. M. NATARAJAN.

Plaintiffs, the present Appellants, were, as already stated, grandsons of the testator and children of his third daughter. Their case is that they, along with the sons of the other two daughters, are entitled to succeed to the testator's residuary estate subject to an annuity to the widow and to mere life estates given to the three daughters, who are all now dead. For they contend that the trusts in favour of grandchildren, following in the Will on those for the daughters for life, are void by the law of India. The case of the Respondents, on the other hand, is that the trusts introduced in favour of grandchildren were validly created by the Will, or, alternatively, that the three daughters of the testator in the result took his residue absolutely.

The case was tried before Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, who decided in substance (1) that the testator gave only a life estate to each of his three daughters, and not an absolute estate, remarking: "It seems to me clear that what the testator wished to do was to divide the income of his estate into three shares for the benefit of his three daughters respectively during their life-time, and thereafter the corpus of each share should belong to such of the children of each daughter as should attain the age of twenty-one years;" (2) that under the provisions of sec. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, and the rules laid down by the Lords of the Judicial Committee in the case of Tagore v. Tagore (1) and other decisions, the gifts to the grandchildren of the testator born after his death were void; but that the provisions of the Madras Act, I of 1914, which were not in his opinion ultra vires of a Provincial Legislative Council, validated the bequest in this respect. The learned Judge was further of opinion that the testator's Will did not, for reasons which he gave, contravene the Indian rule against perpetuities in view of the provisions of Act IX of 1875, as amended by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890.

There was an appeal to the Appellate Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Madras. Before judgment on that appeal was delivered certain compromises were made between certain of the parties, for the division between them of what might be the fruits of this litigation. Into the terms of the compromise it is not, however, necessary, at this stage of the suit, to enter.

The appeal was heard by the Chief Justice (Sir John Wallis) and Mr. Justice Ramesam. These learned Judges did not agree with the view of the trial Judge as to the effect of the Indian Majority Act, 1875, and of the Madras Act I of 1914 (which they held to have been ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature). They were accordingly of opinion that the disposition of the Will could not take effect as regards beneficiaries born after the death of the testator, and, as the provisions in favour of issue of daughters were obnoxious to sec. 101 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, they thought that the whole disposition in favour of the daughters' children failed as a result of sec. 102 of that Act. They held, however, that upon the true construction of the Will the intention of the testator was, in the first instance, to make an absolute gift in favour of each of his three daughters, the provisions which followed being a mere settlement of the gift thus absolutely made, and that consequently under sec. 126 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, the daughters of the testator took absolutely, when these provisions failed of effect. That section, made applicable to the testator's Will by

"Where a testator absolutely bequeaths a fund, so as to sever it from his own estate, but directs that the mode of enjoyment of it by the legatee shall be restricted so as to secure a specified benefit for the legatee: if that benefit cannot be obtained for the legatee, the fund belongs to him, as if the Will had contained no such direction."

This is an enactment in statutory form of a principle which was already familiar to English lawyers. The case of Lassence v. Tierney (2) shows that where, reading the Will as a whole, the intention to confer an absolute estate in the first instance is expressed or implied, and following on that absolute estate there is a provision for settlement which in the event cannot be operative, then the words of prior intention prevail and the absolute estate takes effect notwithstanding the failure of the provision for settlement that follows. In India the words in sec. 126 must be followed as laying down the principle, but the principle is not substantially different from what was expressed in Lassence v. Tierney (2). Their Lordships have given consideration to the terms of the Will in the present case. The material directions are those to the trustees "to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal parts or shares as there may be daughters of mine living at the time of my decease or who having predeceased me shall have left issue her or them or me surviving." The trustees are then to "pay the income of each of such equal parts or shares to my said daughters respectively during their respective lives. And from and after the decease of each of my said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter upon trust for the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of 21 years."

The testator then directs that in the event of any of the daughters dying without leaving lawful issue the trustees are to "stand possessed of the share or shares so appropriated to her or them as aforesaid" on trust for her children who shall attain twenty-one. He goes on to introduce a proviso under which, if a daughter dies in his life-time leaving lawful issue, such issue as shall attain 21 years are to take the share "which would have been so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter of mine and her issue if she had survived me."

Reading the Will as a whole their Lordships are unable to agree with the conclusion about the construction of these clauses come to by the Court of Appeal. They think that the first trust for apportionment directs merely division of the fund into as many equal parts or shares as there are daughters living at the testator's death, or sets of issue then living or daughters then dead.

The words of apportionment are introduced for merely arithmetical purposes and so far do not dispose of property. In order to find the interest given under the Will it is necessary to proceed to the further words, and these, in the case of a daughter, confine her interest to a right to income for life. They are followed by words of disposition in favour of the children and issue. This view of what may be called the apportionment clause is even more apparent as regards the suggested gift to issue of a deceased daughter. There is no unqualified gift to them by the apportionment clause. The effective gift in the later words of the Will is to such of a deceased daughter's children as attain 21. And if, of this Will it could be said that the testator had used the words "issue" and "children" interchangeably then the limitation to such children only as attained 21 would, if there were a prior gift to them without that qualification, be merely otiose. If so much cannot be said then there is no room for the operation of the rule. Their Lordships are, therefore, unable to find in this Will the absolute bequests required by sec. 126. They think that the three daughters took only for life, and that it must remain to be seen whether the later gifts in favour of their children or other issue are validly made under Hindu law.

(2) 1 Mer. 551 (1849).

Turning to this question, the first observation to be made is that the Will has apparently been drawn by someone familiar with English law, but not with the Indian statutes which apply. If it were only a question of the English rule against perpetuities, there would be no objection to the Will. But there comes in sec. 101 of the Indian Succession Act of 1865. Under this section no bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the life-time of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority (ending at 18) of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong. The validity of the gifts now in question must be scrutinized as at the death of the testator, i.e., 1904, and if sec. 101 then applied, the disposition subsequent to the life-time of the testator's daughters was invalid, for the children of the daughters take only in classes, and by sec. 102 of the Succession Act, if a bequest is made to a class of persons, with regard to some of whom it is inoperative by reason of the Rules contained in sec. 101, the bequest is wholly void. It being plain that this bequest, tested as at the testator's death, made delay beyond the life-time of the daughters and the minority of some of their children possible, the bequest in favour of the children was inoperative. It was suggested, however, that this section had no application to the Will of a Hindu by reason of the fact that, as is shown by the Tagore v. Tagore case (1) any disposition in such a Will is invalid if the donee is an unborn person at the testator's death. The section, it was said, is only applicable to dispositions which are not otherwise ineffective. One answer to this was that in 1914 the Madras Act above referred to was passed which purported to get rid of the difficulty caused by the Tagore v. Tagore (1) decision. This Act provides by sec. 3 that a disposition shall not be invalid by reason only that the transferee or legatee is an unborn person at the date of the transfer, or the death of the testator. Questions were raised, as has already been observed, in the Courts below as to the validity of the Madras Act, but these questions are now superseded by the Act of the Indian Legislature, No. 8 of 1921, which has validated the law contained in the Madras Act, and repeats in sec. 5 a provision identical with sec. 101 of the Succession Act, 1865. The result is to make that section applicable to this Will, upon a view which was not contested before their Lordships if the Madras Act or the Act of 1921 were treated as operative. Now in that section, as has been already said, a "minor" means any person who shall not have completed the age of eighteen years. It was, however, pointed out by the Respondents that, by the Majority Act, 1875, every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice, and every minor under the jurisdiction of any Court of Wards, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 21 years and not before; and this is accompanied by a provision that every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 18 years and not earlier. These provisions do not, however, in the opinion of their Lordships, help the Respondents. At the testator's death—for this purpose the relevant date—it was not clear, and could not be certain whether all or any of the members of the classes in whose favour the disposition was made would ever have guardians appointed. The provision of the Will fixing 21 in every case as the age of vesting was, therefore, in contravention of sec. 101, and the whole gift is invalid under sec. 102. Their Lordships are unable to agree with the views expressed in some detail on this point by the learned trial Judge.

Their Lordships are of opinion, for the reasons they have given, that the appeal must succeed. There will be a declaration that the Appellants are entitled to their respective shares in the property in suit as upon an intestacy, subject to the life estates (now at an end) in favour of the testator's daughters. This will be without prejudice to the compromises referred to in the decree appealed from, and to the sanction given to them by that decree. The case must go back to the High Court for further inquiry on that footing. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to interfere with the orders as to costs made in the Courts below. They think that the costs of this appeal should, in the same way, be payable out of the estate.

They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Solicitor: Mr. Douglas Grant for the Respondents.

v.

Co., LTD. and anr.,

Defendants,

Respondents.

Contract of managing agency to Limited Company for a fixed period—Difference between partners of firm of managing agents resulting in deadlock in business—Circumstances justifying dismissal of managing agent before termination of stipulated period—Insubordination and misconduct of managing agent, what constitutes.

The Defendant Company, a limited concern, entered into an agreement with a firm of which the Plaintiff and the second Defendant were the partners whereby the said firm were appointed managing agents for a fixed period of years. Under the agreement, subject to the supervision and control of the directors the managing agents were to manage, conduct and carry on the business of the Company both at the head office and at all branches and agencies and were to have and possess all powers, authorities and discretions necessary for or incidental to the purpose. Before the termination of the period of contract difference arose between the Plaintiff and the second Defendant and the latter cancelled the power-of-attorney which he had given to the Plaintiff whereby the Plaintiff was conducting the affairs of the Company and those of the firm of managing agents and served him with a notice of dissolution of partnership and the Plaintiff in his turn cancelled the power-of-attorney in favour of the second Defendant, removed certain books and documents from the office which, in consequence of the situation created, was closed. The directors thereupon passed a resolution whereby the second Defendant was appointed the managing agent of the Company.

The Plaintiff sued to recover damages for the alleged breach of the agreement whereby the managing agency was created alleging that the second Defendant had acted in concert and collusion with the directors. The Defendant Company amongst others alleged specific charges of misconduct and insubordination on the part of the Plaintiff:

Held—That the Plaintiff failed to prove the second Defendant's collusion with the directors and the Company also failed to prove misconduct and insubordination on the part of the Plaintiff; but having regard to the state of affairs which had arisen it was necessary to appoint somebody as managing agent and the Defendant Company were justified in putting an end to the managing agency agreement and the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages from the Company.

What constitutes insubordination and misconduct of managing agent discussed by PEARSON, J.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th May 1914 against the judgment of Mr. Justice Pearson, dated the 17th April 1914, passed in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts will appear from the judgment of PEARSON, J., which was as follows:—

PEARSON, J.—The Plaintiff sues to recover damages from the Defendant Company upon an alleged breach of a managing agency agreement made between the Company and the firm of which Plaintiff and the second Defendant, Rajabally, were partners.

The Plaintiff had been some 20 years or more in the Insurance Department of Messrs. Bird & Co., when the second Defendant, who had formed the idea of floating an Insurance Company, persuaded the Plaintiff to join him for the purpose of managing the Company. An agreement accordingly was entered into between them, dated the 24th September 1919, which provided for the commencement of the partnership business in the name of "Mackenzie and Rajabally" from the date of registration of the Company. A term of 35 years was fixed or longer if the firm continued as managing agents of the Company, and commission was to be fixed at Rs. 7½ per cent. on net premiums, with a minimum annual remuneration over and above establishment of Rs. 50,000 which at some later stage was altered to Rs. 25,000.

The Company was registered on the 27th October 1919, and the provisions contemplated in the last mentioned agreement were embodied in the Articles of Association. Art. 112 provided for the appointment of the managing agents for a period of 35 years certain and thereafter until they should be removed by an extraordinary resolution of the Company of which not less than 12 months' notice should be given. On the 30th December 1919, a formal managing agency agreement between the Company and the firm was signed, and on the 29th May 1920 a fresh partnership agreement was made between the Plaintiff and second Defendant, the period fixed being 99 years. Some time in 1921 a branch office in Bombay was opened. From September 1921 to March 1922 the Plaintiff was in Europe. On the 4th July 1922 a directors' meeting was held, at which the accounts of the Company were criticised and a sub-committee was formed to go into the accounts and formulate a plan of retrenchment. One director, a Mr. Habib Mahomed, complained of Mr. Rajabally going off to Bombay and the increase of European assistants in the Calcutta office. The result of the sub-committee's efforts was that in a very short time the staff was reduced by getting rid of some of the Europeans and some Indians as well. The second Defendant came from Bombay about 15th July. On the 26th July the directors at a meeting decided to sanction only Rs. 5,000 upon account of Plaintiff's travelling expenses to Europe in place of the Rs. 10,000 (or Rs. 16,000 as it was originally) claimed as chargeable to the Company under that head, and the Plaintiff was to repay the difference at the rate of Rs. 200 a month. They discussed also the report of the sub-committee, dated the 23rd July. On the 12th August the second Defendant wrote a letter to the Plaintiff suggesting that in the best interests of the Company the Plaintiff ought to retire from the firm, calling on the Plaintiff not to act on behalf of the Company or the firm, and cancelling his power-of-attorney. On the 13th, a Sunday, the Plaintiff visited the office with Mr. Warden, an assistant. In order to get in he had to break an extra padlock which had been placed on the office door by Mr. Rajabally. Having got in, he removed a certain number of papers from the office. On the 14th August Plaintiff again went to the office with Mr. Warden, and removed the Company's current cheque books and also two cheques. The second Defendant went to his solicitor and wrote Plaintiff a letter purporting to dissolve the partnership as from that date. He also went and summoned Mr. Barry, a director, who went round to the office, made enquiries and took down the statements of those present. In the afternoon of 14th August a directors' meeting was called by Mr. Barry at which a resolution was passed whereby "in the face of the dissolution of the firm," second Defendant should be asked to carry on the business for the managing agents. A notice was then published on 15th August which is set out in para. 8 of the plaint.

"The Himalaya Assurance Co., Ltd.

Notice is hereby given that the firm of Messrs. Mackenzie and Rajabally have ceased to be the managing agents of the above Company and the undersigned has this day been appointed as the sole managing agent of the said Company.

By order of the Board of Directors.

(Sd.) N. Rajabally.

Dated 15th August 1922.

5, Misson Row, Calcutta."

Also on the same date a notice was advertised over the name of second Defendant stating that he had severed connection with the firm and had cancelled the power-of-attorney in favour of the Plaintiff. From the 15th August onwards the directors were occupied hearing statements and explanations from the various persons concerned, and the Plaintiff and second Defendant in particular. On the 30th August 1922, second Defendant filed a suit for dissolution against the Plaintiff (Suit No. 2858 of 1922), and the present suit was filed on the 26th June 1923. In para. 7 of his plaint the charge levied against the Company is put thus: "At some time during the first half of the year 1922 the directors (other than the Plaintiff) decided to oust the Plaintiff from the said managing agency and to appoint the Defendant Rajabally sole managing agent, and also decided to dismiss all the European staff from the service of the Company and in furtherance of such designs in concert and collusion with each other they carried out the following plan of action :'' then are described the events following on the letter of the 12th August 1922. Then in para. 16 of his plaint he says : " By reason of the wrongful acts of the Defendant Company as aforesaid the Plaintiff has suffered loss and damage." The foundation then of the Plaintiff's case as above set out is that there existed a conspiracy (though the word is not used) in which the directors and the second Defendant were parties, whose object was to get rid of the Plaintiff.

The case for the Defendant Company is broadly speaking this : that no legal partnership existed between the Plaintiff and second Defendant, or legal agreement between the Defendant Company and the partners. If it did, the dismissal was justified because the partners had made it impracticable as between themselves to carry on the Company's business, and in any event it was justified by certain acts of misconduct on the part of the Plaintiff in dealing with the Company's affairs.

It is contended in the first place that the partnership deed of the 29th May 1920 is invalid. Cl. 2 provides for the partnership to continue for 99 years. That in itself is unobjectionable. Cl. 12 is as follows :—

" In the event of the death or retirement (such retirement shall not be in the first three years) of either partner the partnership will not be dissolved and the surviving partner shall carry on the business under the same name and style by admitting and taking into the firm one or more new partner or partners so that there shall at no one time ever be less than two partners and the surviving partner shall pay to the heirs, executors and administrators of the deceased partner in each and every year a sum of money equal to one-third of the amount which would have accrued and been due in such year to the deceased partner had he been still alive, but in every case the minimum payable to either partner or his heirs should not be less than Rs. 500."

The argument is that this provision avoids the whole agreement inasmuch as it creates a trust in favour of the heirs, executors and administrators of a deceased partner for a period of 99 years, and offends, against the rule against perpetuities. The case of In re Flavell (Murray v. Flavell) (1) is relied upon as showing that what has been created is a trust, so that the person nominated, although a third party, acquires an equitable interest in the funds of the business, and can enforce the right. It is to be observed, however, that in In re Flavell (1) there was an express provision that the annuity should be constituted a charge on the net profits of the business. The result of that is that it becomes something more than a mere contract between two parties that one of them is to pay a particular sum to a third party; a trust fund is constituted, and the interest of a cestui que trust established. In the present case provision is made for payment by a surviving partner of a certain sum to the heirs of the deceased partner, and the sum payable is ascertainable by reference to what his share would have been had he been alive. It would be doing violence to the language to say that a clause in these terms laying down the mode of ascertainment was to be construed as creating a charge upon the profits or as constituting them a trust fund. It is argued that reading cl. 12 with the rest of the agreement as a whole, you must read into cl. 12 a payment "out of the profits:" that in order to support the business efficacy of the transaction such as must have been intended by the parties, these words must be implied [The Moorcock (2)], because if there is no trust it remains a merely contractual right unenforceable by a third party. In my opinion this question cannot be so disposed of. I think, that the clause has to be interpreted according to the plain language employed, and the intention of the parties ascertained from that language as it stands. There is no reason that I can discover for reading into the clause something which is not there. As I read it, the clause is personal to the two original contracting parties, and creates no equitable right in any third party.

(1) 25 Ch. Div. 89 (1883).

A similar argument is put forward as regards the managing agency agreement, dated the 30th December 1919, and it is said that because the firm and its successors are provided with a remuneration at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. as commission on the annual net premia, therefore, the firm gets an equitable interest in the net premia, which are constituted a trust fund, and the period of 35 years provided for the currency of the agreement is in excess of the period allowed by law [London & S. W. Railway Co. v. Gomm (3) and Ramasami v. Chinnan (4)]. The same reasoning is applicable, in my opinion, as in the case of the partnership agreement, and I cannot agree that any such result is to be arrived at upon the proper construction of the document, nor has any argument been put forward as to any ground on which it could be said that such agreement was ultra vires the Company.

I now proceed to consider the question of what has been called the conspiracy between the directors and the second Defendant to get rid of the Plaintiff. Before July the second Defendant had already expressed his expectation of criticism when the draft accounts should be placed before the directors, especially as to the debit of Rs. 16,000 for travelling expenses. When the directors' meeting of 4th July was held the second Defendant was in Bombay looking after the branch office there, but he had sent his representative Pirbhoy to watch. At that meeting the accounts formed the subject of unfavourable comment, and the retrenchment sub-committee was formed, while objection was also taken by Mr. Habib Mohamed to the "desertion" of the second Defendant to Bombay, and to the size and expense of the European staff. Mr. Pirbhoy thereupon communicated with Mr. Rajabally in Bombay with the result that he arrived in Calcutta on the 18th July. No doubt he called on the directors. Then on the 17th or 18th July there is an interview between Plaintiff and second Defendant, of which Mr. Daud, a friend of the Plaintiff's, has given evidence. According to this, the second Defendant said the directors had refused to sign the accounts, and some of them were antagonistic to the Plaintiff, so Rajabally proposed to appear to fall in with their views in order to spy out the land and find out what their views were. Rajabally also stated, according to this witness, that some of the directors had suggested that some kind of a charge could be got up against the Plaintiff so as to get rid of him. I do not think that one can rely upon the evidence of this witness as to all the details of this interview unreservedly though it may well be that by that time the Plaintiff understood that there was some dissatisfaction with him on the part of one or more of the directors in connection with the accounts. The report of the retrenchment sub-committee (Ex. 2) was really drawn up by Mr. Gregory, one of the directors, and signed by the other members, and amongst the various items commented upon is that of Rs. 9,999-11-0 for Plaintiff's travelling expenses during his visit to Europe, incurred without reference to the directors and spread over a period of far longer than was necessary to transact any business at home referable to the Company's interests; besides which he had business at home on the part of Sukhlal Kernani which in the event of the success of certain negotiations would have been extremely profitable to the Plaintiff. At the meeting on the 26th July the minutes show that the sum allowed for travelling expenses was cut down to Rs. 5,000 subject to which the accounts were passed. It also appears that the Plaintiff protested at the meeting, and on the same day a letter dealing with various points raised and annexing a detailed account of the travelling expenses is signed both by Plaintiff and second Defendant, and forwarded to the directors. Up to this point the Plaintiff and second Defendant undoubtedly stood together, and the action taken by the directors was not aimed more against one than the other, but affected both as partners of the firm. The reduction of establishment which followed dealt not only with the European staff but also with the Indian, and lends no strength to the suggestion of conspiracy against the Plaintiff himself. I believe that the reduction was resolved upon and carried out as an economy and pursuant to the suggestions of the sub-committee, which they held to be desirable in the interest of the Company. The period from the 26th July to the 12th August is devoid of incident, and so far as the Plaintiff is concerned, he says he retained the same feelings of friendship to the second Defendant as he had previously, right up to the time of the receipt of the letter. The second Defendant says that he was going through the accounts, and found that a certain commission was not credited to the company over some Agra Mill's business of which more hereafter. Then on the 10th August the second Defendant says he saw a letter from the Imperial Bank of India, dated 9th instant, enclosing a copy of a letter from the London office, dated 20th July, asking for a special resolution to be forwarded from the directors authorizing the managing agents to borrow money against the Company's securities. Rajabally says he asked the Plaintiff about this, and the Plaintiff brushed the matter lightly aside "as if he were the sole proprietor of the Company," and in effect expressed his contempt for the directors. To this attitude on the part of the Plaintiff Rajabally decided not to be a party (Mr. Gregory corroborates him here), and accordingly wrote in as he did on the 12th, possibly in the hopes of inducing a more reasonable attitude in him towards the directors. At any rate the events of the 12th, 13th and 14th show that the feeling between the Plaintiff and second Defendant became more accentuated and more strained, and Mr. Mackenzie clearly desired, in all that he did, to prevent the second Defendant from taking any part in the further administration of the office or the handling of the cash or securities, and secondly, to safeguard his own personal interests. To that end he cancelled his power-of-attorney, removed cheque books and other documents, and called into his aid some of the former European assistants. When the meeting of the directors is held on the 14th, the second Defendant makes a statement of what had taken place at the office on that morning, and when the Plaintiff is asked if he wishes to make any explanation, he does so without a shadow of suggestion that the whole thing is a conspiracy between the directors and Rajabally. Nor do I find any such suggestion emerging from anything that appears in the minutes of the subsequent days. Mr. Gregory denied the existence of any such conspiracy, and no attempt was made to suggest specifically who the other members of it might be. It cannot in my opinion be said that any conspiracy such as is alleged in the plaint has been proved either directly or inferentially.

The question then arises, in the state of affairs as it existed on the 14th August, was the Defendant Company bound to continue the employment of the Plaintiff having regard to the disputes and dissensions which had arisen between him and his partner? There had been Rajabally's letter of the 12th August, the cancellation of the power-of-attorney, notice of dissolution of partnership, the Plaintiff's action in consequence, the visit to the office on the 13th, tearing off the second Defendant's padlock to obtain admission, and removal of certain things to protect his own interest, another visit on the 14th with Mr. Warden, the cancellation by the Plaintiff of his power-of-attorney to the second Defendant. I think there can be no doubt that conflicting and contradictory orders were given to the office staff by the Plaintiff and second Defendant. As one of the witnesses said: "There was more than an earthquake." Mr. Gregory's account gives some indication of how they felt to each other on the 14th. Both said the position was such that they could not work with each other, because neither could trust the other, and Mackenzie had ordered the clerks not to obey the orders of Rajabally, and Rajabally had dissolved the firm and would not work with him any more. Plaintiff's conduct in cancelling the power-of-attorney and breaking the padlock shows his attitude. He admits that in order to resume friendship with second Defendant the latter would have to fall in with his views, otherwise the rupture must continue. He would have given him a fresh power-of-attorney had he "come to reason;" his intention was to prevent him acting for the Company or the firm except in the way of canvassing and bringing in business. He admits that his visit on the 13th was because he did not trust the 2nd Defendant to get his hands on the contents of the safe, and he says he considered the second Defendant "capable of any dishonesty then." He admits he had lost faith in him, and even now if any question of reinstatement were raised, he admits it would only be on the footing that Rajabally should have no power at all. It is not surprising that in such circumstances, the directors should be anxious about the interest of the Company, with the partners pulling different ways, and that they should take steps to remedy it according to their own ideas. The partnership had not, in law, been dissolved, but it seems that the prevailing opinion was that as a result of what had happened the partnership had actually come to an end. At least Mr. Gregory thought so, though perhaps the Plaintiff and the second Defendant were at first uncertain as to the position. Had that been the case, the directors were undoubtedly within their rights in making immediate arrangements for the protection of the interests of the Company, and, in appointing the second Defendant temporarily as manager pending further steps for a formal appointment [Robson v. Drummond (5)]. I am not called upon to consider the case where the partners have fallen out among themselves, and the breach has been subsequently patched up. No such situation ever arose here. Nothing that the Plaintiff ever did after the 12th August appears to have been directed towards conciliating his partner or smoothing the difficulties that had arisen, except possibly his warning him in an aside at one meeting that he had better be careful or he would find it would be his turn next. The position on the 14th was that the partners had fallen out in such a way as to make it clear that mutual confidence had been destroyed, and it was no longer possible for them to exert their joint zeal in the best interests of the Company. Everything in fact pointed the other way, to the probability that they would be mutually obstructive in the carrying on of the Company's affairs. Apart from anything else there was a conflict of interests between the Plaintiff and second Defendant, and between the Plaintiff and directors, and the ensuing actions of the Plaintiff were upon that footing. In my opinion the directors were justified, in the position of affairs as they then stood, in considering that the interests of the Company were jeopardised, and in taking the action they did. Nothing that happened afterwards threw any duty on them to reconsider the position, and the Plaintiff in some of the letters which he afterwards wrote to them used expressions which were the reverse of conciliatory.

Apart from the points already discussed the Defendant Company has contended that it was justified in terminating the Plaintiff's employment on ground of one or more of the specific acts of misconduct which are particularised in paras. 14 and 15 of the written statement, and in the letters from Defendants' attorneys, dated the 10th and 15th January 1924. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal [Clouston & Co., Ltd. v. Corry (6)]. Therefore one must have regard to the agreement forming the basis of the contract of employment and consider the surrounding circumstances, and if the misconduct is inconsistent with the express or implied conditions of service, or incompatible with the due and faithful discharge of the servant's duty to his master [Pearce v. Foster (7)], the dismissal will be justified.

One of the most serious charges against the Plaintiff is his removal of documents and papers. He had some letters and letter files in his houses in the ordinary course of business before the 13th August. There is no harm in that. On Sunday he removed a number of securities and papers from the safe, and he also removed the two cheque books and the letters of appointment of Messrs. Warden and Watson, two former assistants. Some of these, with the cash, he made over to the bank or returned to the directors at the subsequent meetings, and so far he was reasonably seeking to protect himself against possible machinations of his partner, or protecting the Company's interests, I should not impute misconduct to him. But he does admit in cross-examination that he kept some letters of Lloyd's under-writers, belonging to the Company, for the purpose of his case; and, further on, that there are quite a number of the Company's papers which were taken away by him (vide Ex. 9) and when asked in evidence why did not return them, though letters were written in that behalf in the following September, October and November, he replied it was because he thought them necessary for his own protection, and the protection of his firm's interests. He says that he removed everything that he thought might be of use to him.

Next it is said that it was misconduct for the Plaintiff to re-appoint Maclean to the service of the Company. In pursuance of the scheme for retrenchment, Maclean's employment had been terminated on the 28th July. The Plaintiff took him to the office on 14th August, not, as he says definitely re-appointing him, but in case he could be of help and with the prospect of getting the directors later on to consent to re-appoint him. It was to him in company with Warden that the Plaintiff committed the task of checking the contents of the cash-book. The minutes of the directors' meeting on the 14th contain the record of a statement made by the Plaintiff that he had re-appointed Maclean to assist him in the working of the Company. That note the Plaintiff suggests is wrong. I am not prepared to hold that in the position of affairs that existed between the Plaintiff and second Defendant the calling in of Maclean on that occasion should be characterised as misconduct. I do not think it was a case of a deliberate attempt on the part of the Plaintiff to resume the services of a dismissed servant of the Company in defiance of his employers.

Next there is the question of the travelling expenses charged up against the Company for his expenses in Europe between September 1921 and March 1922. There was no formal sanction taken from the directors for this leave. One of the purposes of his going home was to use his endeavours to settle a claim in connection with a steamer on behalf of Rai Bahadur Sukhlal Karnani upon terms of Rs. 7,500 paid down and 10 per cent. of any amount recovered. The negotiations were in fact a failure. So far as the Company's business was concerned the Plaintiff had the idea of making arrangements in the matter of re-insurance facilities with Lloyd's under-writers. Before leaving for Europe the Plaintiff drew Rs. 10,000 and subsequently other amounts making about Rs. 16,000 in all. The amount was debited against the Company in the draft accounts, and exception was taken to it by the auditors, as no sanction had been taken from the directors. Ultimately the auditors allowed it to be included in the accounts as a separate item, so that the directors and share-holders could deal with it as they liked. It was, however, reduced to Rs. 10,000, and subsequently allowed by the directors for Rs. 5,000 only. However much the Plaintiff's conduct may be open to comment, and I consider it is open to comment, the matter was finally settled by allowing him the Rs. 5,000, and I do not think it can be brought up again now as misconduct justifying the directors' action in August. At the same time it is a circumstance which might reasonably influence their attitude at that time, taken in conjunction with the other circumstances. Similarly I look in the same light upon an item of freight and duty on a motor car of the Plaintiff's wife debited against the Company (Ex. 33) amounting to some Rs. 3,000. The auditors refused to pass this, and the amount was repaid by the Plaintiff. When this fact was brought to the notice of the directors in August it was not calculated to inspire them with confidence in the Plaintiff. Ex. 12, a letter of 13th June, does not impress me very favourably even if it represents a method by which the amount might become reasonably chargeable to the Company.

Then there is the complaint about the transfer of certain securities belonging to the Company. When the Plaintiff went to England in 1921 he intended to make certain arrangements, in connection with the Company's business, with Lloyd's under-writers. He instructed Warden to transfer a batch of securities from the Imperial Bank of India in Calcutta to the branch in London. This was done and they were transferred "through a mistake of the bank," as the Plaintiff puts it, into his personal account. No sanction of the directors was taken to the transfer at all. I by no means accept the statement that the mistake was the bank's; if it was, it was at any rate accepted without demur by the Plaintiff, and the interest on the securities was actually paid into his account. The bank later on wrote explaining that only the Plaintiff could overdraw against them and not the Company, and it required the personal request of the Plaintiff for the bank to retransfer them into the Company's name. Ultimately the matter was cleared up and the transfer made. I do not think any dishonest purpose is imputable to the Plaintiff with reference to his dealing with these securities, but again I think his conduct was undoubtedly open to comment, and would be a matter for the directors to consider along with the other matters placed before them.

Another item of alleged misconduct is as follows. Mr. Chari was a director of the Defendant Company and also a member of Chari & Co., Managing Agents of the Agra Mills. An insurance proposal was made by Mr. Chari on behalf of the Mills as he wanted to place the business with or through the Company. In point of fact the insurance was placed not by the Company, but by the Plaintiff himself, and he drew the commission, a considerable amount, on what he effected. According to the Plaintiff this situation arose because the insurance would have to be placed with tariff Companies (otherwise there might be difficulties with the banks who would not accept non-tariff policies as security against advances), and as tariff Companies will have no dealing with non-tariff Companies in such matters, the only way out of it was to place it personally, to which he says Mr. Chari agreed. The result was that Mr. Chari's intention of benefiting the Company failed. It is said that this commission, whatever it amounted to, should have been made over to the Company by the Plaintiff, and this was one of the items brought up against the Plaintiff at the directors' meeting in August. I am not prepared to hold that this incident amounted to misconduct justifying dismissal, because, among other things, Mr. Chari has not been called to contradict the Plaintiff's statement.

These are the main matters which have been argued before me as constituting misconduct. There are others of lesser importance with which I need not specifically deal. Upon the whole I am of opinion that in the circumstances the individual instances that have been alleged would not be sufficient to constitute misconduct in itself justifying dismissal. But they disclose a course of conduct which might well give pause to a director of the Company and they are important to be borne in mind in so far as they were in the knowledge of the directors (like the question of travelling allowance) or were brought to their knowledge in August, because, apart from the question of the relations existing between the partners at that time, they do also bear materially upon the question how far the directors were justified in the action which they took

GUS ALEXANDER MACKENZIE v. HIMALAYA ASSURANCE Co., LTD.

In the partnership suit, there must be a decree. The partnership was not in law dissolved by the notice of dissolution and the events of the 13th August and following days. Sec. 254 of the Indian Contract Act lays down when a partnership may be dissolved by the Court at the suit of a partner, and that section in its cls. (5) and (6) is in my opinion wide enough to cover a case such as the present where there has been a complete destruction of mutual confidence, and it is impracticable to continue the partnership business with advantage to the partners, or they could no longer perform their duties as laid down in sec. 257 of the Indian Contract Act. In Harrison v. Tennant (8) that principle was acted upon, and the partnership was dissolved; and Lord Cairns, L. C., in Atwood v. Maude (9), said: "It is evident, however, that in every partnership . . . such a state of feeling may arise and exist between the partners as to render it impossible that the partnership can continue with advantage to either. That state of things may be occasioned by the fault of either or both of the partners; but when it is admitted that this state of feeling does exist, it becomes immaterial by whom the bill is first filed."

There will be the usual decree for dissolution and accounts and the usual order for costs in a partnership action.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff Mr. Gus Alexander Mackenzie against the decision of my learned brother Mr. Justice Pearson which was delivered on the 17th of April 1924.

The Plaintiff sued to recover a large sum of money as damages from the Himalaya Assurance Co., Ltd., for the alleged breach of an agreement by which the Plaintiff and the second Defendant, Rajabally, were appointed managing agents of the Company.

The second Defendant was joined as a party to the suit, because it was alleged that the Plaintiff had requested Rajabally to join as a Plaintiff in the suit but Rajabally had declined so to do. Therefore the Plaintiff had joined him as a Defendant.

The Plaintiff and Rajabally were in partnership. There were two agreements which dealt with the matter of partnership. The first was dated the 24th of September 1919 and the second one was dated the 29th of May 1920. In the interval, the Company had been registered on the 27th of October 1919 and the agreement, dated the 30th December 1919, between the Defendant Company and the firm of Mackenzie and Rajabally, had been entered into. By the agreement the firm of Mackenzie and Rajabally were appointed managing agents of the Company for a period of at least 35 years. The agreement contains provisions about remuneration which are not material for the purpose of this appeal: cl. 5 provides that "the managing agents shall, subject to the supervision and control of the directors, manage, conduct and carry on the business of the Company both at the head office and at all branches and agencies wheresoever situated" and then it provides that they "shall have and pos-possess all powers, authorities and discretions necessary for or incidental thereto, and, without in any way limiting or restricting the general powers hereby conferred upon them, the managing agents shall in particular possess and enjoy the following powers."

Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Rajabally were also appointed directors of the Company.

The suit, as I have already said, was brought on the ground of an alleged wrongful breach of the managing agency agreement.

In the plaint there was an allegation in para. 7 that "at some time during the first half of the year 1922 the directors (other than the Plaintiff) decided to oust the Plaintiff from the said managing agency and to appoint the Defendant Rajabally sole managing agent and also decided to dismiss all the European staff from the service of the Company and in furtherance of such designs in concert and collusion with each other they carried out the following plan of action: On the 12th of August 1922 the Defendant Rajabally wrote and addressed a letter to the Plaintiff suggesting that the latter should retire from the said partnership but the Plaintiff declined to do so."

It is material to notice that in the letter of the 12th of August, amongst other things, Rajabally cancelled the power-of-attorney which he had given to the Plaintiff whereby the Plaintiff was conducting the affairs of the Assurance Company and those of the firm of Mackenzie and Rajabally.

The plaint further alleged that "on the 14th August 1922 the Defendant Rajabally caused his attorney K. B. Ghose to address a letter to the Plaintiff purporting to give the latter notice that the partnership would be dissolved as from that date and informing the Plaintiff that in default of his consenting to that course within 24 hours the said Rajabally would file a suit for dissolution of the firm." It then alleged that the directors had passed a resolution on the same day whereby Rajabally was appointed the managing agent of the Company.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the Plaintiff had not proved that Rajabally was acting in concert and collusion with the directors as alleged in the plaint: and, he also came to the conclusion, shortly stated, that such a situation had arisen on the morning of the 14th of August 1922 between Rajabally on the one hand and Mackenzie on the other that the directors were justified in putting an end to the agency agreement.

The position seems to me to be as follows: The agreement between the Company on the one hand and the Plaintiff and Rajabally on the other was admitted. There was no doubt that that agreement was put an end to by the directors of the Company.

The onus, therefore, was on the Company to justify the action which the directors took in terminating the agreement. The agreement was alleged to have been terminated because of the deadlock which had been created by the action of the members of the partnership. It would then be for the Plaintiff to prove, if he could, that the situation which undoubtedly existed on the morning of the 14th of August 1922 had been brought about or engineered by the directors or that they had been parties to the scheme which it is alleged Rajabally had conceived, and which, in fact, he carried out.

I am of opinion that the learned Judge's decision, that the Plaintiff had not proved that Rajabally was acting in concert with the directors of the Company in bringing about the situation which existed on the 14th of August 1922, was correct.

The learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant in his argument (which, if I may say so, was a very able argument) placed great reliance on the letter of the 12th of August 1922 which was written by Rajabally to the Plaintiff. He urged that only one inference could be drawn from the terms of that letter, and that was that Mr. Rajabally had made up his mind to bring the partnership to an end in one way or another, and that for the purpose of doing so he had beforehand consulted the directors and had obtained their consent to that course.

The learned Counsel made some severe criticisms upon the evidence of Rajabally; and, argued with much insistence that the explanation which Mr. Rajabally had given for the writing of that letter was one which should not be accepted.
